

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

I. DEFINITION.—The separate property of a married woman is that of which she has the exclusive control, independent of her husband, and of which she may dispose as she pleases.¹

The separate property of married women may be classified into the equitable and the statutory; the former being that recognized by the courts of equity irrespective of statutes;² the lat-

1. Alston v. Rowles, 13 Fla. 126; Petty v. Malier, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 199; Bowen v. Seabee, 2 Bush (Ky.) 115.

2. Stewart's Husband & Wife, § 197; Clark v. Windham, 12 Ala. 800; 2 Perry Trusts, § 646.

Professor Minor says on this subject: "The whole doctrine of the separate estate of a married woman is the creature of equity, and sets at naught all or most of the principles of the common law touching the marital relation, and also touching property generally. Thus, a wife may be enabled to dispose of her separate estate as freely, and with less solemnity than a feme sole, to charge it merely by implication, as a feme sole cannot do, and may also be restrained from conveying or charging it at all, a restraint adverse to one of the most settled doctrines of the general law of property. In respect to the power of alienation of a wife's separate estate, a distinction is made between real and personal property. As to personal property, the jus disponendi is incident to it in the fullest manner. The wife may dispose of it absolutely at her pleasure, by deed or will, as if she were a feme sole; unless the instrument which creates the estate and vests it in her shall impose restrictions, and then these restrictions will constitute the law of the case. In respect to real property her power of disposition is more circumscribed. If she is not in terms allowed, by the instrument which clothes her with the separate estate, to alien it in some designated way, she can do so only by will duly executed, or by deed executed with the formalities prescribed for married women. And it seems that, though permitted to alien otherwise than in pursuance of the statute, she is not thereby precluded from adopting the statutory mode. The rents and profits of her separate real estate constitute personalty, and may be disposed of accordingly, unless invested in lands. Where the wife has the power of disposition, she may bestow her separate property as well on her husband as on a stranger, and that not by giving it to a third person to give to him, but by conveyance directly to himself (unless where she conveys under the statute). But a court of equity will not give sanction or effect to a conveyance to the husband without first subjecting the wife to a privy examination, and adopting such other precaution as shall seem needful to ascertain her freedom of action." 2 Minor's Inst. 576.

It is said in 1 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 52: "Still another most remarkable illustration of the extent and manner in which the court of chancery invaded the rules and contradicted the policy of the common law was exhibited by its doctrine concerning the separate estate of married women, and their power to deal therewith as though they were unmarried. Nothing was more diametrically opposed to the principles of the ancient common law than this capacity to be a separate proprietor conferred upon the wife: and no equitable doctrine perhaps interfered with a greater number of legal rules concerning the status of marriage, and the proprietary rights of the husband which it created." In a note to the foregoing statement, Professor Pomeroy further cites Fleta (b. iii, ch. 3) as expressly stating the doctrine that conveyance to a stranger for the benefit of a married woman is void as being against the policy of the law.

In 2 Story Eq. Jur., § 1378, it is said: "It is well known that the strict rules of the old common law would not permit the wife to take or enjoy any real or personal estate separate from or independent of her husband. And although these rules have been in some degree relaxed and modified in modern times, yet they have still a very comprehensive influence and operation in courts of law. (Citing Coomes v. Elling, 3 Atk. 679; 2 Roper on Husband and Wife, ch. 18, p. 151; Agar v. Blethyn, 1 Tyrw. & Grang. 160.) On the other hand courts of equity have for a great length of time admitted the doctrine that a married woman is cater that recognized and created by those statutes which limit the common-law rights of the husband in his wife's property, and pable of taking real and personal estate to her own separate and exclusive use, and that she has also an incidental power to dispose of it. (Citing 1 Fonbl. Eq. b. 1, ch. 2, § 6, note (n); 2 Roper on Husb. and Wife, ch. 18, pp. 151 to 266.)"

Wife's Paraphernalia.—See PARAPHERNALIA, vol. 17, p. 312; Richardson v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 85 Ala. 559. The wearing apparel purchased by a married woman after her marriage, with the husband's money or upon his credit, belongs to him as against her creditors. Smith v. Abear, 87 Mich. 62.

Paraphernal Property.—See PARAPHERNAL, vol. 17, p. 312. In Louisiana a wife may buy property for cash with her paraphernal funds, and if the income from her paraphernal property is sufficient to meet the accruing payments, may buy on credit, and the property thus bought is paraphernal. Miller v. Handy, 33 La. Ann. 160. And where a husband has been a party to such purchase, and was informed of the terms of the contract at the time, he cannot afterwards avoid its effect in a contest with her heirs as to the ownership of the property. Succession of Bellande, 42 La. Ann. 241. A wife may rebut the presumption that property bought by her is community property by showing that it was purchased with her paraphernal funds, which were administered by her separately and apart from her husband. Stauffer v. Morgan, 39 La. Ann. 632. And this she may prove by parole evidence. Succession of Pinard, 30 La. Ann. 167.

A wife may employ her husband as her agent in the management of her paraphernal property, and the proceeds of such management belong to her and not to the community. Miller v. Handy, 33 La. Ann. 160; but it cannot be pledged as security for debts of the husband, or of the community. Putnam v. New York L. Ins. Co., 42 La. Ann. 739. A sale of a wife's paraphernal immovables will not be set aside, on the ground that a part of the purchase money went to pay debts of the husband. Morrow v. Goudchaux, 41 La. Ann. 711. And a married woman was allowed to bind legally her paraphernal property in order to liberate her husband from jail, and was not allowed to deny her obligation on the ground of marital influence and coercion, where she had bound the property by contracting with third persons in good faith. Jaffa v. Myers, 33 La. Ann. 406.

Pin Money.—See HUSBAND AND WIFE, vol. 9, p. 847. Pin money is a provision made by the husband, either in pursuance of a marriage contract or by a gift, for the purpose of supplying the wife with articles of dress, and with pocket money, in order to prevent the annoyance of a constant recourse to him with petty demands for personal expenditures. It may consist of gifts of money made from time to time, or of a specific periodical allowance, or of the savings and profits accruing from her domestic management. It must not be to the prejudice of the husband's creditors; and the wife acquires an unimpeachable right of property therein subject to two qualifications. First, it is bestowed for the specific purpose of decking her person for the credit of the common household, and a husband has a certain interest in it as well as the wife, and may demand, or constrain, the expenditure to be made accordingly; second, even though stipulated for by a marriage settlement, she cannot call upon her husband to pay any arrears if he has meanwhile provided for her current wants; nor in any event beyond the arrears of a single year. Nor, it seems, can her personal representative demand any arrears at all, for the money is designed to dress and adorn the wife during the year and not for the accumulation of the fund. 1 Minor's Inst. 321; citing 2 Bright's Husb. & W. 288, et seq.; 2 Story's Eq. § 1375, 1375a, citing Jodrell v. Jodrell, 9 Beav. 45; Slanning v. Style, 3 P. Wms. 337; Acton v. Acton, 1 Ves. 267; Peacock v. Monk, 2 Ves. 190; Fowler v. Fowler, 3 P. Wms. 355; Ball v. Coutts, 1 Ves. & B. 305; Howard v. Digby, 8 Bligh. N. R. 224, et seq.; and see Stanway v. Styles, 2 Eq. Abr. 246; Mangey v. Hungerford, 2 Eq. Abr. 156.

Pin money has been recognized in Maryland. Miller v. Williamson, 5 Md. 219; otherwise in North Carolina. McKinnon v. McDonald, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 6; 72 Am. Dec. 574; Stewart's Husb. & W., § 188.

which enlarge the rights of the wife.¹ The two classes of property may exist together.²

II. EQUITABLE SEPARATE PROPERTY—1. Creation of—a. HOW CREATED.—An equitable separate estate may be created in a married woman by a written instrument, or even orally in the case of personalty; it may be by deed or by will, in trust or direct, ante-nuptial or post-nuptial.³

b. WORDS NECESSARY TO CREATE.—Technical words are not required. It is necessary only that the terms of the settlement show that the settlor intended the husband should have no marital rights in the property in question. If no such intent appears, there is created but an ordinary trust for a married woman.⁴

1. Stewart's Husband & Wife, § 217; Dow v. Gould, etc., Silver Min. Co., 31 Cal. 631. See, for a collation of these statutes, Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, § 6420, et seq.

Lands in Texas belonging to a married woman are termed in that State her "separate property," and she has in equity all the power to dispose of them which could be given to her by the amplest deed of settlement. Slaughter v. Glenn, 98 U. S. 242.

2. Musson v. Trigg, 51 Miss. 183.

The Alabama Code, 1886, §§ 2351, et seq., establishes an entirely new system of laws relating to the property of married women, and abrogates the distinction between the equitable and statutory separate estates, except in cases where the property is conveyed to an active trustee, and, therefore, with that exception, equitable separate estates are now statutory in Alabama. Rooney v. Michael, 84 Ala. 585.

3. Morrison v. Thistle, 67 Mo. 596; Holthaus v. Hornbostle, 60 Mo. 439; Porter v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 410; Chew v. Beall, 13 Md. 348; George v. Spencer, 2 Md. Ch. 353; Jackson v. McAliley, 1 Speers Eq. (S. Car.) 303; 40 Am. Dec. 620; Paul v. Leavitt, 53 Mo. 595; Wood v. Wood, 83 N. Y. 575, affirming 18 Hun (N. Y.) 350; and see Gillespie v. Burleson, 28 Ala. 551; Walton v. Broadbudd, 6 Bush (Ky.) 328; Pond v. Skeen, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 126; Lee v. Prieaux, 3 Bro. C. C. 381; Fears v. Brooks, 12 Ga. 195.

No Trustee Necessary.—A conveyance may be to the wife direct, no trustee being necessary; equity never suffering a trust to fail for want of a trustee. It has even been held unnecessary to make the settlement in the form of a trust. The husband will be deemed to hold as trustee for his wife and to be accountable to her for the rents and profits as any other trustee would be. Bennet v. Davis, 2 P. Wms. 316; Izod v. Lamb, 1 C. & J. 35; Slanning v. Style, 3 P. Wms. 337; *Lucas v. The words designed to create a separate estate for a married woman need not appear in the granting clause or in the habendum clause of the deed. Morrison v. Thistle, 67 Mo. 596.

The release of her dower is a good consideration for a conveyance to her separate use. Skyes v. Chadwick, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 141. A conveyance by a husband during the marriage, in consideration of love and affection, in trust for the use of his wife during life, remainder to his children, does not give her the life estate, "in consideration or by reason of the marriage." Phillips v. Phillips, 9 Bush (Ky.) 183.

Phrases Held Insufficient in Themselves to Create a Separate Estate.—The following phrases by themselves have been held not to have the effect, in a settlement on a married woman, of excluding the husband's rights:

Where the settlement proceeds from the husband it is generally to be construed as operating to her separate use, though no such words are used as would be necessary to create a separate estate in a conveyance by a stranger; otherwise the conveyance would be without effect.¹

c. CONSTRUCTION OF INSTRUMENT CREATING.—The intention is to be gathered from the "four corners of the instrument," and in ascertaining it, a liberal construction is to be adopted; and the court is not confined to the deed itself, but may resort to the marriage contract, if there is one.²

Elrod*, 38 Ala. 17; Harris v. Harbeson, 9 Bush (Ky.) 397; Fears v. Brooks, 12 Ga. 195; Whitten v. Whitten, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 193; Tennent v. Stoney, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 22; 44 Am. Dec. 213; 1 Min. Inst. 317.

1. 1 Minor's Inst. 318; Whitten v. Whitten, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 191; Peters v. Clements, 46 Tex. 114; Garland v. Pamplin, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 314; Teague v. Downes, 69 N. Car. 280; Deming v. Williams, 26 Conn. 226; 68 Am. Dec. 386; Underhill v. Morgan, 33 Conn. 105; Riley v. Riley, 25 Conn. 153; Williams v. King, 43 Conn. 569; Darcy v. Ryan, 44 Conn. 518; McMillan v. Peacock, 57 Ala. 127; Smith v. Seiberling, 35 Fed. Rep. 677; Harris v. Harris, 71 Ala. 536.

In Whitten v. Whitten, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 191, the court, by Fletcher, J., said: "The doctrine that a gift to the wife is a gift to the husband cannot apply where the husband himself makes a gift or grant to the wife, which surely cannot be taken as a gift or grant to himself. . . . And where the husband himself makes a gift or grant to the wife, the intention to relinquish his own rights in favor of the wife, and thus to give her a separate property or interest, is necessarily and most clearly and unequivocally manifested and declared."

And see Harris v. Harbeson, 9 Bush (Ky.) 397, where a husband showed, by clear and explicit acts, an intention to give his wife the rents and profits of her land, by having her rents kept separate from his own, and, when sold, paying the proceeds to her, and, when loaning her moneys, by taking notes payable to her. The acts showed not only an intention to give them to his wife, but constituted an executed gift, which a court of equity would uphold and enforce as against him after her death. Gill v. Woods, 81 Ill. 64; 25 Am. Rep. 264.

A promissory note of a third person, given by the husband to the wife during coverture, becomes a part of her equitable, and not her statutory, estate, and any conveyance of property by him to her directly during coverture, except in compensation or substitution for other property which belongs to her statutory estate, creates in her an equitable estate. Hamaker v. Hamaker, 88 Ala. 431.

Where a married woman claims her earnings as her equitable separate estate, by way of gift from her husband, it will not be sustained, unless it is made clear that the husband intended to divest himself of all interest in such earnings, and to set them apart to the wife. Bolman v. Overall, 86 Ala. 168.

2. Morrison v. Thistle, 67 Mo. 596; Porter v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 410; Klenke v. Koeltze, 75 Mo. 239.

Where a fund is given to trustees to pay to a married woman "the rents, dividends, and income thereof annually," the increase, as it becomes payable, is not to be regarded as estate newly acquired, and therefore the marital rights of the husband, as to such income, are not affected by an act which provides that all property thereafter acquired by any married woman shall be held by her to her sole and separate use. Vail v. Vail, 49 Conn. 52; citing Sterns v. Weather, 30 Ala. 712; but see Nelson v. Hollins, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 553.

In a settlement of property by a husband on his wife, free from all his liabilities, an exception of such incumbrances as the two together shall request the trustee to make, is not repugnant to the grant, but is merely a qualification thereof. Ætna Ins. Co. v. Brodinax, 48 Fed. Rep. 892.

Decisions Allowing a Separate Estate.—Where land was devised to a trustee to be used for the maintenance of a devisor's son, and any family that he might thereafter have, on the subsequent marriage of the son his wife was held to be entitled to a maintenance out of the profits of the lands, as her equitable separate estate. Jones v. Reese, 65 Ala. 134. And where the earnings of the wife, gifts from her friends, or her separate estate, is invested in land, it will be held to be her separate estate, even though the husband takes the title in his own name. Martin v. Colburn, 88 Mo. 229; Cox v. Cox, 91 Mo. 71; Haden v. Ivey, 51 Ala. 381; Whitehead v. Whitehead, 64 N. Car. 538; Grantham v. Grantham, 34 S. Car. 504. Where her property is sold and a security taken for the purchase money in the husband's name, it is still the wife's, and she may file a bill in chancery by her next friend to enforce the lien, if the security is not paid. Sampley v. Watson, 43 Ala. 377; and if he has entered land in his own name with money of his wife's separate estate, because of a regulation of the land office, he is bound, although in embarrassed circumstances, to convey the land to a trustee for her benefit. Payne v. Twyman, 68 Mo. 339.

A recital in a deed that it is the separate property of the wife, removes any presumption that it is community property, and vests the title according to the terms of the deed. McCutchen v. Purinton (Tex. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 710.

A verbal antenuptial contract by a woman that she shall own and control, as separate estate, the property she then has, will be valid, and though her husband contributes his services as carpenter and builder in erecting a house upon land purchased by her, it cannot be subjected to his debts. Turner v. Short (Ky. 1888), 7 S. W. Rep. 391.

If, in a sealed instrument, the husband acknowledges the receipt of money as his wife's share of her parent's estate and binds himself to return it to her when she so desires, it shows a sufficient intent to create a separate estate in the wife, and the marital rights of the husband do not attach. Wadsworthville Poor School v. Bryson, 34 S. Car. 401. Where she is dissatisfied with his investment of her money in land, and he promises to pay her the value of the property, her executors may claim the value of the same against his estate on his failure to do so. In re Lazarus' Estate (Pa. 1892), 23 Atl. Rep. 372.

Where a married woman mingles with the profits of a boarding house run by her, a monthly allowance from her husband, and it is not apparent whether the furniture of the house is purchased with her money or that furnished by the husband, it will be deemed to be her separate property. Diefendorff v. Hopkins (Cal. 1891), 28 Pac. Rep. 265. A court of equity can settle on her, her share in the personality of her father's estate, in the hands of an administrator, and the creditors of her insolvent husband cannot have the same applied to the payment of their claims. Bethel v. Smith, 83 Ky. 84.

Where the plaintiff's husband drove a number of cows at night from her premises, and the next day they were found in defendant's possession, he claiming to have purchased them from her husband and refusing to return them, and the evidence showed that the plaintiff had purchased the cows with her own funds; that feed bought for them on credit was charged to her; that she had supported the family, and that the owner of the premises she occupied had given her permission to live there, it was sufficient to sustain the finding of a referee, in an action of trover for the cows, that they were hers. Pangburn v. Crouner (Supreme Ct.), 17 N. Y. Supp. 301.

If a husband allows his wife, during his lifetime, to hold a note and use the proceeds as her own property, it must be considered to have been her separate

2. Power of Disposition.—In a few States it is held that a married woman has no power over her separate estate but such as is given her by the instrument creating it;¹ but the English rule and the one adopted in a majority of the States is, that, estate. Miller v. Eram, 37 Wis. 142. And if he recognizes a trust, made for her benefit by an investment of her share in an estate during his absence, it will be considered her separate estate. Louisville Bank v. Gray, 84 Ky. 565. But where, by an ante-nuptial parol contract, he agrees, in consideration of the marriage, that she shall hold all her property then owned or thereafter acquired, as her separate estate, but vesting in her no power of disposition, she takes from him the use and control thereof during life, but at her death bank stock owned by her goes to him. Brown v. Brown (Ky. 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 105.

Decisions Denying a Separate Estate.—A wife cannot claim as her separate estate property of her husband on which she has erected a dwelling, under an agreement with him for its conveyance to her, so as to exclude the claims of her husband's creditors. Johnston v. Johnston (Ky. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 526; nor is alimony awarded to a wife by the decree of divorce her separate estate. Stevenson v. Stevenson, 34 Hun (N.Y.) 157, distinguished, Romaine v. Chauncey (Supreme Ct.), 15 N. Y. Supp. 198; nor lands, in the absence of recitals in the deed sufficient to create a separate estate, conveyed to the wife by the husband with the intent to shield it from his creditors. Gaston v. Wright (Tex. 1892), 18 S. W. Rep. 576.

An ante-nuptial contract entered into in France, excluding property there owned by the wife from the community property, does not, in the absence of an agreement that the real estate of the wife shall be her sole estate free from the control of the husband, secure to the wife as separate estate, real estate owned by her at that time in Missouri. Richardson v. De Giverville, 107 Mo. 422.

It has been held in Pennsylvania that where a woman, at the date of a will devising property to her, is neither married nor contemplating marriage, she will not take a separate estate therein, although she was married at the death of the testator, and the devise vests in her absolutely. Neale's Appeal, 104 Pa. St. 214; followed in In re

Quinn's Estate (Pa. 1891), 22 Atl. Rep. 965. And also that a wife cannot recover against the execution creditors of her husband, where the property seized was in possession of the husband, unless she shows that the property was paid for out of her separate estate. Bolinger v. Gallagher (Pa. 1891), 22 Atl. Rep. 815.

Evidence.—In an action by a wife for the conversion of property claimed by her, she may show receipts for rent given to her. Hill v. Fouse (Neb. 1891), 49 N. W. Rep. 760. Where a husband listed for taxation and mortgaged as his own certain of the stock on a farm cultivated by himself and wife, such stock being claimed by the wife as hers, though used indiscriminately for the purpose of cultivation, it was held not to be evidence against the wife on the question of title, unless authorized or known and acquiesced in by her. Miller v. Lathrop (Minn. 1892), 52 N. W. Rep. 274.

There is no error in permitting the wife of the plaintiff to testify as to services rendered by her, the earnings of the wife being the property of the husband, unless she carries on a separate business or works for others on her own account. Tipton Co. v. Brown (Ind. 1892), 30 N. E. Rep. 925.

The presumption that property bought by a wife with the money of her husband was intended as a settlement for her, may be rebutted by proof that it was understood between them that the property should be his, or that she took the title thereof without his knowledge or consent. Parker v. Newitt, 18 Oregon 274.

Where a wife owned lands lying in another State, never during her lifetime reduced into possession by the husband, the court of Vermont treated moneys received for rent of the lands as assets of her estate, without requiring proof that she might have held the income thereof as her own, by the laws of the State wherein the land lay. Gill v. Cook, 42 Vt. 140.

a. AS TO PERSONAL PROPERTY or the produce of lands, she may dispose of it freely, by will or otherwise, precisely as if she were feme sole, save only when it is otherwise provided by the instrument whence she derives the estate;¹ but,

b. AS TO REAL PROPERTY, a more rigorous doctrine prevails. If not expressly allowed to dispose of it in some designated way,

In Metcalf v. Cook, 2 R. I. 355, it was held that a married woman had no power to charge her separate estate unless it was given her in the instrument creating the trust. But in the later case of Ives v. Harris, 7 R. I. 413, the court said that without words in the instrument restraining her "it is not to be doubted that the equitable estate of a married woman, in real property settled to her sole, and separate use, is as alienable by her—she and her husband joining in a deed executed in solemn form under the statute—as her legal estate in real property."

- The Kentucky statute, allowing a married woman to dispose by will "of any estate secured to her separate use by deed or devise, or in the exercise of a written power," does not allow her to dispose of land, unless the deed itself creates in her a separate estate. And where the husband, after her death, executes a writing relinquishing all his interest, the same as though it had been deeded to her separate use, and the will had been made in pursuance of a written power, and files it at the probate, it does not validate the will where the rights of heirs have already vested under the statutes of descent. Craine v. Edwards (Ky. 1891), 17 S. W. Rep. 211. Nor does a power to "use, sell, exchange, reinvest or otherwise dispose of as she may think proper," give her such special power to will. Harris v. Harbeson, 9 Bush (Ky.) 397.
- Her separate property may be conveyed by order of court. Terrell v. Spence, 5 Bush (Ky.) 637. Her signature to the application for the sale, and to the deed, is sufficient evidence of her assent. Moseley v. Hankinson, 25 S. Car. 519. Or her separate property may be conveyed under a power of attorney to her husband. Christmas v. Hahn (Ky. 1888), 9 S. W. Rep. 279; and she may dispose of it to secure the payment of his debts. Collins v. Wassell, 34 Ark. 17; Gillespie v. Simpson (Ark. 1892), 18 S. W. Rep. 1050. She will be bound by covenants contained in her deeds. Barlow v. Delaney, 40 Fed. Rep. 97; Yerkes v. Hadley, 5 Dak. 324. ment creating the trust provides that it may be disposed of by one mode, other modes are generally excluded.¹

A number of cases support the opposite doctrine, that a power of disposition specifically pointed out does not preclude the adoption of any other mode of disposition, unless there are negative words restraining the exercise of the power to the very mode pointed out. On an examination of these cases it will be found that an absolute estate was granted the wife, the instrument specifying that it should be conveyed by deed, in which the husband or trustee joins, or by will, and the question arose on her power to charge it with her debts. Jaques v. Methodist Episcopal Church, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 549; 8 Am. Dec. 447; Kimm v. Weippert, 46 Mo. 532; 2 Am. Rep. 541; Vizonneau v. Pegram, 2 Leigh (Va.) 183; West v. West, 3 Rand. Restraint on Alienation and Anticipation.—To restrain a married woman's power of alienation and anticipation of the profits of her separate estate, there must be an expressed restraint in the instrument creating it. It is not to be implied from her being authorized to dispose of the property in an ordinary manner, and a specific mode of disposition pointed out by the instrument does not necessarily exclude any other mode. Jaques v. Methodist Episcopal Church, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 548; 8 Am. Dec. 447; Radford v. Carwile, 13 W. Va. 572; Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 108; Hooks v. Brown, 62 Ala. 258; *Wilburn v. As in creating the separate estate, it is not necessary that the settlement contain technical words, but only that the settler's intent to prevent anticipation and alienation clearly appear. Fears v. Brooks, 12 Ga. 195; Greensboro Bank v. Chambers, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 202; 32 Am. Rep. 661. The restraint may be by implication only, as where powers inconsistent with her powers of alienation are given to the trustees. Gully v. Hull, 31 Miss. 20.

Provisions that the property shall be "for her sole and separate use," or "pay to her from time to time on her receipt or personal appearance," or "exempt from her husband's debts," have been held not to be restraints upon the wife's powers of anticipation and control. Pybus v. Smith, 3 Bro. C. C. 340; 1 Ves. Jr. 189; Hulme v. Tenent, 1 Bro. C. C. 16; Scott v. Davis, 4 M. & C. 87; Sturgis v. Corp, 13 Ves. 190; Browne v. Like, 14 Ves. 302; *Parker v. But it is a restraint where the deed provides that it is to be "inalienable," or "unassignable," or that "she shall not sell, mortgage, charge, or incumber," or that she is to have it "without power of anticipation." Rennie v. Ritchie, 12 C. & F. 204; D'Oechsner v. Scott, 24 Beav. 239; Spring v. Pride, 10 Jur. N. S. 646; Bagget v. Neux, 1 Collyer C. C. 138; Brown v. Bamford, 11 Sim. 131; Cooper v. Macdonald, L. R., 7 Ch. 288.

The restraint upon anticipation operates during a second or subsequent coverture, unless destroyed by the act of the woman while discovered. Robert v. West, 15 Ga. 122; Staggers v. Mat-

3. Power to Charge.—As a corollary to the above proposition, it is the settled doctrine in England that a married woman may charge her separate estate in equity, even by implication, with her debts, contracts and engagements. By entering into such engagements she must have meant to effect something, and as she cannot have expected to charge her person, she could have had no other design than to subject to the fulfillment of her engagements so much of her separate estate as is subject to her absolute disposal as if she were a feme sole.¹ And this is the general rule in thews, 13 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 142; Nix v. Bradley, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 43; Beaufort v. Collier, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 487; Brown v. Foote, 2 Tenn. Ch. 255; 44 Am. Dec. 321. In Pennsylvania and a few other States it only operates during the single marriage for which the separate use was originally created. Hammersley v. Smith, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 126; Kuhn v. Newman, 26 Pa. St. 227; Dubs v. Dubs, 31 Pa. St. 149; Freyvogle v. Hughes, 56 Pa. St. 228; Hepburn's Appeal, 65 Pa. St. 468; Bush's Appeal, 33 Pa. St. 85; McKee v. McKinley, 33 Pa. St. 92; Lindsay v. Harrison, 8 Ark. 302; Miller v. Bingham, 1 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 423; 36 Am. Dec. 58; Apple v. Allen, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 120; Duke v. Duke, 81 Ky. 308.

The doctrine of the wife's separate estate is neatly summed up by Lord Chancellor Cottenham in Tullett v. Armstrong, 4 M. & C. 405: "When this court," says he, "first established the separate estate, it violated the (existing) laws of property as between husband and wife; but it was thought beneficial, and it prevailed. It being once settled that a wife might enjoy separate estate as a feme sole, the laws of property attached to this new estate; and it was found, as part of such law, that the power of alienation belonged to the wife, and was destructive of the security intended for it. Equity again interfered, and by another violation of the laws of property supported the validity of the prohibition against alienation. In the case now under consideration, if the after-taken husband be permitted to interfere with the property given or settled before the marriage to the separate use of the wife, much of the benefit and security of the rules which have been so established will be lost. Why, then, should not equity in this case also interfere; and if it cannot protect the wife consistently with the ordinary rules of property, extend its own (peculiar) rules with respect to the separate estate, so as to secure to her the enjoyment of that estate which has been so invented for her benefit? It is, no doubt, doing violence to the rules of property to say that property which, being given with qualifications and restrictions which are held to be void, belonged absolutely to the woman up to the moment of her marriage, shall not be subject to the ordinary rules of law as to the interest which the husband is to take in it; but it is not a stronger act to prevent the husband from interfering with such property than it was originally to establish the separate estate, or to maintain the prohibition against alienation. In doing this, I feel that I have much to overcome of which the observations thrown out by myself in Massey v. Parker, 2 M. & K. 174, is the only part of which I do not feel the important weight. I have to contend with Lord Brougham's observations, in Woodmeston v. Walker, 2 R. & M. 197, and the vice-chancellor's decisions in Newton v. Reid, 4 Sim. 141; Brown v. Pocock, 2 R. & M. 210; 5 Sim. 663; Malcolm v. O'Callaghan, 4 M. & C. 399; Johnson v. Freeth, 6 Sim. 423, &c.; and Davies v. Thornycroft, 6 Sim. 420. In establishing the validity of the separate estate, with its qualifications (which constitute its value)—that is, the prohibition against anticipation—I am not doing more than my predecessors have done for similar purposes."

In the following note the doctrine as to a married woman's charging her equitable separate estate is given as it exists in each of the States of the Union.

Alabama.—There is, in this State, an essential difference in the manner of charging the statutory separate estate of a married woman and her equitable separate estate, or separate estate by contract. The former is charged by the statute with the price of certain articles, the character of which is specified, and her agency in purchasing them is immaterial; while the latter can only be charged by the act and agreement of the wife, and, in the absence of restraining words in the instrument creating the estate, it may be charged to the same extent as if she were a feme sole. Wilburn v. McCalley, 63 Ala. 436; Steed v. Knowles, 79 Ala. 446; McKenna v. Rowlett, 68 Ala. 186; Sprague v. Shields, 61 Ala. 428; Short v. Battle, 52 Ala. 456; Parker v. Marks, 82 Ala. 548; Cowles v. Pollard, 51 Ala. 445; Wilkinson v. Cheatham, 45 Ala. 341; Nunn v. Givhan, 45 Ala. 375; Gunter v. Williams, 40 Ala. 521; Paulk v. Wolfe, 34 Ala. 541; Cowles v. Morgan, 34 Ala. 535; Baker v. Gregory, 28 Ala. 544; 65 Am. Dec. 366; Ozley v. Ikleheimer, 26 Ala. 332; Collins v. Rudolf, 19 Ala. 616; Purveyer v. Puryear, 16 Ala. 486.

By giving a promissory note for the purchase price of land conveyed as statutory estate, and a mortgage to secure the same, a married woman thereby charged her equitable separate estate. Turner v. Kelly, 70 Ala. 85.

She may become a member of a partnership and her interest will be subject to a judgment against it in the common name. Rabitt v. Orr, 83 Ala. 185. Where the conveyance was to her use, "with power to sell, mortgage . . . the same, provided she . . . join with the said [trustee] in any sale, conveyance . . . of the property, and by such joint action manifest her consent in writing to the disposal of the same," she was allowed to mortgage it to secure her husband's debts without the trustee joining. Burrus v. Dawson, 66 Ala. 476.

A charge against the equitable separate estate can only be enforced in equity. Pollard v. Cleaveland, 43 Ala. 102; Bell v. Watkins, 82 Ala. 512; 60 Am. Dec. 756; and the creditors have priority in the order in which their bills are filed. Kelly v. Turner, 74 Ala. 513.

Arkansas.—In order that her separate property may be bound, it is not necessary that she should execute an instrument expressly referring to it or purporting to exercise a power over it. It is sufficient that she professes to act as a feme sole; for the court of chancery in giving her the capacity to hold separate property gives also the capacity, incident to property in general, of incurring debts to be paid out of it, and enforces payment of such debts when contracted, not as personal liabilities, but by laying hold of the separate property as the only means by which they can be satisfied. Dobbin v. Hubbard, 17 Ark. 196; Palmer v. Rankins, 30 Ark. 771; Rudd v. Peters, 41 Ark. 177.

But the contract must be for the benefit of herself, or her separate estate, or it cannot be enforced against it. Collins v. Underwood, 33 Ark. 265; Stowell v. Grider, 48 Ark. 220; Henry v. Blackburn, 32 Ark. 445; Stillwell v. Adams, 29 Ark. 346.

A married woman may charge her separate estate by the employment of counsel to prosecute a suit for divorce, and if she die before the termination of the suit, the counsel will be entitled to be paid out of her estate for the service rendered during her life. Viser v. Bertrand, 14 Ark. 271; Oswalt v. Moore, 19 Ark. 257. A judgment against a married woman upon a claim for which she is not legally liable—for instance, as maker of a note for the accommodation of her husband—is not void, but may be enforced against her separate property. Chollar v. Temple, 39 Ark. 238.

California.—A married woman may contract for services to be rendered for the protection and preservation of her separate estate, which is personal property, and for services thus rendered on the faith of her separate estate, a court of equity will enforce a lien; but she cannot create a lien on her separate real estate except by contract in writing signed and acknowledged by her. Terry v. Hammonds, 47 Cal. 32; over-ruling, to this extent, the rule laid down in MacLay v. Love, 25 Cal. 367; Smith v. Greer, 31 Cal. 476; Bodley v. Ferguson, 30 Cal. 511. And see Burkle v. Levy, 70 Cal. 250; Brenham v. Davidson, 51 Cal. 356.

But courts of equity are careful in guarding her against imposition, and in seeing that dealings with her affecting her separate estate are free from fraud and reasonable in their terms, and that no unfair advantage has been taken of her. Miller v. Newton, 23 Cal. 554.

Colorado.—There must be an express promise binding the separate estate, unless the contract is for her benefit, or for the benefit of her separate estate. Farrand v. Beshoar, 9 Colo. 291. Her contracts were formerly valid only against her separate property in equity. Hochstadter v. Hays, 11 Colo. 118.

Connecticut.—The presumption is that a contract entered into by a married woman having a separate estate, for its benefit or for its exclusive benefit, was contracted upon the credit of her estate. Williams v. King, 43 Conn. 569; Smith v. Williams, 43 Conn. 409; National Bank v. Smith, 43 Conn. 327; Platt v. Hawkins, 43 Conn. 143; Donovan's Appeal, 41 Conn. 551; Hitchcock v. Kiely, 41 Conn. 611; Adams v. Charter, 46 Conn. 551; Wells v. Thorman, 37 Conn. 318; Taylor v. Shelton, 30 Conn. 122; Leavitt v. Beirne, 21 Conn. 1; Imlay v. Huntington, 20 Conn. 146; Jones v. Aetna Ins. Co., 14 Conn. 501.

A husband cannot rebut the presumption of law that a building erected by him, on her separate property, is intended for her benefit, and cannot recover the value of such building either from her or her estate. In re Sturdevant's Estate (Conn. 1892), 23 Atl. Rep. 826.

District of Columbia.—A purchase of furniture by a married woman, for a house forming her separate estate, is a contract relating to her separate estate and will be enforced. Harmon v. Garland, 1 Mackey (D. C.) 1. But otherwise if the house was not her separate estate. Solomon v. Garland, 2 Mackey (D. C.) 113. Nor is the purchase of a horse and carriage to be used in riding back and forth from her home in the country to look after property in the city, for the benefit of her separate estate or a contract relating to it. McDermott v. Garland, 1 Mackey (D. C.) 496. If she allows her husband to buy supplies for the family upon the credit of her separate estate, she will be liable therefor. McDermott v. Garland, 1 Mackey (D. C.) 496.

Florida.—Unless the indebtedness is incurred on account of the beneficial nature of the consideration, as inuring to the benefit of her property or estate, the only manner in which a married woman, living with her husband, can create a charge upon her separate property, is by some deed, mortgage, or other instrument of writing, duly executed and acknowledged according to the statute. Staley v. Hamilton, 19 Fla. 275; Harwood v. Root, 20 Fla. 940; Hodges v. Price, 18 Fla. 342.

But real estate of a wife will be charged in equity with the value of improvements which she causes to be built thereon. Schnabel v. Betts, 23 Fla. 178; and see Thrasher v. Doig, 18 Fla. 809; Caulk v. Fox, 13 Fla. 147; Sanderson v. Jones, 6 Fla. 430; Maiben v. Bobe, 6 Fla. 381; Lewis v. Yale, 4 Fla. 418; Smith v. Poythress, 2 Fla. 92.

Georgia.—Georgia Code, § 1783, declares "that, while the wife may contract, she cannot bind her separate estate by any contract of suretyship, nor by any assumption of the debts of her husband; and any sale of her separate estate made to a creditor of her husband in extinguishment of his debt, shall be absolutely void;" and this applies not only to a separate estate of the wife created by deed, but to any property held by her as "separate estate." Dunbar v. Mize, 53 Ga. 435; Humphrey v. Copeland, 54 Ga. 543; Ruffin v. Paris, 75 Ga. 653.

This does not affect the power of a widow to contract with reference to such debts after her husband's death. Mize v. Hawkins, 54 Ga. 500.

In other respects the rule is the same as in England. Fears v. Brooks, 12 Ga. 195; Morrison v. Solomon, 52 Ga. 206; Seabrook v. Brady, 47 Ga. 650; Van Arsdale v. Jonier, 44 Ga. 41; Huff v. Paradise, 74 Ga. 523.

Illinois.—The debt must be contracted for her own benefit, on the credit of her separate property, or in reference to it, or there must be some appropriate instrument executed by her with a view to make the debt a specific charge. Williams v. Hugunin, 69 Ill. 214; Fur- ness v. McGovern, 78 Ill. 337; Elder v. Jones, 85 Ill. 384; Forbes v. Williams, 13 Ill. App. 291; Roberts v. Jenks, 5 Ill. App. 484; Carpenter v. Mitchell, 50 Ill. 470; Schmidt v. Postel, 63 Ill. 58; Pomeroy v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co., 40 Ill. 398.

A contract by a married woman compromising a bona fide claim against an estate in which she has a right to a distributive share, is one in respect to her separate estate, and binding on her, notwithstanding her coverture. Husband v. Epling, 81 Ill. 172.

Indiana.—In this State the rule is the same as in Illinois. The intent to charge must be clear and is not to be presumed, and the contract must be one from which benefit results to the property. Kantrowitz v. Prather, 31 Ind. 92; Smith v. Howe, 31 Ind. 233; Hasheagen v. Specker, 36 Ind. 413; Hodson v. Davis, 43 Ind. 258; Shannon v. Bartholomew, 53 Ind. 54; Crickmore v. Breckenridge, 51 Ind. 294; Armstrong v. Nichols, 32 Ind. 408; Montgomery v. Sprankle, 31 Ind. 113; Stevens v. Parish, 29 Ind. 260; Coats v. McKee, 26 Ind. 223; Abdil v. Abdil, 26 Ind. 287; Cox v. Wood, 20 Ind. 54; Reese v. Cochran, 10 Ind. 195; Chrisman v. Leonard, 126 Ind. 202; Lindley v. Cross, 31 Ind. 106.

The plaintiff must aver and prove that the contract was one which the married woman had the power to make. Cupp v. Campbell, 103 Ind. 213; Juchert v. Johnson, 108 Ind. 436. A personal judgment may be rendered against her. Fawcner v. Scottish American Mortgage Co., 107 Ind. 555.

A note, and mortgage to secure the same, given by a wife in payment of her husband's debts, are void. Warey v. Forst, 102 Ind. 205; but where, at the time of executing a joint mortgage with her husband, a married woman made an affidavit that it was for her own use, to secure the purchase price of property bought of plaintiff and not to secure any debt of her husband's, and the plaintiff, relying on her affidavit, sold her the property and took the mortgage to secure the note given therefor, she was estopped, in an action to foreclose the mortgage, from claiming that she signed the note and mortgage as surety for her husband. Taylor v. Hearn (Ind. 1892), 31 N. E. Rep. 201.

woman an alleged indebtedness contracted by her for its improvement, which does not allege that she intended to charge or did charge or agree to charge, the indebtedness against her separate estate, is insufficient. The fact that she caused necessary and proper improvements to be made on the real estate does not raise the inference that she intended to create a charge upon it. Shannon v. Bartholomew, 53 Ind. 54. The complaint must also contain averments showing that the improvements were necessary and proper to her complete and full enjoyment of the land. Lindley v. Cross, 31 Ind. 106.

Iowa.—Iowa adopts the same rule as Indiana and Illinois. First Nat. Bank v. Haire, 36 Iowa 443; Jones v. Crosthwaite, 17 Iowa 393; Patton v. Kinsman, 17 Iowa 428.

A wife who merely joins her husband in a mortgage to secure his note, is not liable to a personal judgment on the debt. Wolf v. Van Metre, 23 Iowa 397; Knox v. Moser, 69 Iowa 341; but where she has procured credit to be given him on the faith of his ownership of certain lands, she cannot afterwards, as against those giving the credit, assert that he held the land in trust for her. Hendershott v. Henry, 63 Iowa 744.

If a wife permits her husband to buy lumber with which to make improvements on her land, with the full knowledge of all the facts and that it is unpaid for, the seller will be entitled to a lien on the land for the value of the materials furnished. Miller v. Hollingsworth, 36 Iowa 163; but where she does not authorize its purchase, or know that it was not paid for, her property will not be subject to the lien. Price v. Seydel, 46 Iowa 696.

Kansas.—Kansas follows the English rule, and a married woman may bind herself, by her contracts, to the extent of her separate property. A personal judgment may be rendered against her which will reach any or all of her separate property not exempt from execution under the exemption laws. Miner v. Pearson, 16 Kan. 27; Deering v. Boyle, 8 Kan. 528; Tallman v. Jones, 13 Kan. 438; Furrow v. Chapin, 13 Kan. 107; Larimer v. Kelley, 10 Kan. 298; Faddis v. Woollomes, 10 Kan. 56; Knaggs v. Mastin, 9 Kan. 532; Monroe v. May, 9 Kan. 466; Going v. Orns, 8 Kan. 85; Wicks v. Mitchell, 9 Kan. 80.

In Deering v. Boyle, 8 Kan. 528, the court by Valentine, J., said: "When a married woman executes a promissory note, she, of course, means something. She either means to charge her separate estate, or else she means to cheat and defraud the person to whom she gives the note. Is it not more charitable to suppose she means the former? But suppose she means the latter, will courts of equity hear her plead her own guilt and fraud? If the contract of a married woman does not bind her separate estate, then, of course, it is a nullity; for it is well settled that it cannot bind her personally. But to give her contract such a construction violates at least two well-settled principles of law: First, it presumes her guilty of fraud before the fraud is shown. Second, it adopts a construction which will defeat the contract, instead of adopting the construction which will prevent its violation and give effect to the obligation of each and all parties."

Kentucky.—A married woman may charge her separate estate whenever she thinks proper to do so, but her intention must be manifest or otherwise it will not be held liable. The execution of a note or indorsement of a bill of exchange has been regarded as manifesting an intention by a feme covert to charge her separate estate. Burch v. Breckinridge, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 482; 63 Am. Dec. 553; Lillard v. Turner, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 374; Cardwell v. Perry, 82 Ky. 129; Sweeney v. Smith, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 325; 61 Am. Dec. 188; Coleman v. Woolley, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 320; Bell v. Kellar, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 381; Jarman v. Wilkerson, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 293; Long v. White, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 226; Hounshell v. Clay F. Ins. Co., 81 Ky. 304; Hackett v. Metcalfe, 6 Bush (Ky.) 352. It must be the debt of the wife and the credit be given to her, or she must receive the benefit of it. Huss v. Rice (Ky. 1891), 17 S. W. Rep. 869.

A married woman, with power to sue and be sued, to contract and manage, sell, convey, and devise her property cannot make herself liable upon a contract of suretyship for the husband or for others. Bidwell v. Robinson, 79 Ky. 29; but where a devise in trust to pay her the income, contained a provision that it was not to be liable for her debts, it was held that it might be subjected nevertheless. Parsons v. Spencer, 83 Ky. 305.

Her separate property is not liable, after marriage, for necessities, unless the contract be in writing and signed by herself and husband. Harris v. Dale, 5 Bush (Ky.) 61; but a joint note by herself and husband given in payment for necessities, is sufficient "evidence in writing." Marsh v. Alford, 5 Bush (Ky.) 392.

Maryland.—In Maryland it must be affirmatively shown that the contract was made by the married woman with direct reference to her separate estate, and that it was her intention to charge the same. Wilson v. Jones, 46 Md. 349; Girault v. Adams, 61 Md. 1; Jackson v. West, 22 Md. 71; Koontz v. Nabb, 16 Md. 549. But where a husband and wife bound themselves to execute a mortgage of the separate estate of the wife, by a contract founded upon a proper consideration, it was enforced by a court of equity and the estate held liable for the debt intended to be secured. Hall v. Eccleston, 37 Md. 510.

Where a husband and wife own adjoining tracts of land, and the husband, intending to build a house for his own, selected a site on the tract belonging to the wife because it was a more commanding and in every way a more desirable location, and made a contract with the Messrs. P. for the erection of the house, and, when it was finished, paid them in full the contract price; notice to the husband by a furnisher of materials that he intended to claim a mechanics' lien was held insufficient, as the notice should have been given to the wife, the husband not being her agent in contracting for the erection of the house. Conway v. Crook, 66 Md. 290.

Massachusetts.—The contract must be made with reference to the separate estate. Nourse v. Henshaw, 123 Mass. 96; Allen v. Fuller, 118 Mass. 402; Wilder v. Richie, 117 Mass. 382; Tracy v. Keith, 11 Allen (Mass.) 214; Rogers v. Ward, 8 Allen (Mass.) 387; 85 Am. Dec. 710; Willard v. Eastham, 15 Gray (Mass.) 328; 77 Am. Dec. 366; Wright v. Dresser, 110 Mass. 51.

A married woman cannot bind her separate estate by a contract of suretyship, unless in consideration of a benefit to herself or to the estate. Athol Mach. Co. v. Fuller, 107 Mass. 437. And the fact that a note given for the indebtedness of her husband, and signed by both, is secured by a mortgage on her real estate, does not render her liable on the note. Heburn v. Warner, 112 Mass. 271; 17 Am. Rep. 86; Williams v. Hayward, 117 Mass. 532. Her husband may act as her agent, and evidence that he had the general management of her premises, and employed a man to perform labor upon a house on the land with the wife's knowledge, and that she gave directions as to parts of the work, will justify a finding that he was her authorized agent. Wheaton v. Trimble, 145 Mass. 345. While evidence that work done on the separate property of a married woman was done with her knowledge, may warrant a jury in finding that she agreed to pay for it, it raises no such presumption of law, and the judge has no right to direct a verdict for the plaintiff in an action against her. Westgate v. Munroe, 100 Mass. 227.

Michigan.—To sustain a contract made by a married woman it must appear to have been made with the intent to bind her separate property, as well as upon a consideration that would sustain it for that purpose. West v. Laraway, 28 Mich. 464. She may be held personally liable on her indorsement of paper due to herself upon an affirmative showing that it was directly for the advantage of her separate estate. Russel v. People's Sav. Bank, 39 Mich. 671; 33 Am. Rep. 444; Kenton Ins. Co. v. McClellan, 43 Mich. 564; Powers v. Russell, 26 Mich. 179; Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 318; Rankin v. West, 25 Mich. 195; Denison v. Gibson, 24 Mich. 187.

Where a married woman living with an irresponsible husband promises that she will pay for goods and medical services to be furnished to her and her family, and they are charged directly to her upon the creditor's books, it appearing that he would not furnish them upon the husband's credit, she is liable therefor in assumpsit. Meads v. Martin, 84 Mich. 306.

The holder of a bond, executed by a husband and wife for money borrowed for the wife's sole benefit and use in erecting a house upon land of which she was the owner in fee, is entitled to have the claim allowed out of her separate estate. Wilson v. Wilson, 80 Mich. 472. But where the husband and wife gave a promissory note for money loaned for the sole benefit of the husband, and there was no representation by either that it was for the benefit of the wife's separate estate, the payee cannot recover, as the fact that the note was signed by both was sufficient notice that it was not for the benefit of her separate estate. The fact that the husband acted as agent for the wife in procuring the loan makes no difference. Schmidt v. Spencer, 87 Mich. 121.

A married woman is not liable upon her promissory note given to secure a debt of her husband. It is void as soon as made and will not be protected in the hands of a bona fide holder whether negotiable or not. Waterbury v. Andrews, 67 Mich. 281; Edwards v. McEnhill, 51 Mich. 160; Buhler v. Jennings, 49 Mich. 538; Reed v. Buys, 44 Mich. 80; Kenton Ins. Co. v. McClellan, 43 Mich. 564; Gantz v. Toles, 40 Mich. 725; McCombs v. Merryhew, 40 Mich. 721; Johnson v. Sutherland, 39 Mich. 579; Russel v. People's Sav. Bank, 39 Mich. 671; 33 Am. Rep. 444; Carley v. Fox, 38 Mich. 387; Ross v. Walker, 31 Mich. 120; West v. Laraway, 28 Mich. 464; Emery v. Lord, 26 Mich. 431; DeVries v. Conklin, 22 Mich. 255. But a mortgage given to secure credit for him will be enforced if no fraud is practiced on the wife. Knowlson v. Brulst, 86 Mich. 588.

Minnesota.—A married woman cannot bind herself personally by any contract she may make. But her separate estate will, in equity, be held liable for all the debts, charges, incumbrances and other engagements which she does, expressly or by implication, charge thereon in any manner not inconsistent with the instrument by which she acquires her title to the property. Pond v. Carpenter, 12 Minn. 430; Tuttle v. Howe, 14 Minn. 145; 100 Am. Dec. 205; Carpenter v. Leonard, 5 Minn. 155; Flynn v. Messenger, 28 Minn. 208; 41 Am. Rep. 279; Wolf v. Banning, 3 Minn. 202; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Allis, 23 Minn. 337.

Where a building was erected upon land of which a married woman was part owner, under a contract entered into by her husband and others, and it did not appear that she was a party to the contract in any way, or that her husband or any other person acted as her agent; that she had any connection whatever with the erection of the building, or that it was erected for her on her account, or with her knowledge; or that she ever agreed to pay anything for or towards the expense of its erection, she could not be held liable for the expense incurred therein. Holley v. Huntington, 21 Minn. 325.

ried woman may deal with her separate estate as if she were feme sole, unless her power is restrained by the instrument creating it. These estates have grown up with equity jurisprudence and are not recognized by courts of law. The Married Woman's Law of 1857 does not apply to them, and the class of contracts which that statute enables her to make is not the criterion of her capacity to bind her equitable estate. Musson v. Trigg, 51 Miss. 172; Shacklett v. Polk, 51 Miss. 378; Witcher v. Wilson, 47 Miss. 663; Pollen v. James, 45 Miss. 129; Dunbar v. Meyer, 43 Miss. 679; Davis v. Wilkerson, 48 Miss. 585; Armstrong v. Stovall, 26 Miss. 275; Robertson v. Bruner, 24 Miss. 242; Boarman v. Graves, 23 Miss. 283. She may render it liable for the payment of her debts by her separate act. Musson v. Trigg, 51 Miss. 172. She may mortgage it to secure the payment of her husband's debts, but the incumbrance reaches only to the rents and profits of the realty, and does not affect the fee. Foxworth v. Magee, 44 Miss. 430. The plea of coverture is no bar to an action for the price of family supplies and necessities sold to her, or to her husband with her consent, for the use and benefit of the separate estate. Gulon v. Doherty, 43 Miss. 538.

The plaintiff, in order to charge the separate estate, must set out in his pleadings, under the Revised Code of Mississippi, the special circumstances which gave validity to the contract. Dunbar v. Meyer, 43 Miss. 679.

A foreign judgment against a married woman cannot be enforced unless some fund consisting of her separate property is pointed out from which it may be satisfied. Choppin v. Harmon, 46 Miss. 304.

In only one instance can the husband impose a charge upon the wife's estate without her consent, and that is where her lands are devoted to agriculture. He may burden the estate in such a case with a charge for such things as are necessary to the production of a crop, and for its management, without consulting her, and nothing can exempt the estate from this liability except a waiver of it by the creditor. Clopton v. Matheny, 48 Miss. 286; Porter v. Staten, 64 Miss. 421; Cook v. Ligon, 54 Miss. 368; Grubbs v. Collins, 54 Miss. 485; Klotz v. Butler, 56 Miss. 333. It is liable notwithstanding the husband misapplies the supplies and she receives no benefit therefrom.

Wright v. Walton, 56 Miss. 1; and such liability may be enforced in a court of chancery. Ogden v. Guice, 56 Miss. 330. But where the supplies were sold to the husband without knowing that the plantation was his wife's, she was not estopped, after his death, from denying that she ever received them or that they were used for her benefit. Caldwell v. Hart, 57 Miss. 123.

The contract of a married woman to purchase land on a credit imposes no obligation on her personally or on her separate estate. Morrison v. Kinstra, 55 Miss. 71. Her separate property may be subjected to the payment of a judgment, even though acquired after its rendition. Taggart v. Muse, 60 Miss. 870. A judgment against husband and wife, on a note for borrowed money, is erroneous where the note is not shown to have been applied to her use or to her separate estate. Stokes v. Shannon, 55 Miss. 583.

Missouri.—It is well settled in Missouri that a married woman is to be regarded as a feme sole as to her separate property, and competent to contract debts which will bind it, whether it be named or referred to, or not, and by giving a note or making a written contract she raises a presumption that she intends to bind such estate, and a contrary intention, to be shown, must appear from the instrument itself and cannot be shown by parol. Metropolitan Bank v. Taylor, 61 Mo. 338; Rosenheim v. Hartsock, 90 Mo. 357; Hooton v. Ransom, 6 Mo. App. 19; Davis v. Smith, 75 Mo. 219; Boatmen's Sav. Bank v. Collins, 75 Mo. 280; Whiteley v. Stewart, 63 Mo. 363; Gage v. Gates, 62 Mo. 417; Sharpe v. McPike, 62 Mo. 307; Lincoln v. Rowe, 51 Mo. 571; Kimm v. Weippert, 46 Mo. 532; 2 Am. Rep. 541; Schafroth v. Ambs, 46 Mo. 114; Miller v. Brown, 47 Mo. 504; 4 Am. Rep. 345; Whitesides v. Cannon, 23 Mo. 457; Segond v. Garland, 23 Mo. 547; Coats v. Robinson, 10 Mo. 757; Pratt v. Eaton, 65 Mo. 157. The estate may be bound by a note executed in blank. Morrison v. Thistle, 67 Mo. 596. She may subject her separate estate to a mechanics' lien. Tucker v. Gest, 46 Mo. 339. The fact that a husband, as trustee, contracted debts for the improvement of her property, does not of itself create a lien on the same, in the absence of a deed or other appropriate instrument of writing executed by him. Druhe v. De Lassus, 51 Mo. 165. Where her husband acts as her authorized agent, she will be bound, but not personally. Keating v. Korfhage, 88 Mo. 524; Burgwald v. Weippert, 49 Mo. 60.

Where a married woman gives her notes for the purchase money of real estate, and secures them by a mortgage upon the property purchased, no personal judgment can be given on the notes, but the lien created by the mortgage will be enforced by an action analogous to a proceeding in equity to subject the property to the debt. Pemberton v. Johnson, 46 Mo. 342. Her property cannot be attached. Gage v. Gates, 62 Mo. 412; Bachman v. Lewis, 27 Mo. App. 81. A proceeding in equity is the only method by which the separate estate of a married woman can be charged with the payment of her debts, and the jurisdiction of the court is in no way dependent upon antecedent legal proceedings of any kind. Schafroth v. Amba, 46 Mo. 114. If she has but a life estate and only the usufruct of it inures to her benefit, she can create no equitable charge upon the property. Arnold v. Brockenbrough, 29 Mo. App. 625.

Demands against the separate estate stand upon the same footing at her death as other unpreferred demands, but the general creditors should resort to any other estate that she may have first. Klenke v. Koeltze, 75 Mo. 239.

In order to bind the separate estate the contract need not be based upon a consideration moving directly to her. Siemers v. Kleeburg, 56 Mo. 196; and though the contract may be made a charge upon the separate estate, it does not necessarily become a lien thereon. Nash v. Norment, 5 Mo. App. 545.

There is this difference between the written and parol promise of a married woman: Where goods designed for family consumption are sold to a wife on her parol promise of payment, she will be presumed to purchase on the credit of her husband, while purchases made on her written agreement will be presumed to have been made on her separate credit. Miller v. Brown, 47 Mo. 504; 4 Am. Rep. 345. The indorsement of a promissory note has been held to be an appointment in writing. Chaffin v. Van Wagoner, 32 Mo. 352; and though the terms of the deed of settlement only allow the wife to convey the separate estate by joining her husband, she may still subject it to the payment of her debts. Gay v. Ihm, 69 Mo. 584.

Her separate estate will be charged in equity with damages for her breach of contract to purchase real estate. Boeckler v. McGowan, 9 Mo. App. 373.

New Hampshire.—This State adopts the English rule, and by statute the wife is made liable at law personally, as well as in respect of her estate, for debts contracted by her in respect to it. Batchelder v. Sargent, 47 N. H. 266. But she can make no contract for money or property in anticipation of the purchase of such separate estate. Ames v. Foster, 42 N. H. 381; and see Vogt v. Tichner, 48 N. H. 242; Nims v. Bigelow, 45 N. H. 343; Hutchins v. Colby, 43 N. H. 159; Albin v. Lord, 39 N. H. 196; Bailey v. Pearson, 29 N. H. 77.

New Jersey.—The separate estate of a married woman will be held liable in equity for all debts which she, either expressly or by implication, charges thereon. But if she, during the coverture, contracts debts generally without indicating any intention to charge her separate estate for the payment of them, it will not be liable. Oakley v. Pound, 14 N. J. Eq. 178. If she assigns a bond belonging to her separate estate, for a valuable consideration, and guarantees the payment, she will be held liable on the guaranty. Roy v. Decker, 44 N. J. L. 245.

She cannot bind herself personally, but the charge is one upon her separate estate. Pentz v. Simonson, 13 N. J. Eq. 232. Such debts are not a lien upon the separate estate until made so by a decree of a court of equity. Armstrong v. Ross, 20 N. J. Eq. 109.

A married woman cannot charge her separate estate by a contract of suretyship, unless in consideration of a benefit to herself or to the estate. But the release of lands in which she has a dower right from an incumbrance is such a benefit. Perkins v. Elliott, 23 N. J. Eq. 526.

An obligation enforceable in equity will support an express promise to pay. Where a feme covert has no separate estate, her contract does not create an obligation which is enforceable in equity; and, therefore, is not such a consideration as will support an express promise to pay after the death of her husband. Condon v. Barr, 49 N. J. L. 53.

The jurisdiction of a court of equity over the separate estate of a married woman, rests not merely on the ground that it is an equitable estate, but on the ground that it is her separate estate, which is equitably subject to contracts and engagements entered into by her, which are not legally binding on her personally, and which cannot be enforced at law. Johnson v. Cummins, 16 N. J. Eq. 97; 84 Am. Dec. 142.

New York.—It must clearly appear from a written instrument that it was a married woman's intention to charge her separate estate, or the consideration of the contract must be for the direct benefit of the estate itself. Yale v. Dederer, 18 N. Y. 265; 72 Am. Dec. 503; 22 N. Y. 450; 78 Am. Dec. 216; 68 N. Y. 329; 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 286; 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 525; 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 165; 19 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 146; 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 242; Jaques v. Methodist Episcopal Church, 17 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 548; 8 Am. Dec. 447; Saratoga Co. Bank v. Pruyn, 90 N. Y. 250; Eisenlord v. Snyder, 71 N. Y. 45; McVey v. Cantrell, 70 N. Y. 295; 26 Am. Rep. 605; Gosman v. Cruger, 69 N. Y. 87; 25 Am. Rep. 141; Conlin v. Cantrell, 64 N. Y. 217; Second Nat. Bank v. Miller, 63 N. Y. 639; Manhattan Brass, etc., Co. v. Thompson, 58 N. Y. 80; Maxon v. Scott, 55 N. Y. 247; Corn Exchange Ins. Co. v. Babcock, 42 N. Y. 613; Johnston v. Peugnet, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 540; Baken v. Harder, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 272; Weir v. Groat, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 193; White v. McNett, 33 N. Y. 371; Scott v. Otis, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 33; Speck v. Gurnee, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 644; Travis v. Lee, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 605; Coon v. Brook, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 546; Knowles v. McCamly, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 343; Gardner v. Gardner, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 112; Shorter v. Nelson, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 114; Deinatt v. McMullen, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 335. And if charged by a written instrument it will bind whatever separate estate she may possess at the time of the trial and judgment, even though acquired after the instrument was signed. Todd v. Ames, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 454.

Where a wife knew that the plaintiff was at work on a house that she was building on her separate premises, and the kind of work he was doing, the law will imply a promise on her part to pay for his services, although he was employed by the husband without any express agreement whether he should be paid by the husband or by the wife. Fairbanks v. Mothersell, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 406. And where a married woman informed the physician attending her that she owned a team of horses and carriages, and was worth enough to pay him her account, and it was on the strength of these representations that he attended her, it was held sufficient to show the existence of a separate estate, and to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff. Ellison v. Sessions, 18 N. Y. Supp. 108.

Where a husband gave, in payment of an antecedent debt, his note, indorsed by his wife, to one who does not, on the faith thereof, release any security or legal rights, or extend the time of payment of the debt, the wife cannot be held liable. Harlem River Bank v. Meyer, 16 N. Y. Supp. 872. And when a married woman sent an order to the payee of a note, signed by her as principal with her husband as surety, requesting that the money be sent by the holder of the order, and it was thereupon paid to such holder, the presumption that the money was received by her and applied to the benefit of her estate might be overcome by proof that the money was actually paid to the husband by the party receiving it. Prendergast v. Borst, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 489. It does not impair the negotiability of a note made by a married woman for it to contain a clause making it a charge upon her separate estate. Loomis v. Ruck, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 385. The burden of proof is always on the plaintiff to show that the contract was for the benefit of the wife's separate estate, and if made by her husband as her agent, that it was within his power as agent. Nash v. Mitchell, 71 N. Y. 200; 27 Am. Rep. 38; Ainsley v. Mead, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 116. By an act of the legislature, a married woman is liable for an attorney's fees without reference to the question of actual benefit to her separate estate. Owen v. Cawley, 36 N. Y. 600. But see Embree v. Franklin, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 203.

North Carolina.—Where an instrument executed by a married woman with the written consent of her husband, does not specifically charge her separate estate, it is necessary to show such a consideration inuring to her benefit, or the benefit of her separate estate, as will necessarily imply such a charge. Farthing v. Shields, 106 N. Car. 289. But if the money borrowed be used to improve the separate estate, a charge will be implied. Withers v. Sparrow, 66 N. Car. 129.

A married woman's power to charge her separate estate is limited in North Carolina to the manner and mode prescribed by the instrument creating it. Hardy v. Holly, 84 N. Car. 661; and see Norris v. Luther, 101 N. Car. 204; Knox v. Jordan, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 176; Felton v. Reid, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 269; Pippen v. Wesson, 74 N. Car. 442; Atkinson v. Richardson, 74 N. Car. 458; Rogers v. Hinton, Phil. Eq. (N. Car.) 101. And under the former practice it could only be subjected by a bill in equity—a proceeding in rem not in personam. Smith v. Gooch, 86 N. Car. 276.

A deed of trust, executed by a husband and his wife upon her separate estate, to secure the purchase-money thereof and money borrowed to defray expenses of farming operations on other lands, is valid. Jeffrees v. Green, 79 N. Car. 330.

Ohio.—Where a married woman, having a separate estate, executes a promissory note as surety for the principal maker, a presumption arises that she thereby intends to charge her separate estate with its payment. Williams v. Urmston, 35 Ohio St. 296; overruling Levi v. Earl, 30 Ohio St. 147; and Rice v. Columbus, etc., R. Co., 32 Ohio St. 380, as far as they conflict. See also Avery v. Vansickle, 35 Ohio St. 270; Phillips v. Graves, 20 Ohio St. 371; 5 Am. Rep. 675; Hershizer v. Florence, 39 Ohio St. 516.

But a contract, to charge the separate estate, need not be in writing. Elliott v. Lawhead, 43 Ohio St. 171, though it must be valid in law, or just and equitable between the parties. Rice v. Columbus, etc., R. Co., 32 Ohio St. 380.

Oregon.—Oregon also adopts the English rule. Orange Nat. Bank v. Traver, 7 Sawy. (U. S.) 210.

Pennsylvania.—A married woman's power over property settled to her separate use cannot exceed the limits prescribed in the deed of settlement, and she has only those powers to transfer and charge which are expressly given by the instrument under which she acquired her title. MacConnell v. Lindsay, 131 Pa. St. 476; Shuyder v. Noble, 94 Pa. St. 286; Maurer's Appeal, 86 Pa. St. 380; Moore v. Cornell, 68 Pa. St. 320; Wells v. McCall, 64 Pa. St. 207; McMullin v. Beatty, 56 Pa. St. 389;

Walker v. Coover, 65 Pa. St. 430; Shonck v. Brown, 61 Pa. St. 320; Hartman v. Ogborn, 54 Pa. St. 120; 93 Am. Dec. 679; Hinney v. Phillips, 50 Pa. St. 382; Wright v. Brown, 44 Pa. St. 224; Reumfelt v. Clemens, 46 Pa. St. 455; Steinman v. Ewing, 43 Pa. St. 63; Weiman v. Anderson, 42 Pa. St. 311; Parke v. Kleeber, 37 Pa. St. 251; Murray v. Keyes, 35 Pa. St. 384; Pennsylvania v. Foster, 35 Pa. St. 134; Heugh v. Jones, 32 Pa. St. 432; Mahon v. Gormley, 24 Pa. St. 80; Keeney v. Good, 21 Pa. St. 349; Chrisman v. Wagoner, 9 Pa. St. 478; Coryell v. Dunton, 2 Pa. St. 530; 49 Am. Dec. 489; Rogers v. Smith, 4 Pa. St. 93; Lyne v. Crouse, 1 Pa. St. 111; Lancaster v. Dolan, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 231; 18 Am. Dec. 625; Wallace v. Coston, 9 Watts (Pa.) 137; Dorrance v. Scott, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 306; 31 Am. Dec. 509.

Pennsylvania act of April 11, 1848, conferred upon married women no rights with reference to the disposition of property settled to their sole and separate use to which they were not before entitled. Twining's Appeal, 97 Pa. St. 36.

To bind her separate property for medical services employed for the family, affirmative proof of a request by her, is necessary. Sawtelle's Appeal, 84 Pa. St. 306.

Rhode Island.—The intention to charge must be declared in writing, or the contract must be for the benefit of herself or her separate estate. Elliott v. Gower, 12 R. I. 79.

South Carolina.—It is settled law in South Carolina that a married woman can only dispose of, or charge, her separate estate, in the execution of powers conferred by the instrument creating it. Dunn v. Dunn, 1 S. Car. 350; Creighton v. Clifford, 6 Rich. (S. Car.) 188; Ewing v. Smith, 3 Desaus. (S. Car.) 417; 5 Am. Dec. 557; Magwood v. Johnson, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 228; Robinson v. Dart, Dudley Eq. (S. Car.) 128; 31 Am. Dec. 569; Clark v. Makenna, Cheves Eq. (S. Car.) 163; Reid v. Lamar, 1 Strobb. (S. Car.) 27; but it will be charged with debts contracted for its benefit. Cater v. Eveleigh, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 19; 6 Am. Rep. 596; James v. Mayrant, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 591; 6 Am. Dec. 630; Montgomery v. Eveleigh, 1 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 267; Adams v. Mackey, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 75. Where a married woman is to receive an income for her sole and separate use, and no restriction is imposed upon her use and disposition of it, she is regarded as a feme sole as to the same, and may give it to her husband after it has been paid to her. Charles v. Coker, 2 S. Car. 122. But where a married woman gives a bond to secure the payment of money borrowed by the husband for his own use, it is void, and cannot be enforced against her separate estate. Griffin v. Earle, 34 S. Car. 246. Under the South Carolina Constitution, art. 19, § 8, a married woman may alienate her equitable estate in stock held by her at the time of the adoption of the constitution. Witsell v. Charleston, 7 S. Car. 88; and now under the General Statutes of South Carolina, § 2037, a married woman "may contract and be contracted with as to her separate property in the same manner as if unmarried." Howard v. Kitchens, 31 S. Car. 490; Dial v. Agnew, 28 S. Car. 454; Greig v. Smith, 29 S. Car. 426; Pant v. Brown, 29 S. Car. 598; Law v. Lipscomb, 31 S. Car. 504; Wallace v. Craig, 27 S. Car. 514; Witte v. Wolfe, 16 S. Car. 256.

Tennessee.—A married woman may freely charge her separate estate, unless restricted by the instrument creating it, but to do so there must be an express intent or agreement, and it cannot be made liable by implication. Young v. Young, 7 Coldw. (Tenn.) 461; Warren v. Freeman, 85 Tenn. 513; Eckerly v. McGhee, 85 Tenn. 661; Jordan v. Keeble, 85 Tenn. 412; Cherry v. Clements, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 552; Litton v. Baldwin, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 209; 47 Am. Dec. 605; Marshal v. Stephens, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 159; 47 Am. Dec. 601; Morgan v. Elam, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 375. Thus, though no consideration passed to her, she may mortgage her lands to secure the debt of her husband, and the mortgage will be valid; McFerrin v. White, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 499. Where she holds land for life, with power to dispose of it by sale or will, the provision of the act of 1870, 99 T. & S. Rev., § 2486, giving a married woman power to sell, etc., or mortgage their separate realty, provided the power is not expressly withheld in the deed or will under which they hold it, does not give her power to mortgage the same, as under such a settlement the power to mortgage is expressly withheld in the sense of the statute. Lightfoot v. Bass, 2 Tenn. Ch. 677.

In order that a judgment against a married woman may bind her separate estate, the claim or debt on which it was based must be one which would have been a charge on the estate if the judgment had not been rendered. Chatterton v. Young, 2 Tenn. Ch. 768; Jordan v. Keeble, 85 Tenn. 412. Where a wife had separate real estate both in Mississippi and Tennessee, a Tennessee court of chancery refused to charge the Tennessee lands with expenditures made for the benefit of the Mississippi estate. Shacklett v. Polk, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 104.

A married woman may charge her separate estate by a contract not executed by a privy examination, such as is required in the case of deeds. Menees v. Johnson, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 561; Warren v. Freeman, 85 Tenn. 513; but in the absence of power conferred by the instrument, a woman cannot make liable for her husband's debt property given to her trustee for her sole and separate use for life, and at her death to her children. Robertson v. Wilburn, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 633; Arrington v. Roper, 3 Tenn. Ch. 572.

Texas.—It has been held in Texas that where the wife had separate property, negroes, and there was no common property, and the husband was insolvent and unable to support his family, and purchased goods, wares and merchandise, which were necessary for the wife, children, and negroes, and, afterwards, before the expiration of two years, gave his note for the same, reciting that it was given for the goods, wares, and merchandise furnished his wife, family, and negroes, the separate property of the wife was liable for the payment of the debt, and that, too, notwithstanding the fact that more than two years had elapsed from the date of the account or delivery of the articles, before the commencement of the suit. Milburn v. Walker, 11 Tex. 329.

But unless for necessities for herself and family, a wife cannot, by simple contract, even in writing, alone or jointly with her husband, incumber her separate property; though she may mortgage it when joined by her husband. Rhodes v. Gibbs, 39 Tex. 432; Hall v. Dotson, 55 Tex. 520; Wallace v. Finberg, 46 Tex. 35; Hollis v. Francois, 5 Tex. 195; 51 Am. Dec. 760; Shelby v. Burtis, 18 Tex. 644; Wiley v. Prince, 21 Tex. 637; Magee v. White, 23 Tex. 180; Sorrell v. Clayton, 42 Tex. 188.

When a debt is incurred for the protection of the separate property enforced in a proceeding in rem against the property, and are not binding on her personally.¹ The property will be charged with of the wife, to secure which a note is executed voluntarily by husband and wife jointly, judgment may be rendered on the note, directing execution to be levied on the community property, or on the separate property, at the option of the plaintiff. Grant v. Whittlesey, 42 Tex. 320. But where the husband has no separate estate, and there is no community property, and the wife rents a house for the use of herself and family, such rent, if of reasonable amount, is a valid charge upon her separate estate. Harris v. Williams, 44 Tex. 124.

Vermont.—There must be some express pledge, or some benefit resulting to the wife or to the separate estate in order to charge it. Sargeant v. French, 54 Vt. 384; Dale v. Robinson, 51 Vt. 20; 31 Am. Rep. 669; Priest v. Cone, 51 Vt. 499; 31 Am. Rep. 695; Partridge v. Stocker, 36 Vt. 108; 84 Am. Dec. 664.

The law will not raise an implied promise against a married woman when she cannot make a valid contract. Southworth v. Kimball, 58 Vt. 337.

A wife's separate estate is not chargeable for money paid by her father to a third person as surety for her husband; nor for repairs made on her house by her father, who lived with her, to suit his own convenience, and for his own benefit, he not consulting her, the repairs being unnecessary, and not adding to the value of the house, and there being no understanding that he was to be reimbursed. Kelsey v. Kelley, 63 Vt. 41; but where a married woman promised to allow, in payment of a man's note, services rendered by him in supporting her mother, the promise was enforced in equity against her separate estate. Howe v. Chesley, 56 Vt. 727.

Virginia.—In Virginia a married woman is considered a feme sole as to her separate estate unless restricted by the instrument creating it, and it may be charged with her debts and contracts generally. Woodson v. Perkins, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 345; Penn v. Whitehead, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 503; 94 Am. Dec. 478; Darnall v. Smith, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 878; Leake v. Benson, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 157; Muller v. Bayley, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 521; Justis v. English, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 565; Greensboro Bank v. Chambers, 30

Gratt. (Va.) 202; 32 Am. Dec. 661; Bain v. Buff, 76 Va. 371; Finch v. Marks, 76 Va. 207; Burnett v. Hawfe, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 481. She may cause land to be pledged as security for her husband's debts. Christian v. Keen, 80 Va. 369.

To charge her separate estate for her notes, she must have had such separate estate subject to her jus disponendi when she signed the notes, and must have known of it and intended to charge it. M'Donald v. Hurst, 86 Va. 885. But where she indorsed a negotiable note in blank to enable her husband to make certain purchases, which he failed to do, and afterwards bought a larger amount of goods than was originally contemplated at the time of the indorsement, and filled up the blanks to suit this purchase, the wife was held bound by the indorsement. Frank v. Lillienfeld, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 377.

A court of equity in enforcing the liability of a married woman's separate estate for her general engagements, will order a sale of the personal estate and the subjection of the rents and profits of the lands, until the debt is discharged. Frank v. Lillienfeld, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 377.

West Virginia.—The separate estate of a married woman is liable for any simple contract debt for which she would be liable if a feme sole. A consideration for such debt need not inure to her own benefit or that of her separate estate; it may inure to the benefit of her husband or any third party, or may be a mere prejudice to the other contracting party. Dages v. Lec, 20 W. Va. 584; Radford v. Carwile, 13 W. Va. 573; Hughes v. Hamilton, 19 W. Va. 366; Weinberg v. Rempe, 15 W. Va. 829.

Land which is the separate estate of a married woman cannot be sold for debts contracted by her during coverture, but can only be rented during the coverture. Hogg v. Dower (W. Va. 1892), 14 S. E. Rep. 995.

Wisconsin.—The separate estate of a married woman may be charged in equity with the payment of debts contracted for her benefit. Todd v. Lee, 15 Wis. 365; Krouskop v. Shontz, 51 Wis. 204; Kavanagh v. O'Neill, 53 Wis. 101.

any damage resulting to others from failure to keep it in proper repair, or from her careless management.¹

4. Suits Concerning Equitable Separate Property.²—As a married woman is considered a feme sole as to her separate estate, it necessarily follows that she may sue and be sued in equity in regard to it.³ She may obtain an order to answer separately as a defendant,⁴ have a conveyance fraudulently obtained set aside,⁵ and may prevent her husband's creditors from seizing her property for his debts.⁶ She may present a petition without her husband, and will be bound by her answer, or by her settlement of accounts.⁷ The trustee should be joined with her, though she has been allowed to sue alone.⁸ But the husband should be made a party defendant; especially if he claims any interest in the separate estate, or if any of his acts are in question.⁹ She must be made a party to all suits to subject her separate estate or it will not affect her interest.¹⁰

5. How Extinguished.—The clause against alienation and anticipation in a settlement in trust for a married woman becomes inoperative upon the termination of the coverture, either by death,¹¹

10. A judgment recovered by a tax collector, in a suit to enforce a lien against a married woman's separate property for unpaid taxes, could not affect her interest where she was not made a party defendant, and the purchaser at the tax sale under the judgment could acquire no title. And, upon the death of the wife intestate, and without issue, property or an absolute divorce;¹ and a wife may lose her separate property in personalty by allowing it to be so employed or invested as to become mixed with other funds in such a manner that it becomes impossible to identify or trace it,² or by putting it in the husband's possession without any agreement that he shall repay it.³

limited to her sole and separate use will pass to her husband in his own right. Cooney v. Woodburn, 33 Md. 320.

Where a married woman, jointly with her husband, conveys her separate real estate to secure debts of her husband, and dies before sale under the deed, the equity of redemption descends to her heirs, and upon her death their right of property becomes complete, subject only to the trust deed and the curtesy of the husband. Kinner v. Walsh, 44 Mo. 65.

1. O'Kill v. Campbell, 4 N. J. Eq. 13; Harvard College v. Head, 111 Mass. 209; McGill v. McGill, 19 Fla. 341.

2. Though a court of equity will throw safeguards around, and see to the proper application of a trust fund, and will follow it so long as it can be clearly and distinctly traced, yet when the means of its identification fail, the powers of the court in reference to that fund must also cease. Buck v. Ashbrook, 59 Mo. 200; Clapp v. Emery, 98 Ill. 531; National Bank v. Barry, 125 Mass. 20; Newton v. Porter, 69 N. Y. 133; Story's Eq. Jur., §§ 1210, 1258; 3 Sugd. Vend. 270, 272, and cases cited. And it is not necessary, if the trust be moneys, that the particular coin or kind of money, or the individual pieces, shall be identified in order to pursue it, but its identity as a fund must be preserved so that it can be distinguished from all other money. So long as it can be followed as a separate and independent fund, distinguishable from any other fund, it can be pursued. School Trustees v. Kirwin, 25 Ill. 73.

3. Kuhn v. Stansfield, 28 Md. 210; Chester v. Greer, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 26.

Thus, where a feme covert, who had a separate estate, purchased articles of furniture with the rents and profits of such estate, and put them into the possession of her husband without any agreement or understanding with him that he should hold them as her trustee, or that the title should be vested in any other person for her separate use, the articles thus purchased were held to become the property of her husband and liable to be sold for his debts. Shirley v. Shirley, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 363.

But where the trustee of a sum of stock for the separate use of a married woman improperly transferred it into the joint names of her husband and herself, and the husband for six years received the dividends, after which the trustee died, and the husband, without his wife's knowledge, sold out the stock and applied the proceeds to his own use, and afterwards left her, it was held that, though the wife might have been presumed to have assented to his actual receipt of the dividends while the stock remained intact, yet no such assent could be presumed after it had been sold, and that she was entitled to recover, as against her husband and the estate of the deceased trustee, the arrears of dividends which had accrued since that time, as well as to have the trust fund replaced. Dixon v. Dixon, L. R., 9 Ch. Div. 587.

But the wife will not lose her separate estate by standing silently by while her husband disposes of it; for while in the husband's presence she is, in contemplation of law, under his power and coercion. Carpenter v. Carpenter, 27 N. J. Eq. 502.

Wife's Participation in Breaches of Trust.—In Hughes v. Wells, 9 Hare 749, it is said that the rights of a married woman may be barred and her estate affected by acts of participation in breaches of trust, but that it would seem that the fact of a married woman's having permitted her husband to receive the trust fund does not preclude a right to relief by her, or her appointee, for that would be to defeat the purpose for which the trust was created—the protection of the wife against the husband.

If the wife accepts and enjoys a resulting trust purchased with her separate property, she is precluded from afterwards asserting her right to the separate property so disposed of, though such disposition was ultra vires of the trustee who so disposed of it; but otherwise if she repudiates

6. Effect of Statutes on Equitable Separate Property.—Statutes creating a separate estate in a married woman do not interfere with the separate estate in equity, or prevent the creation and existence thereof.¹ The jurisdiction of courts of equity over them is not abridged or limited by virtue of such statutes;² nor do they affect the construction of a gift in trust for a married woman.³ The statutes are to enlarge her privileges and not to take away any pre-existing common-law right.⁴

III. STATUTORY SEPARATE PROPERTY—1. What Constitutes—a. PRESUMPTION.—When there is any dispute as to what is or is not statutory separate estate, it seems that the presumption is in favor of the view that the property is held by the wife as her separate property under the statute.⁵ Whether the possession of the transaction, for, by accepting the resulting trust, she gets an equivalent compensation, and if she elects to hold under it, cannot recover back the property converted. Dozier v. Freeman, 47 Miss. 647; Wiley v. Gray, 36 Miss. 510; Kemp v. Kemp, 85 N. Car. 491.

But the New York acts of 1848 and 1849 are held to have converted the wife's equitable into a legal estate. Wood v. Wood, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 350.

Thus, in Alabama, all property owned by a married woman is presumptively regarded as her statutory separate property, and the burden of proof is on one asserting her estate to be equitable. Bolman v. Overall, 86 Ala. 168.

A man took a mortgage from his brother for money loaned. He having died, his widow procured another mortgage to herself from the mortgagor, alleging that the money loaned was hers, and surrendering the first mortgage. In a suit by the decedent's administrator to foreclose the first mortgage, it was held that the burden of proof was on the widow to show that it was her money and not that of her husband. Truax v. White (N. J. 1887), 11 Atl. Rep. 735.

Where property levied on is, as shown by the sheriff's return, in the possession of the husband, but is claimed by the wife as her separate property, the onus of explaining such possession is on the wife. But where creditors of the husband levy on personalty which the wife, who has a separate estate, claims as purchased from a third person with her own means, the burden of proving fraud on her part is on the creditors, and she is not bound to show that the price was paid with her own money, and not that of her husband. Richardson v. Subers, 82 Ga. 427.

Where a husband, without his wife's authority, executed in his own name a bill of sale of her horse, and indorsed thereon an order to his wife to deliver the horse to the purchaser, who presented the order and took the horse, the wife neither consenting nor refusing to deliver the animal, it was held, in an action by the wife to recover possession, that the court having charged that the burden was on the plaintiff to prove that the horse was her property, it was not error to refuse defendant's instruction, that, if the plaintiff failed to schedule her property, the burden was on her to prove that the horse was her separate property. Lafargue v. Markley (Ark. 1892), 18 S.W. Rep. 542.

But in Illinois it has been held that the married women's act of 1861 was not designed to abrogate the common-law presumption that the husband owns chattels by a married woman is prima facie evidence of ownership, is disputed.¹ But it is said that there is no presumption of law that money or negotiable securities in the possession of the wife belong to her husband rather than to her.² Where, however, husband and wife are living together, the presumption is that the personal property in the house belongs to the husband;³

all the property in the possession of the wife while they are living together. If the wife claims the benefit of the act, she must bring herself within its provisions by proof. She holds the affirmative of the issue and must prove it. And it is not sufficient for the wife to prove that she purchased the property from a person other than her husband during coverture, to enable her to hold it as against her husband's creditors. She must also show that she obtained in good faith the consideration which she paid for it from a source other than her husband. Reeves v. Webster, 71 Ill. 307; Johnson v. Johnson, 72 Ill. 489.

And in New Jersey, where a wife, possessed of a separate estate, permitted her husband to carry on business therein in her name, and he collected the income of her separate estate, and made expenditures thereon, it was held in a creditors' suit to subject the wife's realty to the payment of her husband's debts, upon the ground that his earnings had been expended in its improvement, that if the amount expended by the husband on the wife's property was not in excess of the amount of her separate income received by him, the presumption would be that he applied her income and not his earnings to the improvement of her estate. Dickson v. Shay, 45 N. J. Eq. 821.

1. In the following cases it is held that possession is presumptive evidence of ownership. Patterson v. Kicker, 72 Ala. 406; Whiton v. Snyder, 88 N. Y. 299. Thus, in the former case, it was held that the principle that possession of personal property is prima facie proof of ownership, applies to a wife's separate property, whether the possession be in her, in her husband as trustee, or in both jointly, in recognition of her right. And in Whiton v. Snyder, 88 N. Y. 299, it was said that under New York Laws, 1862, ch. 172, the general rules of law as to the ownership of property apply to a wife unaffected by the old disabilities of the marital relation; and that, consequently, her separate personal possession of chattels draws after it the presumption of ownership. It was so held, also, as to a certificate of deposit payable to her order, whereon she had received interest. And it was said, further, that such separate possession is implied in the character and use of articles of her paraphernalia, when actually used by her, even though they were bought by her husband. But see contra, McFerran v. Kinney, 22 Mo. App. 554; Hemelreich v. Carlos, 24 Mo. App. 264; Philadelphia v. Williamson, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 179; State v. Pitts, 12 S. Car. 180; 32 Am. Rep. 508, the latter case holding that the mere fact that a wife is in the use and enjoyment of clothing or other personal property, is not sufficient to establish her right to a separate estate therein. And in Hemelreich v. Carlos, 24 Mo. App. 264, it is said that personal property in the possession of a married woman is presumed to belong to her husband, and that if the fact is otherwise, it must be so shown.

But as to articles such as household furniture and goods which are adapted to the use of the family, and which are used by them generally and are in their common possession, there is no presumption of ownership by the wife. Whiton v. Snyder, 88 N. Y. 299. See also the following note.

(Pa.) 179, where the contrary rule—namely, that property in the wife's possession is presumed to be her husband's and not her separate estate—was applied to the property of a woman who had lived with a man and falsely claimed to be his wife.

The fact that money earned by the joint labor of a husband, wife, and

and to overcome this presumption, the wife must show that she owned the property before her marriage, or that she has acquired it since in a way entirely independent of her husband.¹ A woman who never released to her husband any right in her property owned at the time of marriage, is presumed to have continued absolute owner, and at her death her real estate passes to her heirs, and her personalty to her personal representatives.²

b. PROPERTY OWNED AT TIME OF MARRIAGE.—The statutes quite generally agree in making property, real or personal, owned by a married woman at the time of her marriage, her separate estate.³

c. PROPERTY ACQUIRED AFTER MARRIAGE—(1) Wife's Earnings—(a) What are Earnings.—By the term earnings is meant money or property gained by labor, services, or business management.⁴

minor children on a farm, and from the sale of produce, was always kept in the personal possession of the wife, does not rebut the presumption that the title thereto was in the husband. Burns v. Bangert, 16 Mo. App. 22.

A husband living with his wife is presumed to be the head of the family; and the fact that she makes the contracts for board and receives the pay therefor, in the business of keeping a hotel or boarding house, will not prove the receipts to be her separate property. Flynn v. Gardner, 3 Ill. App. 253.

In Texas, however, where a married woman claimed, as against her husband's creditor's a stock of goods, it was held that the presumption was that the goods were community property and not her separate property, and that consequently the burden of proving the goods to be her own was upon her. Jones v. Epperson, 69 Tex. 586.

In one case, where the circumstances were peculiar, an exception to the rule in the text above was adopted. A husband and wife had died within a few hours of each other. The wife had a separate estate and income. A sum of money was found in the wife's pocket-book, another sum in a pocket-book marked with her father's name; also some money in a bag, and some coin lying loose—all in a trunk marked with the wife's name, to which both had access, the key being usually kept by the wife. Their deeds, bonds, and other papers were also found in the trunk. There was nothing to show the amount contributed by either one to the money so found. It was held that they should be considered as owning it in equal shares. Bergen v. Van Liew, 36 N. J. Eq. 637; reversing 36 N. J. Eq. 251.

Where an unmarried woman, after acquiring an initiatory right to pre-empt land, marries, and then pays, and takes the patent, the land is her separate estate, and this, whether the money paid belonged to the community or was obtained from the sale of a portion of the land. Harris v. Harris, 71 Cal. 314.

A deed conveying land to a single woman sufficiently shows the land to be her separate estate, though followed after her marriage by a second deed from the same grantor to her in her married name, and on an express money consideration. Maguire v. De Fremery, 76 Cal. 401.

(b) Effect Where Mention of Earnings Is Omitted in the Statute.—Married women's property acts which do not specifically mention her earnings, do not change the husband's common-law rights as to the same.¹ But the wife's earnings may be secured to her separate use by the assent of her husband,² or by a settlement made either before or after marriage.³ Or a husband may give his wife her earnings;⁴ but such gift must not defraud creditors,⁵ and the burden lies upon the wife to prove clearly the gift.⁶

(c) Statutory Provisions.—In most of the State statutes it is expressly provided that the wife's earnings shall be her separate right to receive, use, and possess their own earnings, and to sue for the same in their own names, that it was to be limited to such only as should result from manual labor, or that, in conferring upon them the right to have their separate property under their sole and separate control, and to hold, own, possess, and enjoy the same, as though they were sole and unmarried, they were to be restricted in its use or disposition. The right to contract is indispensable to the acquisition of earnings, and to the unrestricted possession, control and enjoyment of property. We perceive no reason why a married woman, invested with these rights, may not, at least with the consent of her husband, earn money in trade, as well as at the washtub, or with the sewing-machine; why she may not as well be the proprietress of a grocery store, as of a farm; contract debts for goods to be used in trade, as for animals and farming implements, or lands, or farm labor. In removing the common-law restrictions upon her right to acquire and to control her property, the legislature have left her to determine, at all events when her husband shall not object, from the dictates of her own judgment, in what lawful pursuit she will engage, and whether it shall be prosecuted alone or in conjunction with others."

The right of a wife to hold property is as absolute as that of any other person, and whether she paid anything for it or not, does not concern her husband's creditors, so long as it did not come through, or in some way, from him. Oishei v. Gilbert, 9 N. Y. Supp. 402.

Thus, where a wife used in the purchase of real estate her earnings before marriage, savings out of money given her by her husband for household expenses, and money borrowed by her, it was held that in the absence of evidence of fraudulent design towards the husband's creditors, the debts of the husband could not be charged upon the land, the same having been purchased by the wife a year before the debt was contracted. Smyth v. Reber (N. J. 1889), 18 Atl. Rep. 462.

Where land was conveyed to the wife, and it appeared that she had funds, and the husband had none, and that it was the expectation of all parties that the wife should pay for the land, it was held that the fact that the husband gave his note to the vendor did not, in the absence of fraud or collusion, prevent the land becoming the wife's separate estate. Ullman v. Jasper, 70 Tex. 446.

A married woman who uses her separate statutory property to purchase real estate, and has the same conveyed to her sole and separate use, does not thereby change the character of her estate, so as to make it equitable. Bolman v. Overall, 86 Ala. 168.

A wife who had been declared a feme sole by decree of court, purchased at a judicial sale land which belonged to her husband and which had been mortgaged by him. She paid for it with the proceeds derived from her general estate, which proceeds had never been reduced into possession by the husband. It was held that the land so purchased was not bound by a judgment obtained against the husband upon a debt created by him prior to said purchase. Wiggins v. Johnson (Ky. 1886), 1 S. W. Rep. 643.

In Alabama, the services and earnings of a married woman belong presumptively to her husband, and after his death to his personal representative. To enable the wife to maintain a suit for such earnings, she must allege that her husband's estate had no creditors, or else that his debts were paid, and also allege facts showing a relinquishment by the husband, express or implied, of the earnings to her. Bolman v. Overall, 80 Ala. 451.

In Georgia, it was held that the earnings of a married woman prior to 1866, where she was not a free trader and did not live separately from her husband, belonged to her husband; and that, where he bought land with such earnings in his own name, no trust in the wife's favor could be implied as against a creditor of the husband whose debt was contracted after the purchase of the property, and who had no notice of an alleged trust. Wood v. Wilson Sewing Machine Co., 76 Ga. 104.

father, it appeared that she had separated from her husband, and supported herself by her earnings. It was held that she was entitled to bring the suit, the wages belonging to her. Pursell v. Fry, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 595.

If a married woman appropriates to the payment of her husband's debts the earnings made by her from services performed on her sole account, she cannot reclaim them. Sellmeyer v. Welch, 47 Ark. 485.

In West Virginia, where a married woman, who claimed the fund garnished for the debt of her husband, had no separate estate, and there was no marriage settlement, and it appeared that the money claimed was earned by her, while living with her husband, and in part was acquired by her by raising cattle on her husband's farm, and that another part was given her by her son before the adoption of the law providing for separate estates of married women, the money was held to be the property of the husband. Lanham v. Lanham, 30 W. Va. 222.

Promissory Note.—Under the Indiana law entitling a married woman to the earnings of her separate business, she may buy a note with such earnings, and her husband's indorsement will pass the title of the note to her, so as to enable her to sue the maker. Wilson v. Wilson, 113 Ind. 415.

Equity for a Conveyance.—The equity obtained by a wife who has purchased land, paying part of the purchase money, and taking bond for title on payment in full, is her statutory separate estate. Prout v. Hoge, 57 Ala. 29.

The provision of the Rhode Island statutes that property acquired by a woman after marriage "by her own industry, shall be absolutely secured to her sole and separate use," is sufficient to enable a woman to recover for board furnished by her father after her separation from her husband and before her divorce. *Berry v. The earnings and accumulations of a wife living separate from her husband are her separate property. But the fact that a note and mortgage were given by a wife while living apart from her husband, does not of itself prove that the lands described in the mortgage were her separate property. McComb v. Spangler, 71 Cal. 418.

A husband left his wife on account of domestic infelicity, and resolved during his absence never to resume marital relations with her, but to provide for his family when necessary. The wife and children lived together, supported by her exertions. It was held that this was a separate living within the California Statute (California Civ. Code, § 169) providing that the wife's earnings, while she is living separate from her husband, shall be her separate property. Loring v. Stuart, 79 Cal. 200.

The California act of March 9, 1870, which provides that while the wife lives separate and apart from her husband she shall have the sole use of her property, and may sue and be sued, etc., does not apply to a case where the wife is temporarily absent from her husband with his consent, but to cases where there has been an abandonment on the part of the husband or wife, or a separation which is intended to be final. Tobin v. Galvin, 49 Cal. 34.

2. Riley v. Mitchell, 36 Minn. 3. In this case an agreement between husband and wife that the latter should receive the compensation to be earned by her in nursing a boarder in the family, who paid the husband for his board, was held to vest in her any claim accruing on account of such nursing, and, there being no question of set-off or counterclaim, it was considered to be immaterial that the boarder did not know of such agreement.

Money Earned by Keeping Boarders.—If a husband consent that his wife may take boarders into the family, and that she shall have the gross proceeds for application on a contract which he has made with a third person for the purchase of real estate, and if the money so acquired by the wife be thus labor of the wife for persons other than her husband, belongs to her,¹ and the fact that the husband acted as the wife's agent in contracting for the rendering of services by her, does not affect her individual claim for compensation.² But a wife's earnings in connection with her husband's property, by keeping boarders, selling butter, milk, etc., are his, not hers, and property bought with them may be reached by his creditors.³

(2) Increase or Profits of Separate Estate.—The profits, rents, increase, products and interest of statutory separate property are also separate property, whether the statute says so or not;⁴ and applied, the money is hers, and not his. If, on completing payment, the wife takes a conveyance of the premises to herself from such third person, her title will prevail against a creditor of her husband who gave credit after the property was paid for, though the conveyance to her be of later date than the giving of such credit. McNaught v. Anderson, 78 Ga. 499.

But in Texas the interest of money acquired by gift, devise, or descent, is held not to be property acquired by gift, devise, or descent, and consequently not the wife's separate property. Braden v. Gose, 57 Tex. 37.

In Alabama, under a statute giving the husband, as trustee of the statutory separate estate of the wife, the right to control it without liability to account to the wife for the rents, etc., but not subjecting such rents, etc., to his

this rule applies both to realty and to personalty.¹ Hence the wife can maintain replevin against any creditor of her husband, or against any officer who seizes the profits of her separate estate.² The wife's right to the profits is not affected by the fact that the husband assisted in earning them.³ In debts, it was held that land purchased in the name of the wife with such rents could not be made liable for the husband's debts. Long v. Eford, 86 Ala. 267.

1. Holcomb v. People's Sav. Bank, 92 Pa. St. 238.

The Minnesota statute provides specially that the rents, profits and increase of real estate shall be the wife's property. It was held under this statute that the naming of the increase of realty did not exclude the increase of personalty. Said the court by Mc-Millan, J.: "As to real and personal property acquired by personal industry, or otherwise, before marriage, and the rents, profits, and income of real estate during coverture, there can be no doubt that the statute secures these to the wife as her separate property. The question here is whether it vests in her the profits and increase during coverture of her personal property. These are not expressly mentioned in the act. Are they embraced in it by implication? The rights to the profits and natural increase of tangible personal property is incident to, and results from, its ownership. The property mentioned in the act is vested in the wife during marriage to the same extent as before marriage; that is, the wife has the interest or estate in it after and during marriage as before. Before her marriage she would have the absolute title to such property, and, as incident thereto, to the profit and increase thereof. If, being the owner of tangible personal property in her possession, the wife is not entitled to the profits and increase thereof as her separate property, then it is not hers to the same extent after marriage as before. The absolute ownership of the personal property belonging to a feme sole being secured to her after coverture by the act under consideration, it follows that the incidents of this ownership are also secured to her, of which one is, as we have seen, the right to the natural increase of the property; it was therefore necessary to mention it expressly in the act. We are therefore of opinion that, under the statute referred to, the wife, during coverture, holds the profits and natural increase of her personal property as her separate estate, both as against her husband and his creditors." Williams v. M'Grade, 13 Minn. 46, 53. But see contra, Braden v. Gose, 57 Tex. 37.

Manure accumulated in the course of husbandry from the occupation of a farm belonging to a wife is, as between husband and wife, a part of the land belonging to her, although his stock and his hay, brought upon the place while occupied by them, produced in part the accumulation. *Norton v. The natural increase of domestic animals, forming part of the corpus of the statutory separate estate of a married woman, is the property of the wife. Gans v. Williams, 62 Ala. 41; *Walker v. Nor is it material that the land was bought by the wife on credit, and has not been paid for. Dayton v. Walsh, 47 Wis. 113; 32 Am. Rep. 757.

Where a husband helps to farm his wife's lands, the crops are presumed to be hers, not his. Scott v. Hudson, 86 Ind. 286. And so where a married woman owns and occupies a farm, the mere fact that her husband lives with her on the farm and assists in its cultivation and management, will not warrant an inference that the ownership of some States the increase of statutory separate estate is provided for by statute.¹

(3) Property Purchased with Wife's Money.—The general rule is that property purchased with the wife's money belongs to the wife, and is not subject to the husband's debts.² This is especially true where the property was purchased out of the earnings of the wife prior to her marriage.³ Where the purchase was made with money acquired subsequently to the marriage, there are, in some States, qualifications of the rule,⁴ such as that the

the crops vested in him. Heartz v. Klinkhammer, 39 Minn. 488.

The fact that a business belonging to a married woman is profitable mainly through the labor, energy, and skill of her husband, who is its general manager, does not make the profits liable for his debts, so long as the parties are acting in good faith. Codding v. Bowen, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 631.

But in Stennett v. Bradley, 70 Wis. 278, which was an action for the conversion of certain crops and stock, where it was proved that the plaintiff and her husband had occupied her farm about four years, and that she let the farm to her husband, who carried it on, and sold and appropriated the products thereof, and used and disposed of the crops and stock raised and kept thereon, during that time, as his own, without interference from her; and where it was proved, also, that the wife admitted that her husband owned the property—these facts were held sufficient to warrant a finding that the products of the farm were the property of the husband.

An insolvent debtor carried on under his own name a saloon which had been purchased by his wife, who knew nothing of the business except what her husband told her. The proceeds of the business were used to purchase the fixtures of the saloon, and afterwards were applied to improvements on the wife's real estate. It was held that the fixtures and the realty, so far as the business profits were applied thereto, could be charged in equity with the debts of the husband. Shay v. Dickson (N. J. 1888), 15 Atl. 4. Bailey v. Gardner, 31 W. Va. 94. In this case it was held that under the West Virginia law, where the wife during the marriage earned money by sewing and washing, and bought real property, the deed being made to her, earnings must have been derived from an employment by a third person.¹ The fact that property is purchased in part with the wife's funds does not confer the entire ownership upon the wife,² although it seems that she will be considered to own such a proportion of the property bought as the funds furnished by her bear to the whole price;³ but if there is no way of distinguishing the property purchased by the wife, the whole is presumed to belong to the husband.⁴ Property bought with money lent by the wife to her husband belongs to the husband.⁵ The husband, as well as a third person, may act as the wife's agent in making a purchase of property.⁶ The right of the wife to her property is not affected the husband's creditors have a right to subject such real property to the payment of their claims.

1. Thus in Kentucky, unless the wife's earnings are derived from an employment by a third person, such earnings belong to the husband, and lands purchased with them will be subject to the husband's debts. Musgrave v. Parish (Ky. 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 464.

2. Chambers v. Richardson, 57 Ala. 85, in which it was held that where the husband mixed some of the income of his wife's statutory separate estate with moneys of his own, purchasing lands and taking the title to himself, this fact did not give the wife ownership in the property so purchased.

But where at the time of the marriage the wife contributed from her separate property all the stock and capital of the business, except a few goods put in by the husband, and the stock on hand at his death was less than the amount of her original investment, it was held that the stock was her separate property. *Walsh v. 4. See Liddell v. Miller, 86 Ala. 343; Meade v. Stairs, 88 Ky. 66. In the former case it appeared that a stock of goods was purchased by a partnership, and a cash payment made with funds advanced by one of the members, and notes were given for the balance of the purchase money. Liddell participated in the purchase, asserting, however, that he was acting as his wife's agent, the notes being signed by him as agent, and his share of the cash payment being so charged to him. It appearing that the wife had not contributed from her separate estate towards the purchase, until after a levy upon an interest in the partnership effects as the property of Liddell, and there being no way of distinguishing the goods purchased for cash from those bought on time, the levy was sustained.

5. Pool v. Clifford, 78 Cal. 371.

A lent money to her husband to do business on. He formed a partnership with B, A furnishing no more money until she bought B out, her husband then having the entire control and management of the business, and having an equal interest with her therein. After buying B out, she purchased certain goods, which were levied on upon an execution against the firm. It was held that she could not replevy the same as her individual property. Clay v. Vanwinkle, 75 Ind. 239.

In an action by a wife to recover from her husband money alleged to have been paid by her in building and furnishing their house, complainant testified that, when she gave defendant the money, she told him to pay it on their home. "He took the money and paid it out. It went into the house. It was for the purpose of paying the contractor." This was held to be inconsistent with the idea of a loan or trust. Glegghorne v. Glegghorne, 118 Pa. St. 383.

A loan of money by a married woman to her husband, prior to the Illinois married woman's act of 1861, would invest him with the ownership, and she would cease to have any interest therein; but a loan made after that act makes her simply her husband's creditor, and if he invests the money in land in his own name, no trust results in her favor. *Stewart v. by the fact that it has been listed by the husband for taxation as his.¹ Property bought by a wife, in her name, after the institution of her suit for a divorce and separation of property, which were subsequently decreed in her favor, is presumed to be her separate property.²

(4) Property Acquired by Gift.—Acquisition by gift is quite generally enumerated in the statutes as one of the methods by which a statutory separate estate may be acquired;³ and where property is given to a wife, the presumption is that it was intended to be for her separate use.⁴ It has been held that "gift" has the same meaning as "gift or grant,"⁵ and that a gift of personalty may be by parol.⁶

(5) Property Acquired by Conveyance.—Real estate conveyed to a married woman is her separate legal property,⁷ and the in-

Competency of Witness.—Where the plaintiff's husband bought a carriage, paying partly in cash and partly in his own notes, she is incompetent to testify that her husband, now dead, was her agent in the purchase. Richmond v. Brewster, 2 N. Y. Supp. 400.

Where it appeared that at the time of a decree making a wife a feme sole, she owned no property at all, and that her husband subsequently bought goods and conducted business in her name, realizing large profits, it was held that the property was subject to the husband's debts. *Carter v. In an action to quiet title it appeared that a husband purchased property with community funds, and then conveyed the premises to his wife as a gift; that subsequently he wished to sell the land, but the wife refused to join in a deed unless he paid her one-half the proceeds of the sale; that they conveyed the premises by joint deed, and one-half the proceeds were paid to the wife by the husband's consent; that out of this money the wife purchased the premises in controversy. It was held that the proceeds paid to the wife, and the premises purchased with them, became her separate property. Oaks v. Oaks (Cal. 1892), 29 Pac. Rep. 330.

In Massachusetts a promissory note made payable to a married woman at the request of her husband, upon a consideration moving solely from him, is a voluntary gift from him, and she does not acquire a title to it as her sole property free from his control, and cannot maintain an action on it in her own name. *Towle v. A woman before her marriage had a possessory title to, and was in possession of, certain public land. After her strument need not contain words showing that the property was meant to be separate.¹ If the grantor is the husband the conveyance must not be to the prejudice of his creditors,² but the con-marriage the United States government conveyed a tract of which said land formed a part, to a board of town trustees "in trust for the use and benefit of the occupants thereof." Subsequently thereto the husband made application for said land to be conveyed to the wife, which was done, and the required sum was paid by the husband. It was held that the wife, under the conveyance from the government, had an equitable interest, which was her separate property, and that it was not made community property by the husband's advancing money to obtain the legal title thereto. Morgan v. Lones, 78 Cal. 58.

Under a statute making all the property of a wife held by her previously to her marriage, or to which she becomes entitled after marriage, in any manner, her separate estate, not subject to the payment of the husband's debts, a conveyance "to the sole and separate use and behoof" of a married woman does not create in her a separate estate by contract in opposition to her separate estate by statute, where a large proportion of the purchase money paid was from her statutory estate. Molton v. Martin, 34 Ala. 651.

In Alabama where a deed conveys lands to a married woman, the estate granted not being otherwise limited by the terms of the deed, the lands become a part of her statutory separate estate, and subject to all the incidents and liabilities imposed by law on that estate; and when an action at law is brought against her and her husband to enforce such statutory liability, evidence cannot be received to change the character of her estate. Wheeler v. Walker, 64 Ala. 560.

Where a wife has purchased the real estate of her husband at a sale of the same by the sheriff, the title vests in her as her separate estate, though she had no estate before marriage, and none accrued to her from any source other than her husband or her own earnings during coverture. Bowser v. Bowser, 82 Pa. St. 57.

Under an ante-nuptial deed conveying to the wife a life estate in lands, with a reversion to her husband, the wife's interest becomes on her marriage a separate statutory estate. Simms v. Kelly, 70 Ala. 429.

A right in an undistributed estate existing at the time of marriage, is property owned or held at the time of marriage, though, when it comes into the wife's possession, it is also property acquired during coverture. See Sharp v. Burns, 35 Ala. 653; Witsell v. Charleston, 7 S. Car. 88; White v. Waite, 47 Vt. 502.

Real estate conveyed to a married woman is made her separate property by an ante-nuptial agreement providing that the property that she then owned or might thereafter acquire should be her separate property. Klenke v. Koeltze, 75 Mo. 239.

Land of the husband, sold on execution, was bought by A, a friend of the wife, for a small sum. A afterwards conveyed it to the wife for the price paid at the sale, and interest; a part of the land was afterwards sold by the husband and wife, and the proceeds used to pay A. It was held that the remainder of the land was the wife's separate property. Zorn v. Tarver, 57 Tex. 388.

Where the contrary has been held, it was due to the peculiar wording of the statutes. See Hayt v. Parks, 39 Conn. 357. As that the deed must be in terms to her separate use; Merrill v. Bullock, 105 Mass. 486; or that she can only acquire a separate estate when the instrument conveying it contains a power of disposition by deed, will, or otherwise. Leighton v. Sheldon, 16 Minn. 243.

A conveyance of land in Missouri from husband to wife will be regarded as for her sole and separate use, although the deed does not so state. Smith v. Seiberling, 35 Fed. Rep. 677.

In North Carolina where land was bought by the husband with the wife's money prior to the adoption of the constitution of 1868, and subsequently deeded by the husband to the wife, it cannot be sold to satisfy a judgment against the husband, there being proof sideration must, as a rule, be advanced by the wife.¹ The words "gift" and "grant" in a statute allowing a married woman "to take by gift or grant" embrace all methods of acquiring land by deed,² and include leases³ and deeds of bargain and sale,⁴ and also apply equally to personalty.⁵

(6) Property Acquired by Exchange.—Property acquired by the wife by exchange is as much her separate estate as property acquired by purchase.⁶ Thus, personalty received in exchange for other separate property is itself separate property.⁷ Under this head may be put the conversion of the wife's lands into money, in which case the proceeds will be her separate estate,⁸ notwithstanding the lands may have been acquired by the wife during marriage, and before the passage of the Married Woman's Law.⁹

(7) Property Acquired by Will or by Succession.—Property acquired by a married woman by devise, bequest, descent, or distribution is her separate statutory estate.¹⁰ Under this head is of a verbal agreement between husband and wife at the time of purchase that the land should belong to her, and there being no proof that the deed to the wife was made by the husband with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors. Woodruff v. Bowles, 104 N. Car. 197.

1. Thus, the mere recital in a deed from a husband to his wife that a valuable consideration has been paid to the use of the husband from money of her statutory separate estate, does not create in the wife a statutory estate in the land, unless the consideration was in fact paid as recited. Hamaker v. Hamaker, 88 Ala. 431.

Under the Missouri statute, however, where a sale of land has been made to a wife at the husband's instance, he furnishing the purchase money, an investment of the proceeds in other land for the wife gives the husband no interest therein, subject to his debts, though he receives such proceeds, and places them in bank in his own name, pending the purchase of the other land. Gilliland v. Gilliland, 96 Mo. 522.

Under the California law the fact that a deed of lands was made to a wife "for her separate estate," even if construed to mean that the consideration money was paid from her separate property only, creates a separate estate in her prima facie, and does not preclude one claiming under her husband from showing that the purchase money was paid from community funds, and hence that the lands are community property. McComb v. Spangler, 71 Cal. 418.

Where land is conveyed to a married woman by deed expressing a consideration in money, such purchase money, if not shown to have been paid from the separate money of the wife, is presumed to have been the money of the husband. Bucks v. Moore, 36 Mo. App. 529.

8. Sometimes this is provided for by statute. Sumner v. McCray, 60 Mo. 493; Sloan v. Torry, 78 Mo. 623.

9. Brevard v. Jones, 50 Ala. 221.

10. Uhrig v. Horstman, 8 Bush (Ky.) 172; Troxler v. Colley, 33 La. Ann. 425; Vavasseur v. Mouton, 34 La. Ann. 1044; Kellogg v. Kellogg, 63 Miss. 631; White v. Waite, 47 Vt. 502; Alexander v. Alexander, 85 Va. 353.

Where land was devised in trust for the sole, separate and exclusive use of a married woman and her children, she included a distributive share which vested, before the wife's marriage, upon her father's death, but was not paid until after the marriage.¹

(8) Property Held by Husband in Trust.—Property conveyed to the husband in trust for his wife is her statutory separate estate.² Whenever a husband obtains possession of his wife's separate to receive the rents, which were to be subject to her control and disposition as if she were a feme sole, it was held that her estate was not equitable but statutory. Kellogg v. Kellogg, 63 Miss. 631.

Where a testator in a devise to one daughter limited her right of disposition, and in a devise to another, gave her the right "to make whatever disposition of it she might think proper," it was held that this last devise did not create a separate estate, the testator's manifest intent being to show that the devise was absolute, as distinguished from the qualified devise to the other daughter. Noland v. Chambers, 84 Ky. 516.

In Vermont a farm and personal property given by will to a married woman without words excluding the husband's marital rights, is not her separate estate. Hubbard v. Bugbee, 58 Vt. 172.

1. White v. Waite, 47 Vt. 507. Compare Smilie v. Siler, 35 Ala. 88; Sharp v. Burns, 35 Ala. 653.

In White v. Waite, 47 Vt. 507, the court by Ross, J., said: "While the right to a distributive share in her father's estate became vested in the daughter immediately upon the father's decease, and she became possessed of an undivided portion of the property of the estate, subject to the rights of the administrator to use a part of the same for the payment of the debts and expenses of administration, yet, the particular property did not become absolutely vested in her until the decree of the probate court making distribution of the estate became absolute. Until distribution, she had no right as against the administrator, or other heirs, if such there were, to the specific personal property which she afterwards received from the estate. When the decree distributing the estate became absolute, she, in the language of the act, 'acquired' the specific articles of personal property decreed to her and the right to a personal action for the recovery of the sum of money ordered to be paid to her."

It has been held in Texas that the interest of money acquired by devise, descent or gift belongs to the community, and is not the wife's separate property. Thus, where land was purchased for $1,200, $800 being money given the wife by her brother, and therefore her separate estate, and $400 being interest accrued thereon, it was held that the $400 interest belonged to the community, and therefore that an undivided interest of one-third of the land was subject to execution and sale to satisfy the debt of the husband. Braden v. Gose, 57 Tex. 37. But where a creditor of the husband, by vexatious proceedings, prevented the payment of a note given the wife in part payment for land, her separate estate, so that interest accrued thereon, he was not allowed to subject the interest to the payment of the husband's debt. Carlisle v. Sommer, 61 Tex. 124.

2. Jordan v. Smith, 83 Ala. 299; Rogers v. Torbert, 66 Ala. 547; Bank of Louisville v. Gray, 84 Ky. 565.

Evidence.—To support an allegation by the wife that certain lands were held in trust for her by the husband, the only evidence was the statements of the wife and her mother, from which it appeared that the legal title had for many years been in the husband; that during this time the wife had made no claim, and the husband no admission, of the trust; that prior to the husband's death he conveyed the land to his wife's mother, who immediately conveyed it to the daughter; that in the conveyance by the husband no reference to the trust was made; and that in subsequent proceedings to set aside the conveyance as in fraud of creditors, the wife interposed no defense of a trust, which was not set up until after the husband's death. It was held that this evidence was insufficient to establish the trust. Stillwell v. Stillwell (N. J. 1889), 18 Atl. Rep. 679.

Where money of a married woman was, in her husband's absence, invested in bank stock by a friend, the certificate being taken to the husband as her trustee, and he, on his return, property, whether with or without her consent, he is deemed, in the absence of evidence that she intended to make him a gift of it, to hold it in trust for his wife.¹ Where the husband purchases property for the wife, the presumption is that the money invested is the wife's separate estate.² A husband who invests money received by the wife as a gift from her father, and takes title to the property so purchased in his own name, without her written consent, is merely a trustee for the benefit of his wife.³

(9) Insurance Policy for Wife's Benefit.—A policy of life insurance taken out by the husband for the benefit of his wife is, generally, under the statutes, her separate property.⁴

(10) Choses in Action.—Choses in action may form part of a recognized the trust and paid over the dividends to her, it was held that the stock was her separate estate. Bank of Louisville v. Gray, 84 Ky. 565.

The wife acquires a statutory separate estate in property bought with her money, although the legal title is taken by the husband, if his declaration of trust alleges that it is for her benefit, and that the estate vested in her shall be an estate under the Married Woman's Law. Jordan v. Smith, 83 Ala. 299. But where lands are conveyed to the husband in trust for the wife, with contingent interests in the children which may be born of the marriage, the wife has, during the continuance of the marriage, while there is probability of other children being born, no separable interest which can be subjected to the payment of her debts. Bell v. Watkins, 82 Ala. 512.

1. Stickney v. Stickney, 131 U. S. 227, in which case it was held that even if there were a presumption, from the wife's allowing the husband to use her separate property, that a gift was intended, such presumption would be rebutted by evidence that she had repeatedly directed him to invest it in her name for her benefit.

2. Goodbar v. Daniel, 88 Ala. 583, in which case it was held that under the Alabama Code of 1876, §§ 2706, 2709, making a husband the trustee of his wife's statutory separate estate, and charging him with the duty of reinvesting the proceeds of its sale, he is the agent of the wife in making the investment, and any knowledge of the husband as to a fraudulent intent of the vendor, acquired while engaged in the transaction of the business as his wife's agent, is imputed to the wife as her knowledge.

3. Broughton v. Brand, 94 Mo. 169.

The New York Married Woman's Act (N. Y. Laws, 1849, ch. 375, § 2) provides that a trustee holding any property for a married woman may convey the same to her, on her written request accompanied by a certificate of the justice of the supreme court that he has examined the property and made due inquiry as to the capacity of the married woman to manage and conduct the same. It was held in Genet v. Hunt, 113 N. Y. 158, that this act was applicable only to a nominal trust, the sole object of which was to secure a married woman in the enjoyment of her separate estate.

4. An insurance policy taken out by a husband on his life, in the name of his wife as the sole beneficiary, and not by its terms excluding his marital rights, nevertheless vests in the wife as her separate estate upon the delivery of the policy. Williams v. Williams, 68 Ala. 405.

A policy of insurance for the benefit of a feme covert, though payable to her personally, if she survive a certain term of years, is within the purview of the Rhode Island statute, providing that any policy of insurance, not exceeding $10,000, for the benefit of a married woman, shall inure to her separate use and benefit. McQuitty v. Continental L. Ins. Co., 15 R. I. 573.

Under a similar statute in New Hampshire, the wife's interest in such a policy cannot be revoked by the party procuring the insurance, and assigned by him for his own benefit. Stokell v. Kimball, 59 N. H. 13.

married woman's separate estate, and may be acquired in any of the ways enumerated; as, by purchase, exchange, etc.¹

(11) Damages for a Tort.—The statutes enlarging the rights of married women, and providing for their separate estate, are broad enough, generally speaking, to embrace damages arising out of torts to their persons or property.²

d. PROPERTY BROUGHT FROM ABROAD.—Where a wife owns separate property in one jurisdiction and moves with her husband into another, such property remains her separate estate.³ But in the absence of evidence of what is the law of the State from which the parties came, the common-law rules will be applied.⁴

2. Powers of Wife—a. POWER TO TRANSFER.—The legislature, in creating a statutory separate estate for the wife may, and usually does, provide the mode of its disposal.⁵ A provision that, as to such property, the wife should "have the same rights and powers

Under the Virginia statute (Code 1887, § 2284), providing that all real and personal estate of a married woman acquired by gift, grant, or purchase shall be her separate estate, a note assigned to her after marriage constitutes such estate. Tate v. Perkins, 85 Va. 169.

2. It is so in Wisconsin by Wisconsin Laws 1881, ch. 99; Shanahan v. Madison, 57 Wis. 276; although before the enactment of that statute it was held otherwise in Gibson v. Gibson, 43 Wis. 23; 28 Am. Rep. 527. The New York statute accords with that of Wisconsin. Mann v. Marsh, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 372. The Michigan statute has been construed similarly. Berger v. Jacobs, 21 Mich. 215; Leonard v. Pope, 27 Mich. 145; and so has that of Ohio. Stevenson v. Morris, 37 Ohio St. 17. See also Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 633; 32 Am. Rep. 397. The Illinois rule is the same. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Dunn, 52 Ill. 260; Hayner v. Smith, 63 Ill. 430; 14 Am. Rep. 124; Martin v. Robson, 65 Ill. 137; 16 Am. Rep. 578; Hennies v. Vogel, 66 Ill. 401; Hawver v. Hawver, 78 Ill. 414; Davenport v. Ryan, 81 Ill. 218; and the rule is the same under the Maryland statute. Clark v. Wootton, 63 Md. 113.

3. State v. Chatham Nat. Bank, 80 Mo. 626.

Money brought to this country from another by a married woman, and used by her in trade as her individual property with her husband's consent, becomes her separate estate, together with the personalty in which it is vested. State v. Smit, 20 Mo. App. 50.

4. Van Ingen v. Brabrook, 27 Ill. App. 401; citing Hanchett v. Rice, 22 Ill. App. 442; King v. O'Brien, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 49. In the latter case a marriage had taken place in England. The parties subsequently coming to New York, the wife brought with her certain money, part of which belonged to her before marriage, and part had been acquired in England by her own labor subsequent to marriage. It was held that the title to, and property in, said money was to be governed and determined by the common law of England, in the absence of proof of any statutory enactment of that country on the subject, and that the statutory enactments of New York had no bearing on the question.

In Hydrick v. Burke, 30 Ark. 124, it was held that in order to protect a married woman in the enjoyment of property brought by herself and her husband into the State, she must show that she acquired a perfect title at the place of purchase, and that the instrument under which she claims was recorded either in the old State or under the laws of the new one.

5. In Maryland a married woman is not restricted in the disposal of her choses in action to a joint conveyance with her husband. Trader v. Lowe, 45 Md. 1. But in Alabama the wife cannot dispose of the corpus of her statutory separate estate except by an instrument in writing, signed by herself and husband, and attested or acknowledge as required by law. Where the husband in her presence sold her property to another in payment of his debt, and she expressed herself as satisfied with the arrangement, she was not precluded from bringing an action of trover against such purchaser for the conversion of the property. Williams v. Auerbach, 57 Ala. 90; Reeves v. Linam, 57 Ala. 564.

A deed duly attested, executed and acknowledged by the husband and wife, without fraud in its execution, vests a legal title in the grantee notwithstanding the consideration is in part a debt due by the husband. Connor v. Armstrong, 86 Ala. 262. Where, at the time of the signing and acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman of her separate estate, the husband did not join, and a bill was filed before he signed and delivered the deed to subject the property to the payment of debts contracted by her, it was held that there was no alienation until after the bill was filed, and that the lis pendens began from the service of process on the wife. Rooney v. Michael, 84 Ala. 585.

Where a husband entered the confederate army in Texas in 1862, and after his discharge in 1865 continued to reside without the State until his death, his wife's deed of her separate property, executed in 1869, in which he did not join, and before a divorce was procured, was held valid; his absence authorizing her to convey her separate estate as a feme sole. Clements v. Ewing, 71 Tex. 270.

In Bellesheim's Estate, 1 N. Y. Supp. 276, the Surrogate held that under New York Laws 1890, ch. 90, providing that no conveyance of her separate property by a married woman "shall be valid without the consent of her husband" her grantee took a title valid as against all the world except the husband, although he did not consent.

In California it was held that the assent of the husband must be expressed by his signature to the conveyance, made by himself, and that he could not delegate another to subscribe his name to such conveyance by letter of attorney. Meagher v. Thompson, 49 Cal. 189. But he need not be a formal party to the deed. Bray v. Clapp, 80 Me. 277. In Minnesota it was held that his consent to a conveyance of real estate might, under the statute, be either oral or in writing, express or implied. Clague v. Washburn, 42 Minn. 371.

Under ch. 248, Laws of New York, 1879, providing that a married woman may assign a policy of insurance in her favor "with the husband's written consent" it is sufficient for the husband simply to join with the wife in the execution of an assignment. Anderson v. Goldsmidt, 103 N. Y. 617.

In Georgia no contract of sale of a wife as to her separate estate with her husband or her trustee is valid unless allowed by the superior court of the county of her domicile. Fulgham v. Pate, 77 Ga. 454.

The statutes do not remove the disability of infancy, and a conveyance of a married woman of her statutory estate while yet an infant, though joined in by her husband, is voidable as to her. Schafer v. Lavretta, 57 Ala. 14.

Where a married woman assigned her separate property to a stock broker to secure her husband's gambling speculations in stocks on margins, it was held that she could maintain a suit in equity against the broker's assignee, with notice, to compel a re-transfer to herself. Tantum v. Arnold, 42 N. J. Eq. 60.

Acknowledgment.—See ACKNOWLEDGMENT, vol. 1, p. 143. Where the statute requires that the deed shall be separately acknowledged by the wife, it will be void and pass no title unless the statute is fully complied with. Coffey v. Hendricks, 66 Tex. 676; Davis v. Agnew, 67 Tex. 206. And this is not affected by the fact that at the time of the conveyance she was living separate from her husband. Danglarde v. Elias, 80 Cal. 65. The testimony of the notary who took the acknowledgment is admissible to contradict the statements of his certificate, and to show that the wife did not know that the deed conveying the land included therein her separate property, although the certificate of acknowledgment shows on its face full compliance with the statute. Mays v. Pryce, 95 Mo. 603.

In Arkansas, under the constitution authorizing married women to convey their separate estate as if sole, the acknowledgment by a married woman of a deed conveying her separate property is not required in order to pass the title as between the parties. Criscoe v. Hambrick, 47 Ark. 235.

The interest inherited by a married woman from the community estate of her deceased father or mother is not an exception to the Texas statute that allows a married woman's separate estate to be conveyed only by the joint deed of husband and wife, accompanied by a certificate of the privy examination and acknowledgment of the wife. Stephens v. Shaw, 68 Tex. 261.

Power of Attorney.—Where the statute requires a deed conveying the separate estate of a married woman to be signed by both husband and wife, a power of attorney executed by the wife alone, and acknowledged, confers no authority on her husband to sell such separate estate. Cannon v. Boutwell, 53 Texas 626; Peak v. Brinson, 71 Tex. 310; Cardwell v. Rogers, 76 Tex. 37; Trimmer v. Heagy, 16 Pa. St. 484; Sexton v. Pickering, 3 Rand. (Va.) 468; Baxter v. Bodkin, 25 Ind. 172; Fowler v. Shearer, 7 Mass. 14; 1 Bishop's Law of Married Women, § 593. Yet in Green v. Swift, 49 Cal. 261, it is only said that it is doubtful whether the husband can in such a case, by power executed by himself alone, delegate to an attorney in fact the power to sign his name for the conveyance of his wife's separate property.

But the Pennsylvania statutes relating to the rights and powers of married women over the control and disposition of their separate property do not affect the rights of married women whose husbands are non-resident aliens, and when such is the case a married woman may transfer property by power of attorney without the joinder of her husband. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Loftus (Pa.), 19 Atl. Rep. 347; 25 W. N. C. (Pa.) 459.

Covenants.—A married woman is bound by the covenants contained in her deeds, but only to the extent of her separate interest in the property conveyed. Hemmiller v. Hatheway, 60 Mich. 391. The remedy for a breach of such covenants is in equity. Barlow v. Delany, 36 Fed. Rep. 577.

Contracts to Convey—Specific Performance.—Under the New Jersey Revision, p. 637, § 5, a married woman may contract to sell her real estate, and specific performance thereof will be decreed, after her husband's death, against anyone who purchases with knowledge of, and expressly subject to the agreement. Union Brick, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Lorillard, 44 N. J. Eq. 1; and see Parks v. Barrowman, 83 Ind. 561. But in Alabama it has been held that the power conferred by the Code, § 2373, upon a married woman to convey land belonging to her separate estate implies a power to rescind the contract of sale for her own protection. Scott v. Griggs, 49 Ala. 185. But see Knox v. Childersburg Land Co., 86 Ala. 180.

Exchange.—A married woman may make a valid exchange of her statutory separate property, provided it is conveyed in the manner required by law. Parker v. Parker, 88 Ala. 365; Pollak v. Graves, 72 Ala. 347; Woods v. Dunlap, 73 Ala. 169.

Estoppel.—See MARRIED WOMEN, vol. 14, p. 637.

The representation by the grantor in a deed that she was a single woman, will not estop her from setting up her coverture to avoid such deed because not executed by her husband, where the grantee paid no consideration, and incurred no liability therefor. Nell v. Dayton, 43 Minn. 242.

Where a husband acquires land in his own name with the consideration paid by a purchaser of his wife's separate estate, who acquires no title, the deed being void as to her, and the wife during coverture brings suit against her husband and others to assert her right to such land, reciting in her pleading that she had executed such deed to such first purchaser and had received the consideration, and a decree was obtained giving her such land, and declaring it her separate estate, that will not estop her or such second purchaser from recovering the land from the first purchaser or his vendee. Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 32 W. Va. 134.

Under the laws of Colorado a married woman has the power to do what she will with her own property, and where upon notice that condemnation proceedings by which her property is sought to be effected are wholly void, a wife voluntarily accepts a sum of money equal to the amount of a void award as compensation for her property, she must be regarded as acting wholly independently of such proceedings, and cannot thereafter recover possession of the premises nor further compensation for the taking. Colorado, etc., R. Co. v. Allen, 13 Colo. 229.

Where a married woman is allowed by statute to dispose of an insurance policy taken on her husband's life, for her benefit, if she has no child, and she assigns such policy while her child is living, the assignment will be operative as if unmarried," has been held to give her power to convey and dispose thereof freely without the husband's consent, save only that to pass his curtesy he must join in the deed.¹ But provisions that it should "be under her sole control, and be held, owned, possessed, and enjoyed by her the same as though she were sole and unmarried," or that it should "continue hers as fully after marriage as before," have been held not to give her the power of disposal without the husband's assent,² though she could execute a lease thereof for a term of years.³

b. POWER TO CHARGE—(1) By Contract Generally.—As a general rule a married woman may charge her statutory separate estate with her debts and contracts made in reference thereto,⁴ and the against her after the death of the child. Brick v. Campbell, 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 305.

1. Beal v. Warren, 2 Gray (Mass.) 447; Albin v. Lord, 39 N. H. 196; Davis v. Herrick, 37 Me. 397; Collen v. Kelsey, 39 Me. 298; Blood v. Humphrey, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 660; Colver v. Curry, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 371; Roper v. Roper, 29 Ala. 247; Hooper v. Smith, 23 Ala. 639; McCroam v. Pope, 17 Ala. 612; Cooke v. Husbands, 11 Md. 492; Maiben v. Bobe, 6 Fla. 381.

2. Cole v. Van Riper, 44 Ill. 58; Bressler v. Kent, 61 Ill. 426; 14 Am. Rep. 67; Scott v. Scott, 13 Ind. 225; Walker v. Reamy, 36 Pa. St. 410; Mahon v. Gormley, 24 Pa. St. 80; Moore v. Cornell, 68 Pa. St. 320.

Such terms give only the jus tenendi and not the jus disponendi. The power to own and enjoy is entirely different to the power to dispose, and the latter is not necessary to the exercise of the former. Cole v. Van Riper, 44 Ill. 58; Naylor v. Field, 29 N. J. L. 287; Armstrong v. Ross, 20 N. J. Eq. 109.

The power of a married woman to sell real estate without the concurrence of her husband cannot be implied, but must be given in direct terms. Bressler v. Kent, 61 Ill. 426. And the main object of such provisions seems to be not so much to declare the rights of the wife, as to negative those of her husband in regard to her property; not to enable her, but to disable him and his creditors. Pelzer v. Campbell, 15 S. Car. 581; 40 Am. Rep. 705.

3. Parent v. Callerand, 64 Ill. 97.

Under the Code of Alabama, which makes the husband the trustee of the wife's statutory separate estate, and provides that it can be sold only by a joint deed of husband and wife, the power given the husband to manage and control the land will include the power to make a lease thereof for a year or less. A lease for a greater period is a species of sale, which must be in writing and signed by the wife to make it valid; though such a lease by the husband alone would still be good for a year. Chandler v. Jost, 81 Ala. 411.

4. McCord v. Blackwell, 31 S. Car. 125.

An agreement by a married woman to pay for the board of her husband and son with her earnings is binding on her, though her earnings are her separate property. Sellmeyer v. Welch, 47 Ark. 485. And she will be held bound by a compromise, consented to by her and authorized by her husband, where it subjects her separate property to the payment of her separate debts. Thornhill v. State Nat. Bank, 34 La. Ann. 1171.

A contract to build a house on her land is one in reference to her separate property, and when signed by herself and husband she will be liable upon her acceptance of an order drawn upon them jointly by the contractor. Pierce v. Kittredge, 115 Mass. 374. But a contract between herself and husband that she will support their family out of her own means in consideration of his acting as her agent in the management of her separate estate, is void as to her creditors. Third Nat. Bank v. Guenther, 1 N. Y. Supp. 753. And where a wife sued to recover the proceeds of a check belonging to her separate estate, and placed by her husband in defendant's hands and by him collected, the defendant was allowed to show, under the plea of payment, that it was received in payment for goods sold and delivered to the husband and intent to charge may be inferred from the surrounding circumstances, a specific agreement not being always necessary.¹ In some States she must have a separate estate in order that her contracts may be enforced against her.² She may be liable upon her contracts, though not charged upon the separate estate, where they wife, though the articles were not of a class for which her separate estate was liable. Jeffries v. Castleman, 68 Ala. 432.

Where married women are allowed by statute to engage in business, the reception of profits by a married woman executrix, is not such an engaging in business as to render her separate estate liable for the firm debts, she being protected by coverture from any demand against her as partner. Brasfield v. French, 59 Miss. 632. And where it appeared that the person from whom a married woman ordered dresses for herself and children knew that she was married and lived with her husband and was not engaged in separate business, and the husband had paid bills previously contracted by the wife, the fact that she ordered her name put at the head of the list was not sufficient evidence that the debt was contracted on her special promise. Kegney v. Ovens, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 600.

No change in a statutory separate estate existing and liable for a debt at the time it was contracted, can defeat proceedings instituted to subject it to the payment of the debt. Cheatham v. Newman, 59 Ala. 547; and by no contract between husband and wife can her statutory estate be converted into an equitable one with power in her to charge it in a manner not allowed by the statute. Loeb v. McCullough, 78 Ala. 533; overruling Turner v. Kelly, 70 Ala. 85. But the contracts of a married woman are enforceable only against her separate estate owned at the time of entering into the engagement. Crockett v. Doriot, 85 Va. 240.

In an action to enforce a contract against a married woman, the burden is upon the plaintiff to show that she was capable of making the contract. Brown v. Thomson, 31 S. Car. 436. In New York if the contract creates no express charge upon the separate estate, the plaintiff must show that it was for the benefit of such estate or about the trade or business carried on by her. Nash v. Mitchell, 71 N. Y. 199; 27 Am. Rep. 38. Property acquired since the passage of a married woman's act making it her separate estate cannot be charged with a liability contracted prior to the passage of the statute. Fallis v. Keys, 35 Ohio St. 265.

Where the husband is required to join in the contract to make it chargeable upon the separate estate, in case of his insanity, confinement in State's prison, or final separation from the wife, she may bind it by her sole contract. Davis v. Saladee, 57 Tex. 326; Shin v. Bosart, 72 Ind. 105; Carstens v. Hanselman, 61 Mich. 426; Armstrong v. Ross, 20 N. J. Eq. 109.

1. Conlin v. Cantrell, 64 N. Y. 217.

But it has been held that the intent must appear. Harshberger v. Alger, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 52.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that money borrowed by a married woman on a post-dated check, she having a separate estate, carrying on business in relation thereto, and keeping a bank account in her own name, was borrowed for the benefit of her separate estate, and she will be held liable therefor. Nash v. Mitchell, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 471.

Where a butcher refused to give further credit to a husband, and the wife, who conducted the household affairs and had a separate estate liable to be charged with her debts, though she carried on no separate business, said in reply to his remark that if they wanted to run a bill he would charge it to her, "You will not get cheated out of it. If you do, I will see you paid," it was held not to be a sufficient indication of an intent to charge the separate estate, and the butcher could not recover. Salmon v. McEnany, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 87. And see Strong v. Moul, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 644.

2. And if the record of a judgment does not disclose the fact that she has a separate estate that is liable for her debts, the judgment is void. Canal Bank v. Partee, 99 U. S. 325.

A conveyance of land jointly to the husband and wife does not create in her a sufficient separate estate to enable her to charge it with the payment of her debts. Baker v. Lamb, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 519.

A vendor's lien is enforceable against the separate property of a married woman. Sample v. Cochran, 84 Ind. 594.

Whenever she buys goods on credit, she benefits her separate estate to the extent of the purchase, if she had no separate estate before she acquired one by the purchase. Speck v. Gurnee, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 644. And it seems that a married woman must be deemed to have benefited her separate estate by the performance of all the contracts she makes, and that she is liable to have them enforced against her. Murphy v. Carpenter, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 15.

In Pennsylvania she may bind her separate estate for services necessary in harvesting, housing and marketing a crop. Botts v. Knabb, 116 Pa. St. 28; and her recorded contract for supplies for her separate plantation binds the crops grown that year. Forrester v. Mann, 30 La. Ann. 542.

Services rendered in procuring a loan of money to remove a mortgage from the separate estate is one for its benefit. Patrick v. Littell, 36 Ohio St. 79; 38 Am. Rep. 552. The fact that a married woman received money on her promise to repay it, and gave a bond and mortgage executed upon her land, is sufficient evidence that it was borrowed for the benefit of the separate estate. Williamson v. Duffy, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 312. So also where she paid money borrowed by her to the mortgagee of her real estate, who afterwards discharged the lien, it was held sufficient to support a finding by a referee that the loan was made for the benefit of the separate estate. Patteson v. Graham, 1 N. Y. Supp. 2. A purchase of groceries to be used for the family, upon an express promise to pay for the same, and a statement that she owns real estate and will pay for what she gets, is a benefit to the estate and she will be bound to pay the purchase price. Von Mallen v. Furhmann, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 402.

A contract for the employment of an agent to overlook the tenantry and gather in her portion of the products, or money rent, is binding and satisfaction may be had out of the separate estate. Allen v. Johnson, 48 Miss. 413. Before recovery can be had on the distribution of the separate estate of a married woman, it must be shown that the repairs, to make which the money was borrowed, were necessary; McMullen's Appeal, 107 Pa. St. 90. Where she represents the articles purchased to be for the use of her separate estate, she is estopped to deny that they were so used, and the burden of proof is upon her to show that the plaintiff knew at the time of the purchase that they were not to be used as represented. Brown v. Thomson, 31 S. Car. 436.

The mere fact that horses are owned by a married woman is not sufficient to charge her on an implied promise to pay for feed furnished on the credit of her husband. Stevens v. Mayberry, 82 Me. 65, nor is a contract for insurance on her separate property one for the betterment of her estate. American Ins. Co. v. Avery, 60 Ind. 566. Money borrowed for repairs on the separate estate, and actually applied to that purpose, cannot be recovered, though had the contract been with the materialmen the estate would have been liable. Sellers v. Heinbaugh, 117 Pa. St. 218. The sale of stocks, deposited by a married woman as collateral for the payment of a loan on a promissory note, made by herself and husband, accompanied by a written authority to sell without notice to the pledgors on non-payment of the note, cannot be restrained or the return of the stocks compelled, though the money was not paid for necessities nor for the improvement of the separate estate. Dando's Appeal, 94 Pa. St. 76.

The separate estate of a married woman cannot be made liable on a mechanic's lien for improvements not authorized by her. Warren v. Smith, 44 Tex. 245; though a lien may be created by an oral contract, Wadsworth v. Hodge, 88 Ala. 500; or may be acquired under a contract with an authorized agent. Youngblood v. McAnally, 88 Ala. 512.

The contract may be made by the husband as her agent, with her knowledge and approval. Garwin v. Watkins (Fla. 1892), 10 So. Rep. 818; and the fact that she was present and saw the work done, made no objection, consulted with her husband concerning the improvements, and cautioned the workmen about placing stones in her garden, is sufficient evidence of an implied promise to pay for the repairs and materials, though the contract was made by the husband who swears that defendant did not authorize him to have the improvements made, Mackey v. Webb, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 638. But if the husband, without authority ordered the work done, and there was no evidence of any ratification by the wife, and it appeared that the credit was given to the husband, and all payments were received from him, she could not be held liable; Bannen v. McCahill (Supreme Ct.), 8 N. Y. Supp. 916; though where a statute allows the husband to contract for the erection or repair of buildings situated on lands forming part of the wife's separate estate, the consent of the wife is not necessary for the lien of a mechanic or materialman to attach. Ex parte Schmidt, 62 Ala. 252.

The husband is entitled, upon the dissolution of the community, to be paid from the estate of the wife the amount of the enhanced value of her separate estate resulting from improvements placed thereon by him; Succession v. Roth, 33 La. Ann. 540; and where a wife had trouble with her husband and expelled him from the home, he was held entitled to recover the expenses incurred by him in making improvements on her estate, and the same could be made a charge on the premises in his favor. Finlayson v. Finlayson, 17 Oregon 347. But where a statute provided that no trust should result in favor of a person paying the consideration where the title was taken in the name of another, and the husband purchased land in the name of his wife, and after the conveyance leased the same, he was not allowed to recover for improvements made thereon without a promise on the part of the wife to reimburse him. Gould v. Gould (Supreme Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 608. It does not establish a promise to pay for improvements, as having been beneficial to her, where a wife, after the death of her husband, told his administrator that she was willing to do what was right in regard to certain improvements made by her husband on her property which they had occupied together, and was willing to allow $500 for them, which proposition was not accepted, and no promise on the part of the wife is implied from her knowledge that work was being done, to pay her husband for materials furnished and improvements made on premises belonging to her and occupied by them together. Norton v. Norton (Supreme Ct.), 1 N. Y. Supp. 552.

Though a married woman has no power under the statute to borrow money, yet if the money, or any part of it, is used for the benefit of her separate estate, she is liable for the amount used. Shocklett v. Polk, 51 Miss. 378. Where a married woman authorized her husband to contract in matters relating to, and for the benefit of her separate estate, and in executing such contract to use the name of a firm ostensibly composed of herself and husband, she was held liable upon an obligation so executed, and this without regard to the question as to whether such a firm in fact exists, or as to whether, as matter of law, they were capable of assuming the relation of co-partners. Noel v. Kinney, 106 N. Y. 74; 60 Am. Rep. 423.

In Alabama, the estate is liable where the articles are purchased by the husband whether authorized by the wife or not. Lewis v. Dillard, 66 Ala. 1; but the articles must be such as the necessities of the family require and appropriated to the family use. Mitchell v. Dillard, 57 Ala. 317.

The following have been held not to be such articles of necessity, or for the comfort and support of the household, as will charge the wife's separate estate: Goods supplied to a married woman for the purpose of running a boarding house, though the family derived their support therefrom, Clark v. Hay, 98 N. Car. 421; services rendered to a wife concerning her separate estate, Lee v. Winston, 68 Ala.

402; a smokehouse, carriage house and fencing, Lee v. Campbell, 61 Ala. 12; a reaping machine. McCormick v. Muth, 49 Iowa 536; gutters, spouts, stovepipes, Ridley v. Hereford, 66 Ala. 261; nor groceries furnished her son and his family, living by themselves, Hart v. Goldsmith, 51 Conn. 479; but necessary clothing for her minor children, though at the time away at school, are necessities within the statute for which the wife's estate will be liable, Wright v. Strauss, 73 Ala. 227; and also the funeral expenses of her mother, who lived and died in the household, leaving no estate, Bair v. Robinson, 108 Pa. St. 247; 56 Am. Rep. 198; also meat used in the family, though purchased on the husband's credit, Watkins v. Mason, 11 Oregon 72. But in such suit facts must be averred and shown sufficient to bring the case within the statute, Smith v. Sherwin, 11 Oregon 269; house rent, if necessary for the family and suitable for their degree and condition in life will be charged on the separate estate, Wright v. Merriweather, 85 Ala. 183; and servants necessarily employed and residing in the family are part of the household, and necessities purchased for them can be charged upon the statutory separate estate. Pippin v. Jones, 52 Ala. 161. Whether or not a cooking stove is a necessary is a question of fact for the jury, Berry v. Henderson, 102 N. Car. 525; and under the Mississippi Code allowing a wife to contract for supplies for her plantation, is included whatever was meant by necessities in the former statute, and whether an article comes within the class is to be determined by the agricultural usage. Wright v. Walton, 56 Miss. 1.

The fact that the husband contracted the debt in his own name and gave his note for it with sureties, and that the creditor recovered judgment on the note against him and his sureties, does not affect the liability of the wife's statutory separate estate, Wright v. Rice, 56 Ala. 43; and the acceptance of a note given by the husband for family supplies is a mere change in the form of the debt and not a payment, and the wife may be held liable though the goods were originally charged to the husband. Black v. Sippy, 15 Oregon 574.

Where a husband kept an account with a merchant running through several years, some of the articles purchased being such as the statutory estate of the wife was liable for, and each year made payments with the rents of his wife's estate, such payments extinguished so much of the debt as was first incurred, without regard to the articles of which it was composed; and if, after such payments, any part of the balance was composed of articles for the support and maintenance of the family, the wife's estate would be liable for the amount of such necessities. Lee v. Tannenbaum, 62 Ala. 501.

In order to charge an estate it should have had an existence at the making of the contract, and have continued up to the institution of the suit; Pippin v. Jones, 52 Ala. 161; and where a married woman was declared "a free dealer with the right to sue and be sued, and to manage her own estate," by a private act of the legislature, it destroyed her husband's trusteeship and exempted her estate from liability for necessities of the household, though it was otherwise as to articles furnished before the enactment. Halliday v. Jones, 57 Ala. 525.

Where a husband has paid for family expenses and supplies for a wife's plantation, for which her statutory estate is liable, he cannot claim to be reimbursed out of her estate. Gilkey v. Pollock, 82 Ala. 503.

In order to subject the wife's separate estate to a sale, it must be based on a judgment in a suit against both husband and wife, or preceded by a judgment against the husband, O'Connor v. Chamberlain, 59 Ala. 431. The transcript of the record need not state that they were furnished on the credit of her separate estate, Fenstermacher v. Xander, 116 Pa. St. 41; and there can only be a sale of the wife's estate after a personal notice to her. Cauly v. Blue, 62 Ala. 77.

The liability of a wife's statutory separate estate for contracts for necessities being statutory, does not extend to contracts made and performed in another State, where the contracting parties are domiciled. Judge v. Wright, 73 Ala. 324.

the general power to contract, it will, of course, include the power to confess a judgment.¹ The separate property will be charged with the costs of a suit brought by the wife in respect to it,² and she may bind it by an agreement to pay attorney's fees.³

(2) By Promissory Notes.—As a general rule in those States in which the rule of the common law respecting the power of a married woman to bind herself by contract, has been modified by statute, a promissory note made by a married woman as principal or surety, or indorsed by her, is binding upon her separate property.⁴ And the same is true of a note indorsed for her accommodation,⁵ or executed by her for the accommodation of her

Arbuckle, 119 Ind. 69; though in Indiana if at the time of making the contract of suretyship she represents the engagement to be for her own benefit, her separate estate will be bound. Rogers v. Union Central Ins. Co., 111 Ind. 343; 60 Am. Rep. 701.

A married woman cannot bind herself as surety on a recognizance entered into by her without any benefit arising therefrom to her separate estate, or, if capable under the enabling acts, she can only bind her separate estate, and that she does so must be expressed in the instrument. People v. Williams, 8 Daly (N. Y.) 264; Gosman v. Congie, 69 N. Y. 87.

A married woman is not bound as a surety on a note, unless it appears that she became such with the intention to bind her separate estate. State Sav. Bank v. Scott, 10 Neb. 83.

In Indiana, the rents and profits of a married woman's separate estate cannot be subjected to the payment of a note executed by her, where, by the note itself, she agreed to pay from her own separate property the amount stated therein. Richards v. O'Brien, 64 Ind. 418.

In Virginia, the contracts of a married woman, including her promissory notes, are enforceable only against her separate estate owned at the time of entering into the agreement. Crockett v. Doriot, 85 Va. 240.

Although a note given by a wife for her husband expressly binds the wife's separate estate, a policy of insurance on her husband's life is not covered thereby, since, until the death of her husband, she has no such interest in the policy as can be the subject of a charge. Milhous v. Johnson, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 639.

Where a married woman indorsed upon a promissory note: "I hereby charge my separate and personal estate for the payment of the within note," the instrument was held not to be a mortgage, in any sense, but simply a personal security, which a national bank is not prohibited from taking. Third Nat. Bank v. Blake, 73 N. Y. 260.

husband.¹ The rule includes also a note made by her jointly with her husband,² unless it appears that she signed the note only because her husband asked her to, and without knowing the use to be made of it.³ In some jurisdictions, however, the rule prevails that a married woman's promissory note, in order to be valid, must be for the benefit of her business or estate,⁴

W. Rep. 893. In the former case it was held that a married woman is liable to an indorser of her note, which he has been obliged to pay, the note having been indorsed for her accommodation, and for the purpose of being used for the benefit of her separate estate or in her separate business and whether it was in fact so used or not, was considered immaterial.

1. Bowery Nat. Bank v. Sniffen, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 394; Queens Co. Bank v. Leavitt, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 426. These cases both hold that where promissory notes are executed by a wife to her husband as mere accommodation paper, they do not constitute contracts between them; and that under the New York statute giving to married women the power to contract as if they were unmarried, and making them and their separate estate liable on their contracts, whether they relate to such separate estate or not, but excepting from the provisions of the act all contracts between husband and wife, the bank which discounts such notes for the husband is entitled to recover thereon against the wife.

2. Alexander v. Bouton, 55 Cal. 15; Baird v. Bruning, 84 Ky. 645; Fairlie v. Bloomingdale, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 220; Avery v. Vansickle, 35 Ohio St. 270.

A married woman, to secure her husband's debt, joined with him in a note and in a mortgage upon her separate property, induced by his representations that she became liable only to the extent of such property. The mortgagee took a collateral agreement from others, to which the woman and her husband were not parties, to secure any deficiency beyond the value of the property mortgaged. It was held that the wife was bound as principal, and that her liability was not restricted by the understanding with her husband, or by the collateral security taken. Alexander v. Bouton, 55 Cal. 15.

A judgment against the husband, upon the joint promissory note of himself and wife, does not merge the right to charge the wife's separate estate with the payment of the note in a subsequent action. Avery v. Vansickle, 35 Ohio St. 270.

It has been held in Missouri that where a woman, who has a separate estate, joins with her husband in a promissory note and in a deed of trust of lands, in which they have a homestead, as security for the note, the fact that she signed such deed is proof of an intention not to charge her separate estate, which accordingly is not liable for the amount of the note. Seifert v. Jones, 84 Mo. 591.

3. Schlatterer v. Nickodemus, 51 Mich. 626, where it was decided that a married woman is not bound by a promissory note which she signs jointly with her husband for the amount of a judgment against both, if it appears that she signed only because he asked her to, and without knowing the use to be made of it. This was considered only to make her a surety for her husband, and not to connect her with the consideration in such a way as to reach her separate property.

4. Saratoga Co. Bank v. Pruyn, 90 N. Y. 250; Jordon v. Keeble, 85 Tenn. 412.

A wife, although separate in property, cannot be held on her mortgage note, where the holder of the note fails to show that she was authorized by the judgment to make the mortgage, and fails to show that her pretended agent, who made the mortgage, was empowered by her to do so, and also fails to show that the consideration of the note inured to her separate benefit. Nugent v. Stark, 30 La. Ann. 492.

Where a promissory note made by a married woman and payable to the order of her husband, is indorsed and presented by him to a bank for discount, no implication or presumption can be drawn from the form of the note, or from the fact that she gave it to her husband to be discounted, that she is to be benefited by it in her business or estate; and to give it vitality it must be shown that the note was made for such purpose. Saratoga Co. Bank v. Pruyn, 90 N. Y. 250.

A person asked to buy a note in-or must have been made with reference to her separate property.¹

When a married woman is not allowed by law to enter into a contract with her husband, a note given to him is not binding on dorsed by a married woman refused until she had answered in writing certain questions. Her answers, which were dated three days after the date of the note, were to the effect that she considered her separate estate bound for it, and that she deemed herself liable to pay it if the maker failed so to do. It was held that the note and answers were to be taken as parts of the same contract, and that accordingly the wife's estate was bound. Knowles v. Toone, 96 N. Y. 534; rev'd 10 Daly (N. Y.) 388.

A married woman, separated in property from her husband and administering her own affairs, is liable on her note, without proof that it inured to her individual benefit. Cormier v. De Valcourt, 33 La. Ann. 1168.

Where a married woman bid in her husband's law books at an execution sale, and gave her promissory note for the amount of his claim to the judgment creditor, in an action to subject the wife's separate estate to the payment of said note, held that, as the note itself did not charge the wife's separate estate, and as the law books were never conveyed to the wife's sole and separate use, and were never settled upon her in any way, her separate estate could not be charged with the payment of the note. Jordon v. Keeble, 85 Tenn. 412.

1. Stowell v. Grider, 48 Ark. 220; Johnson v. Sutherland, 39 Mich. 579; Booker v. Wingo, 29 S. Car. 116; Gwynn v. Gwynn, 31 S. Car. 482; Barnum v. Young, 10 Neb. 309. But it has been held that the fact of the wife's signing a joint note with her husband, is prima facie evidence of her intention to charge her separate estate. Nelson v. McDonald (Wis. 1891), 50 N. W. Rep. 893. So, where a married woman acquires the title to property by purchase, and executes her promissory note therefor, an implication arises, in the absence of proof of a different understanding, that she thereby intended to charge her separate estate with its payment, and such implication is not affected by the fact that she, with her husband, executed a mortgage of the property purchased, to secure the payment of such note. Avery v. Van- sickle, 35 Ohio St. 270. And so again, where a married woman, having a separate estate, executes a promissory note, as surety for the principal maker, a presumption arises that she thereby intends to charge her separate estate with its payment. Williams v. Urnston, 35 Ohio St. 269; overruling Levi v. Earl, 30 Ohio St. 147, and Rice v. Columbus, etc., R. Co., 32 Ohio St. 380.

Where it appeared from the evidence, in an action against a married woman on a promissory note, made by herself and her husband jointly, that she had signed the note at her husband's request, and that the consideration for it was merchandise sold to various members of her husband's household, upon no especial arrangement by the vendor with her, it was held that it could not be therefrom inferred that it was her intention to charge her separate estate by the execution of the note. Stowell v. Grider, 48 Ark. 220.

A note given by the wife, for a debt of her husband with a stipulation that it is taken by the payee "on the credit" of her separate estate, will bind her separate estate. Orange Nat. Bank v. Traver, 7 Sawy. (U. S.) 210.

In a promissory note by a married woman to pay a certain sum "from my personal estate," these words have been construed to mean her separate estate. First Nat. Bank v. Hurlbut, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 310.

Estoppel.—A statement in a note given by a married woman, and secured by mortgage on her separate estate, that "this note is made with reference to my separate estate, and is intended to be a charge upon the same," is not such a representation, that the money borrowed was for the use of her separate estate, as will estop her from denying it. Gwynn v. Gwynn, 31 S. Car. 482. But where a married woman executes a negotiable note for the price of property, secured by mortgage on her real estate, and gives to the payee an affidavit that the note and mortgage are executed for the property purchased by her, she is estopped, as against an innocent purchaser for value of the note who relied on the representations in the affidavit, from bringing her statutory separate estate;¹ and when she is not empowered to make a contract of suretyship, she cannot be held liable upon her indorsement given to secure the debt of another.²

sult to cancel the mortgage on the grounds that the note was executed as surety of her husband, and that the affidavit was obtained by the fraud and collusion of the husband and payee of the note. Lanemm v. Schlemmer, 114 Ind. 206.

In Kentucky a married woman's separate property may be subjected to the payment of a note, executed by husband and wife, which recites that it is for materials furnished at the special instance of the wife, "to be used in the necessary repair of her house." Baird v. Bruning, 84 Ky. 645.

The South Carolina statute does not authorize a married woman to give a note for money expended on account of her child, at her request. Howard v. Kitchens, 31 S. Car. 490.

In Tennessee a promissory note in the usual form, made by a married woman, which contains nothing about the separate estate of the wife, does not constitute a charge upon the wife's personal estate, and parol evidence is not admissible to prove that the note was intended as a charge. Jordan v. Keeble, 85 Tenn. 412.

The Alabama statute creating the separate estate of a married woman does not render valid a promissory note given by her for the debt of her husband. But if partial payments have been made the wife on her note with money belonging to her equitable separate estate, or derived as income from her statutory estate, such payments cannot be reclaimed by her. Dacus v. Streety, 59 Ala. 183.

Where a married woman's note expressed a consideration on its face, parol evidence is inadmissible to show a different consideration, and the expressed consideration, to be valid, must concern her separate estate. Johnson v. Sutherland, 39 Mich. 579.

Instruction.—In South Carolina, in an action on the promissory note of a married woman, a charge as follows: "You are to say whether . . . in the execution of this note . . . she undertook to create a separate estate. If she did, . . . she is bound to pay for it;" followed by the qualification, "If the transaction was a roundabout way of assuming liability upon the part of Mrs. Agnew for the benefit of her husband, she is not bound,"—is a proper instruction. Dial v. Agnew, 28 S. Car. 454.

Recital.—In a note executed by husband and wife for borrowed money, a recital "that said sum is procured for the use and benefit of said Sarah (the wife); and for the payment of this claim, when called for, she pledges her own individual estate," will not estop the wife from showing that the loan was to her husband, and not for the benefit of herself or her estate. Kilbourn v. Brown, 56 Conn. 149. But a married woman is estopped as against a bona fide holder before maturity to assert the falsity of a statement in a note signed by her that it was given for the benefit of her separate estate. Nott v. Thomson (S. Car.), 14 S. E. Rep. 940.

1. Herron v. Frost, 9 Mont. 308; Cozzens v. Whitney, 3 R. I. 79; Angell v. McCullough, 12 R. I. 47; Fallon v. McAlonen, 15 R. I. 223. Thus in the latter case it was decided that a married woman cannot by an unsealed and unacknowledged written agreement with her husband create a lien or charge on her separate statutory estate for the repayment of money borrowed of him.

2. Russel v. People's Sav. Bank, 39 Mich. 671; 33 Am. Rep. 444.

Power to Charge by Bond.—In Pennsylvania a married woman has no power to bind herself by a bond for borrowed money, and it is immaterial that the money was borrowed for and applied to the improvement of her separate estate. Vandyke v. Wells, 103 Pa. St. 49. In New York if she has no separate estate she is not competent to enter into the contract which the bond contains, and this although she falsely represents herself to have separate estate. Wilson Sewing Machine Co. v. Fuller, 60 How. Pr. 480; for "a married woman cannot give herself a legal capacity to contract by falsely representing that she has such capacity." Baker v. Lamb, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 522. If a bond, secured by a mortgage, is given for her husband's debt, she must expressly charge her separate estate. McKeon v. Hagan, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 65.

(3) By Mortgages.—A mortgage executed by the wife upon her statutory separate estate is binding;¹ but in some States with the qualification that it must have been given to secure debts contracted for her own benefit or for the benefit of her estate.² Where a husband and wife join in a mortgage, the wife's separate estate is similarly bound.³ In those States in which a married

Bartlett*, 4 Allen (Mass.) 440; Thacher v. Churchill, 118 Mass. 108; Albin v. Lord, 39 N. H. 196; Batchelder v. Sargent, 47 N. H. 262; Messer v. Smyth, 58 N. H. 298; Thompson v. Ela, 58 N. H. 490. Compare Semple v. British Columbia Bank, 5 Sawy. (U. S.) 394.

A married woman may mortgage her land to secure her husband's debt; if, however, she gives her note for the debt, and gives a mortgage to secure the note, the note being void, the mortgage cannot be enforced. Sperry v. Dickinson, 82 Ind. 132.

Where a married woman inserted in her mortgage a declaration that she "hereby makes a payment of the moneys, hereby secured, a charge upon her other sole and separate estate," it was held that her other separate estate was not thereby charged as against one afterwards purchasing it in good faith and for value. Rourk v. Murphy, 12 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 402.

2. Jones v. Wilson, 57 Ala. 122; Fawcner v. Scottish American Mortgage Co., 107 Ind. 555; Ward v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co., 108 Ind. 301; Jouchert v. Johnson, 108 Ind. 436; Brown v. Prevost, 28 S. Car. 123. Compare McDougal v. People's Sav. Bank, 62 Miss. 663.

In Alabama, a married woman's statutory separate estate can be incumbered only for "articles of comfort and support" furnished to the family. A mere recital in a mortgage that the debt secured was the wife's debt for "supplies furnished," constituting "a proper claimant against her separate estate," is sufficient. Jones v. Wilson, 57 Ala. 122.

In an action by a married woman to set aside a mortgage on her separate real estate on the ground that it was given to secure the price of mules bought by her husband, it appeared that the plaintiff mortgaged the mules the next day after they were purchased, to secure another debt of her own. The evidence being conflicting, the court refused to disturb a finding that the plaintiff purchased the mules. Fant v. Brown, 29 S. Car. 598.

The defendant, a married woman, executed to the plaintiff a note, secured by mortgage, for $500, borrowed money which was paid into her own hands, the loan having been transacted with her in person. She afterwards delivered the money to her husband, and a few days later took from her husband his note for $500, and a mortgage on his land to secure it. It was held that the evidence justified the finding that the defendant, in executing the mortgage to the plaintiff, intended to, and did, charge her separate estate. Law v. Lipscomb, 31 S. Car. 504.

In Mississippi, a married woman cannot charge her separate estate by a deed of trust executed jointly with her husband to indemnify the surety on a recognizance of her son. Chandler v. Morgan, 60 Miss. 471.

A married woman borrowed money from a bank to pay two debts, one of which she had legal capacity to contract, and the other of which was a charge on her separate property. To secure the loan she executed a trust deed on her separate property. Default having occurred, the trustee sold and bought at the sale for a fair price, something less than the amount of the debts. No objection was made until several years after, when the married woman brought a bill to avoid the sale, on the ground that one of the debts was beyond her power to contract. The sale, however, was upheld on the ground that the contract embraced in the trust deed had been fully executed. McDougal v. People's Sav. Bank, 62 Miss. 663.

3. Jouchert v. Johnson, 108 Ind. 436; Jones v. Merritt, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 184; Avery v. Vansickle, 35 Ohio St. 270.

Where land mortgaged by a husband and wife had been acquired by the wife as a gift from her husband, and the money borrowed on the mortgage had woman is not allowed by law to charge her separate estate for the benefit of her husband, a mortgage given for a debt of the husband is necessarily void.¹

(4) By Agency of Husband.—A married woman may manage her separate estate as well by agent as in person, and may appoint her husband agent.² She will be liable for any debts or charges incurred by him in the management of the estate,³ but the authority must be shown.⁴

c. WILLS OF SEPARATE PROPERTY.—The power of a married woman to will her statutory separate property is usually regubeen used in paying off a former purchase money mortgage on the land, the mortgage should be enforced against the land to the extent that the borrowed money was thus applied. Noland v. State, 115 Ind. 529.

If a husband and wife purchase lands, taking title in her name, making partial payment of the purchase money with funds belonging to her statutory separate estate, and executing a mortgage on the lands to secure the unpaid balance, such mortgage is in equity a valid security for the debt, and, in the absence of fraud or collusion between the husband and the vendor, the wife cannot be permitted to repudiate the transaction, and charge the lands with the reimbursement of her moneys expended in the purchase. Smith v. Doe, 56 Ala. 456.

Res Judicata.—A judgment in an action to foreclose a mortgage executed by husband and wife, to secure the payment of the wife's promissory note, constitutes no bar to a subsequent action to subject the separate estate of the wife to the payment of a deficiency arising upon the sale of the property mortgaged. Avery v. Vansickle, 35 Ohio St. 270.

In Dakota, a married woman, who, with her husband, executes a mortgage upon her land, with covenants of seisin, quiet possession, and warranty, as security for a loan, is estopped from setting up title acquired after a foreclosure sale thereunder, though the mortgage is a mere lien conveying no estate in the land. Yerkes v. Hadley, 5 Dakota 324.

1. Salinas v. Turner, 33 S. Car. 231.

2. Brown v. Thomson, 31 S. Car. 436; Baxter v. Maxwell, 115 Pa. St. 469.

Ill. App. 42. But if he exceeds the authority the wife will not be bound; Arnett v. Glenn, 52 Ark. 253. And a general power to manage her separate estate does not authorize him to bind her by drawing bills of exchange, the power to draw which must be expressed. Folger v. Peterkin, 39 La. Ann. 815. But if the wife knows that her husband has exceeded his authority, she is bound to notify third persons dealing with him. Bergen v. Keiser, 17 Ill. App. 505.

4. Wallace v. Monroe, 22 Ill. App. 602; Wadsworth v. Hodge, 88 Ala. 500; Porter v. Staten, 64 Miss. 421; Hamblet v. Steen, 65 Miss. 474.

The separate estate of a married woman cannot be charged with the debts of a company, to the amount of stock standing in her name, where the stock was entered on the books of the company by the authority of her husband, a director, who voted and represented it, and it did not appear that she had authorized or ratified his acts, or claimed any interest in the stock, or received any dividends therefrom. Longdale Iron Co. v. Pomeroy Iron Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 448; and it is a question for the jury whether upon the evidence the agency was authorized. McCord v. Blackwell, 31 S. Car. 125.

A party who credits the husband individually may charge the wife on discovering his agency. Miller v. Watt, 70 Ga. 385.

If a wife avails herself of the result of her husband's fraud, while acting as agent in reference to her separate property, she is liable therefor as though unmarried. Rush v. Dilks, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 282; and where he knowingly leased her real estate for the unlawful sale of liquor, it was held that the State had a lien thereon for the fines imposed on the seller. Hardten v. State, 32 Kan. 637.

lated by the statutes creating the estate, most of the separate property acts giving her the authority to do so.¹

3. Liability for Husband's Debts.—As a general rule, it may be said the statutes of the various States exempt the wife's statutory separate estate from liability for the debts of the husband,² and,

1. See MARRIED WOMEN, vol. 14, p. 598; WILLS.

In 2 Jarm. Wills (5th Am. ed.), 38, is given a list of the States in which married women may dispose of general property by will.

The provisions of the New Hampshire Laws of 1845, 46 and 60, permit a married woman, only with her husband's consent, to dispose by will of property not held under the law of 1846 for her sole and separate use; but see now Gen. Laws 1878, ch. 183, p. 435; Sanborn v. Batchelder, 51 N. H. 426. The Illinois Rev. Sts. 1845, ch. 109, conferred upon married women the power to dispose of their separate estate, both real and personal, by will; and where a wife, during coverture, executed a will devising real estate which she inherited previous to her marriage in 1860, it was held that the statute of 1861, providing that "all property belonging to any married woman as her sole and separate property, or which any woman hereafter married owns at the time of her marriage, shall be and remain during coverture her sole and separate property," and be held, owned, possessed and enjoyed by her the same as though she was sole and unmarried," enlarged the meaning of the term "separate estate" so as to embrace property owned by her at the time of marriage, and that the devise was valid. Emmert v. Hays, 89 Ill. 11.

In Mississippi a devise by a married woman, to her brother, of separate real estate which had been occupied by herself and husband as a homestead, was held valid. Kelly v. Alfred, 65 Miss. 495.

2. Stimson's Am. St. Law, §§ 6410, 6420; Bibb v. Pope, 43 Ala. 190; Bowman v. Kaufman, 30 La. Ann. 1021; Corning v. Lewis, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 51; 36 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 425; Salinas v. Turner, 33 S. Car. 231; Lobman v. Kennedy, 51 Ala. 163; McElvin v. Taylor, 30 La. Ann. 552.

Not even where the separate property consisted of store fixtures and other utensils which she permitted her husband to use in his business. Mink v. Crilly, 22 Ill. App. 542; Leinkauf

v. Barnes, 66 Miss. 207. But where she gives her husband the use of her farm and the personalty thereon, his creditors may attach hay severed by him from the land before the license is revoked. Plaisted v. Hair, 150 Mass. 275. And where a married woman went into business with a stock of goods purchased with her separate means, and bought on credit and in her husband's name, and replenished the stock from time to time, and so continued for several years, and it could not be shown how much of capital and how much of profits were used by her in keeping up the stock of goods, it was subjected to her husband's debts. Smith v. Bailey, 66 Tex. 553. And so, also, where land was purchased in the wife's name with the husband's money after a debt accrued on which a judgment was founded. Merrill v. Jose, 81 Me. 22.

In Alabama the wife can neither sell nor mortgage her separate property for the payment of her husband's debts. Bibb v. Pope, 43 Ala. 190.

In Louisiana a married woman may bind her separate estate by an engagement to pay the debt of her husband, by complying with the Louisiana statute enabling married women to contract debts. Keller v. Ruiz, 21 La. Ann. 283. But a married woman, even though separate in property, cannot be held liable for a debt contracted by her husband, unless it be affirmatively shown that it inured to her separate benefit. Bowman v. Kaufman, 30 La. Ann. 1021.

Where a husband purchased lands with moneys belonging to the corpus of his wife's statutory estate and took the title in his own name, the wife was not allowed to enforce her equity against a judgment creditor who had no notice prior to the levy, nor against a bona fide purchaser from the husband without notice. Preston v. McMillan, 58 Ala. 84. And where the husband converted property transferred to him by his wife's bailee, her right to the funds in the hands of a receiver appointed on her petition, though held superior to that of the bailee, was not held superior to the rights of general creditors provin the absence of fraud, his creditors have, as a usual thing, no rights whatever against her property.¹ The husband may labor thereupon as her agent, or even make improvements thereupon, without, in the absence of actual fraud, making it in any way liable for his debts.² In some States the wife cannot even charge ing their demands before distribution. Rieper v. Rieper, 79 Mo. 352.

Money Paid for Entering Horses at a Fair.—Money was paid by a wife for the purpose of entering horses belonging to her as contestants for premiums offered by an agricultural society. The horses were entered in the name of her husband, there being no rule of the society requiring the horses to be entered in the name of the real owner. Such entrance money was returnable by the rules of the society. It was held that the wife was entitled thereto, and that the money was not subject to a garnishment by a judgment creditor of the husband. McArthur v. Garman, 71 Iowa 34.

Property Bought on Credit.—When a married woman, having a separate estate, buys property on the credit of such estate, she can hold the property against her husband's creditors, and in an action of trespass brought by her against a sheriff for seizing the property on a judgment against her husband, evidence is admissible to show her ownership and that the property was bought by her on the credit of her separate estate. Sixbee v. Bowen, 91 Pa. St. 149.

Pleading.—Where the wife seeks by bill to enjoin a creditor of her husband from selling property by virtue of a judgment and execution against her husband, upon the ground that it is her separate property, she must allege in her bill whether it is her equitable or her legal separate estate; and if the property be claimed by purchase, she is held to full and strict proof that it was paid for with her money, and in the absence of such proof, the property is presumed to have belonged to the husband. Storrs v. Storrs, 23 Fla. 274.

Where a piano bought by the wife and mortgaged for the purchase money was attached as her husband's and the mortgagee brought replevin, it was held that he could only enforce his remedy in equity. Kimball v. Silvers, 22 Mo. App. 520.

well v. Hill, 47 N. H. 414; Webster v. Hildreth, 33 Vt. 457; 78 Am. Dec. 632; White v. Hildreth, 32 Vt. 265; Miller v. Peck, 18 W. Va. 75. The time of a debtor is his own and he may do with it as he pleases, and his creditors cannot complain if he renders his labor gratuitously to his wife, for they have no claim upon his services. As they have no right to compel him to work and earn money for their benefit, they are not defrauded if he chooses to donate his services to another. Eilers v. Conradt, 39 Minn. 242.

But if the husband is indebted at the time he places improvements on his wife's land, the value of such improvements may be reached through appropriate proceedings in chancery, and the amount thereof applied to the payment of claims existing against him at the time of the investment. If in such case, the estate cannot be successfully apportioned in partition, chancery will decree a sale of it and a division of the proceeds according to the rights of the respective parties. Kirby v. Bruns, 45 Mo. 234; 100 Am. Dec. 376. And the creditor of an insolvent husband who had used his own means to erect a building on his wife's premises, was allowed to attach the proceeds of a sale of the property to the extent of its enhanced value, without a previous return of nulla bona against the husband. Collins v. Slade (Ky. 1888), 9 S. W. Rep. 245. But the creditors of the husband cannot charge the wife's separate estate for materials furnished by him for improvements thereon, which were exempt from execution in his hands. Nance v. Nance, 84 Ala. 375.

Where a statute permits a levy on the products of a married woman's real estate for labor or material furnished upon, or for the cultivation or improvement thereof, and the husband built a house on his wife's land, and the house and land were afterwards sold and a farm bought in the wife's name with the proceeds, it was held that hay grown upon this farm could not be levied on for the husband's debt for materials used in building the house. Ackley v. Fish, 55 Vt. 18.

her separate estate for the husband's benefit,¹ although in others she may do so.² The wife's property not being liable for the husband's debts, it is a fortiori not liable for his torts.³

5. Rights and Liabilities of the Husband.—The husband has no power to make a transfer of, or create a charge upon, his wife's statutory separate property,⁴ and if he assumes control of it, will be accountable to her for the principal, together with the income and profits.⁵

6. Effect of Separate Property Acts on Husband's Curtesy.—Where the statute creating the separate estate in a married woman gives her power to hold, convey and devise as fully as if a feme sole, the husband's curtesy will be defeated if she makes such conveyance or devise;⁶ but if she dies intestate, not having conveyed

4. One cannot, even as to his curtesy, dedicate his wife's lands to a public use unless she joins in and acknowledges the deed. Marshall v. Anderson, 78 Mo. 85; nor where the statute securing to the wife a separate estate gives the husband power to manage it, can he indorse her name on notes payable to her order and make a valid transfer of the same. Kempner v. Comer, 73 Tex. 196.

Where the statute makes a husband the trustee of his wife's statutory separate estate, she cannot divest him of his authority by contracting with one to whom she lends money that he is to pay it to her and not to the husband, the husband not being a party to the agreement. Hall v. Creswell, 46 Ala. 460. Nor can she recover from her husband, or resume the administration of her separate dotal property without a decree of dissolution of the conjugal association unless she shows waste or dissipation of it by the husband, especially where she has voluntarily abandoned him without cause. Martinez v. Lucero, 1 N. Mex. 208; Chavez v. McKnight, 1 N. Mex. 147.

Compare supra, this title, Property Held by Husband in Trust.

It was held in Alward v. Alward (Supreme Ct.), 2 N. Y. Supp. 42, that a husband could recover in an equitable action money advanced for the benefit of his wife's separate estate, and could have such advances declared a lien upon such separate estate.

In Pfiffner v. Pfiffner (Pa. 1888), 16 Atl. Rep. 72, where he allowed her to retain property purchased with his money for twenty years, he could not after her death have a trust declared in his favor.

In New Jersey, though the husband is bound to account for the principal of his wife's estate, he is not bound to account for such part of her income as he receives and spends with her knowledge and without objection. Jones v. Davenport, 44 N. J. Eq. 33. But in North Carolina, where the statute provided that the husband should not be liable to account for the income of his wife's separate estate for any greater period than one year next preceding an action therefor, it was held not to apply where he occupied the land and received the rents upon an express agreement to account, which was afterwards embodied in notes for the amount. Battle v. Mayo, 102 N. Car. 413.

In New York, the husband, who is not a tenant by the curtesy, has no interest in the lands of his wife during coverture, and if he remains in possession or control after the wife's death, he is liable to the heirs of the wife for rents. Carter v. Stork (Sup. Ct.), 18 N. Y. Supp. 470.

6. See CURTESY, vol. 4, p. 967; Tong v. Marvin, 15 Mich. 60; Mason v. Johnson, 47 Md. 357; Neelly v. Lancaster, 47 Ark. 175.

the property, it would seem that the husband will take for his life as tenant by the curtesy, to the exclusion of the heirs of the wife.¹

I. DEFINITION—1. In General.—By separation of husband and wife is meant their voluntary marital dissociation; a cessation of cohabitation by mutual consent.²

2. Separation Deeds.—Separation deeds are mutual deeds of arrangement between husband and wife, generally executed for the purpose of avoiding unpleasant exposures of marital infelici-

In Billings v. Baker, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 371, Potter, J., citing Hearle v. Greenbank, 3 Atk. 695, said: "Where it is the evident intent in making a settlement of an estate upon a married woman that she shall hold it as a feme sole, the husband cannot have curtesy," and in Poole v. Blakie, 53 Ill. 495, it was held that the husband could not have curtesy of real estate conveyed to his wife for her sole and separate use, with power of disposal, and who has so disposed of it.

The Pennsylvania statute giving a married woman power to dispose of her property by . . . will in the same manner as if unmarried, was held to mean that the wife might execute the will in the same manner as if single and to only do away with a few forms previously required in the execution of a will by a married woman. Teacle's Estate, 132 Pa. St. 533. The court in this case lays stress upon the fact that the act provided that a married woman should not convey or mortgage her real estate without the consent of her husband, but the Maryland statute also provides that the wife can only convey by a joint deed with her husband, and yet Mason v. Johnson, 47 Md. 357, decided that by giving her power to devise as if a feme sole, the husband's curtesy was defeated.

Power given a married woman to "hold, own, possess and enjoy" her property the same as though she were sole and unmarried, gives her only the jus tenendi and not the jus disponendi, and therefore does not affect the husband's curtesy. Cole v. Van Ripper, 44 Ill. 58. But this case intimates that where the wife is given power to convey as a feme sole, the husband's curtesy is destroyed.

1. See CURTESY, vol. 4, p. 967, note 3. In re Winne, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 21; Neelly v. Lancaster, 47 Ark. 175.

2. Black's L. Dict. Only colloquially is the word to be applied to a mere casual, temporary absence. See 1 Bishop's Mar. Div. & Sep., §§ 1203, et seq.; Arnold v. Allen, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 198. It is also widely distinguishable from abandonment or desertion, although sometimes the agreement results therefrom. Bryan v. Bryan, 34 Ala. 516. It is also clearly distinguishable from divorce a mensa, although involving sufficient principles in com-ties, and of more effectually providing for consequent altered circumstances.¹

II. SEPARATION DEEDS—1. Historical View; Validity.—In England, such deeds, in the form of articles of separation, were once held to be contra bonos mores, and courts of equity refused to carry them into effect.² But judicial opinion has undergone a change, and it is now well settled in England that such deeds are not mon therewith to be considered cognate thereto. See DIVORCE, vol. 5, p. 747; ALIMONY, vol. 1, p. 467.

Prop.*, p. 1438; Cord's L. & Eq. R. Mar. W. (2d ed.), § 114a; Fraser's Husb. & W., p. 1498; 2 Bright's Husb. & W., p. 313; Lush's Husb. & W., p. 364.

The purpose of such deed is "to arrange decently for the maintenance of wife and offspring, and for a just mutual disposition of property rights." Schouler's Dom. Rel. (4th ed.), § 217.

The deed may be "pactional quoad the grantors, though testamentary quoad beneficiaries," and therefore not revocable by the one grantor after the death of the other. Hogg v. Campbell, 1 Sc. Ct. Sess. (3d series) 647.

2. It is true that in Guth v. Guth, 3 Bro. C. C. 614, there was a decree for specific performance of a separation deed made without intervention of a trustee. But in St. John v. St. John, 11 Ves. 532, the court, by Lord Eldon, Chanc., said: "This is the only instance in which the court did enforce the deed. . . . I feel, with Lord Rosslyn, all his doubts upon that case" (expressed in Legard v. Johnson, 3 Ves. 361). "Lord Thurlow expressed great difficulties upon this point. His difficulty upon enforcing the covenant between the trustee and the husband . . . was that the covenant was to enforce that which the ecclesiastical law did not permit. He doubted, therefore, whether covenants with such objects ought to be the foundation either of action or specific performance. . . . If this were res integra, untouched by dictum or decision, I would not have permitted such a covenant to be the foundation of an action, or a suit in this court. But if dicta have followed dicta, or decision has followed decision, to the extent of settling the law, I cannot, upon any doubt of mine as to what ought originally to have been the decision, shake what is the settled law upon the subject. It is better that the case should go to the House of Lords than that the law should remain in this state, upon a point connected with the very well-being of society." In this case, Lord and Lady St. John, having lived apart under articles of separation, a reconciliation took place, and another instrument was executed by them and two trustees, providing that she might at any future time, with the trustees' assent, separate and take away her children, and thereupon revive the former articles. The suit, which was to have the articles delivered up, ended by compromise.

In Worrall v. Jacob, 3 Meriv. 268, Sir Wm. Grant, M. R., quoted the foregoing views of Lord Eldon with approval, holding that while a court of equity would not execute articles of separation, it would enforce engagements between the husband and the trustee, though originating out of the separation and relative thereto.

In the case above cited by Lord Eldon (Legard v. Johnson, 3 Ves. 352), it was held that since in England, the spiritual court has exclusive cognizance of the rights and duties arising from the state of marriage, a court of equity has no jurisdiction upon a contract for separation between husband and wife simply; much less where it will affect a purchaser or creditor; but the jurisdiction holds in special cases, as where a third party covenants to indemnify the husband against the wife's debts; or a fortune accrues to the wife after separation; or the property is the subject of a trust. And therein, Loughborough, Chanc., said: "Upon the general abstract question, I have met with no case, except the late case of Guth v. Guth, 3 Bro. C. C. 614, to entitle the court to hold such jurisdiction. Before I should decide according to that case, I should wish for a further account of it, for my opinion inclines against it."

It was decided that a deed of separation did not relieve the wife from the against public policy.¹ Thus is presented the anomaly, that while "separations in pais or in court are not to be sanctioned except on proof of a dereliction legally defined and declared sufficient," never on the consent of the parties,² nevertheless, as the wife may bring, defend, and settle divorce suits, she may make an agreement whereby suit is avoided.³

disabilities of coverture. Marshall v. Rutton, 8 T. R. 545. Also that such deed could not be pleaded in bar of a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. Mortimer v. Mortimer, 2 Hagg. Consist. 310.

In Earl of Westmeath v. Countess of Westmeath, Jac. 126, it was discussed, but not directly decided, whether a covenant in such deed not to sue for restitution was binding, and if not, whether the rest of the deed could stand. An injunction to restrain proceedings at law for recovering an annuity secured to the wife by such deed, not containing any covenant to indemnify the husband from her debts was refused.

In Whorewood v. Whorewood, 2 Cas. Chanc. 250, where a decree had been made by Cromwell's Commissioners (a substitute for the ecclesiastical court), that the husband pay to his wife £300 until they again cohabit, and after six years had elapsed without his paying, he petitioned for cessation of the annuity, and tendered cohabitation—the court, by Lord Keeper Finch, said: "I shall not continue the alimony to the wife, if she will not cohabit, nor decree the wife to cohabit, but shall not discharge the alimony or sentence, but keep it in suspense. But she shall return to her husband, who shall maintain and use her as a gentleman and good husband ought to do, wherein if he fails, I will hear the wife's complaint with favor and lay on the decree again as cause shall appear; but now suspend it, saving to her the arrears. But she shall immediately return, and if not, she shall have no benefit of the alimony till she do so, but take her remedy in the court ecclesiastical."

In Evans v. Evans, 4 Eng. Eccl. 310, 1 Hagg. Consist. 35, the court by Lord Stowell, said: "When people understand that they must live together, except for a very few reasons known to the law, they learn to soften, by mutual accommodation, that yoke which they know they cannot shake off. They become good husbands and good wives, for necessity is a powerful teacher."

The ecclesiastical court refused to recognize a private agreement between husband and wife to live apart. Nash v. Nash, 1 Hagg. Consist. 142; Beeby v. Beeby, 1 Eccl. 789; Mortimer v. Mortimer, 2 Hagg. Consist. 318; Smyth v. Smyth, 4 Hagg. Eccl. 509.

The chancery court also refused to establish an agreement between a man and his wife to live separate. Wilkes v. Wilkes, 2 Dickens Ch. Cas. 791.

1. Wilson v. Wilson, 1 H. L. Cas. 538; Marshall v. Marshall, 5 P. Div. 19. In Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. Div. 620, the court by Jessel, M. R. said: "It is impossible to say what the opinion of a man or judge might be as to what public policy is. For a great number of years, both ecclesiastical judges and lay judges thought it was something very horrible, and against public policy that the husband and wife should agree to live separate, and it was supposed that a civilized country could no longer exist if such agreements were enforced by courts of law, whether ecclesiastical or not. But a change came over judicial opinion, as to public policy; other considerations arose and people began to think that, after all, it might be better and more beneficial for married people to avoid in many cases the expense and scandal of suits of divorce by settling their differences quietly by the aid of friends out of court, although the consequence might be that they would live separately, and that was the view carried out by the courts when it became once decided that separation deeds, per se, were not against public policy."

2. Powell v. Powell, 80 Ala. 595; Haverty v. Haverty, 35 Kan. 438.

3. A husband and wife may, without intervention of a trustee, contract to live apart in consideration of their agreeing not to take legal proceedings one against another; e. g., for assaults. Such consideration being executed, she may recover (as for "money paid at the defendant's request") at the rate fixed by the verbal agreement, even

In some of the United States also it has been held that articles of separation between husband and wife, whether entered into before or after the separation, are against law and public policy, and therefore void.¹ But in almost all the States, such deed is good as to provisions for maintenance, but not as a bar to cohabitation.²

2. Modern Legislation.—Statutes of some States inhibit any change of marital rights and obligations other than by judicial act.³ The effect of separation articles, especially as to third persons, often turns upon the extent to which the legislature has enabled the wife to contract.⁴ The statutory provisions, therefore, as also those for voluntary separation, are very unlike.⁵ An assuming it one not to be performed within one year under the Statute of Frauds. McGregor v. McGregor, 20 Q. B. Div. 529.

In Wennhak v. Morgan, 20 Q. B. Div. 635—in holding that a husband's communicating a libel to his wife was not publication, after the plaintiff's counsel had cited the Married Woman's Property Act of 1882—the court, by Manisty, J., said: "The maxim and principle acted on for centuries is still in existence—namely, that, as regards this case, husband and wife are in point of law one person. . . . It is, after all, a question of public policy, or, as it has been well called, social policy. No doubt that principle has been interfered with by judge-made law. Public opinion has altered in some circumstances, and no better illustration of that can be given than the change of view as to deeds of separation between husband and wife."

1. In North Carolina, so held, in 1867—namely, in Collins v. Collins, Phil. Eq. (N. Car.) 153; 93 Am. Dec. 606.

But that court is not now of that opinion. See Sparks v. Sparks, 94 N. Car. 527.

In Indian, in 1820, the old English ecclesiastical view prevailed, and separation deeds were disapproved, and only sustained in an exigency for the wife's maintenance. Reed v. Beazley, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 97. This decision Chancellor Kent has commended. 2 Kent Com. 177.

In Kentucky, the court refused to enforce by decree a contract for separation, saying it was against public policy. McCrocklin v. McCrocklin, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 370.

In South Carolina, in Converse v. Converse, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 535—a case showing fiendish brutality of the husband—the court refused to change the name of the wife to that of her first husband; the court, by Dargan, Ch., saying: "How do I know that these parties may not become reconciled?"

3. The Iowa Code, although allowing conveyances between husband and wife, inhibits their relinquishing dower to each other. Linton v. Crosby, 54 Iowa 478.

In Louisiana, "every voluntary separation of property is null both as respects third persons and the husband and wife between themselves." Louisiana Rev. Civil Code, 1889, § 242.

A woman owning slaves, married in Louisiana, and was removed by her husband to Kentucky, where she sued for alimony. Held, that a compromise of the suit by professed agents of the parties, not made the decree of the court, whereby part of the slaves were surrendered to the husband, was ineffectual, both at law and in equity, to divest her title. Beard v. Basye, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 133.

5. Alabama.—Upon "voluntary separation," the court of chancery may, on petition of one party, and twenty days' notice to the other, permit the father or the mother to have the custody and control of the children, and to superintend and direct their education, having regard to the prudence, ability and fitness of the parents and the age and sex of the children." Alabama Code, 1886, § 2368.

Her voluntary abandonment of him against his consent is not a "voluntary separation." Bryan v. Bryan, 34 Ala. 516. The assent of both may be implied, though not expressed. Anonymous, 55 Ala. 428. His wish for her to go may be indicated by cruel treatment. Hardin v. Hardin, 17 Ala. 250; 52 Am. Dec. 170.

Arizona.—"No matrimonial agreement shall be altered after the solemnization of the marriage." Arizona Rev. Stat. 1887, § 2099.

Arkansas.—As to the husband's trust settlement for the wife's support, see Pillow v. Wade, 31 Ark. 678.

California.—A husband is not liable for the support of his wife "when she is living separate from him by agreement, unless such support is stipulated in the agreement." California Civil Code, 1885, § 175. The mutual consent is a sufficient consideration for the agreement to separate. § 160.

As to a wife's stipulation in a separation deed without trustee to convey certain realty to children, see Joyce v. McAvoy, 31 Cal. 273; 89 Am. Dec. 172. Deed with trustee sustained. Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 479. Wife may recover on note executed to her by her husband during coverture. Wilson v. Wilson, 36 Cal. 447.

Colorado.—Procurement by fraud will invalidate the agreement. Daniels v. Daniels, 9 Colo. 133. As to their contracts with each other, see O'Connell v. Taney, 16 Colo. 353.

Connecticut.—In Nichols v. Palmer, 5 Day (Conn.) 52—an action against the trustee in a separation deed—the court by Baldwin, J., said: "The legislature has, in a few extraordinary cases, without dissolving the marriage, enforced a separation; yet I cannot admit that our laws have, in these ways, provided for all cases in which a separation may be proper, nor that it is always advisable to resort to them."

A separation deed stipulating that the wife should bring a petition for divorce at the husband's expense, was disapproved. Goodwin v. Goodwin, 4 Day (Conn.) 343. As to the validity of gifts and contracts directly between them, see Deming v. Williams, 26 Conn. 226; 68 Am. Dec. 386.

The Dakotas.—The husband and wife cannot, by any contract with each other, alter their legal relations, except as to property, and except that they may agree in writing to an immediate separation, and may make provision for the support of either of them and of their children during such separation. Dakota Comp. L. 1887, § 2591. The mutual covenants constitute a sufficient consideration for the deed. § 2592.

Georgia.—The contracts of a married woman are generally void. Georgia Code, 1882, § 2730.

Deed with trustee sustained. Chapman v. Gray, 8 Ga. 341. As to an agreement for alimony pending a suit for divorce, see Venable v. Craig, 44 Ga. 437.

Idaho.—As to marriage settlements, etc., see Idaho Rev. Stat. 1887, § 2500.

Illinois.—As to the wife's contract, see Illinois Rev. Stat. 1891, 791, § 6. She cannot abandon her husband without his consent, to acquire separate income. Douglas v. Gausman, 68 Ill. 170. Equity will compel him to pay promissory notes given upon a separation to secure her support, but fraudulently gotten possession of by him. Marlow v. Marlow, 77 Ill. 633. Her agreement to return and cohabit will support his agreement to pay money to a trustee for her use. Phillips v. Meyers, 82 Ill. 67; 25 Am. Rep. 295. Procurement by undue stress upon an invalid wife vitiates the deed. Willetts v. Willetts, 104 Ill. 122. See Crum v. Sawyer, 132 Ill. 443.

Indiana.—The wife of an absentee has all the rights of a feme sole. Indiana Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2234.

A parol agreement for separation without intervention of any trustee was sustained in Dutton v. Dutton, 30 Ind. 452.

Iowa.—A separation deed will be sustained as to the maintenance and mutual disposition of property rights. Robertson v. Robertson, 25 Iowa 350.

Kansas.—As to her contracts, etc., see Kansas Gen. Stat. 1889, §§ 3753, 3757.

Compromise of divorce case by the attorneys disapproved for undue influence. See Haverty v. Haverty, 35 Kan. 438. Husband and wife may contract with each other so as to pass title. Going v. Orns, 8 Kan. 85.

Kentucky.—As to right of wife of a non-resident to contract, see Kentucky Gen. Stat. 1887, p. 727, § 10.

A contract for separation with no trustee will not be enforced. Simpson v. Simpson, 4 Dana (Ky.) 140. But one's contract to support his wife, made in view of an immediate separation, is valid; otherwise, if of one not immediately future. Gaines v. Poor, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 503.

A recital in a separation deed that she had abandoned him "without legal cause for dower or alimony," was held ground to refuse dower after his death. Loud v. Loud, 4 Bush (Ky.) 453. As to her testamentary power when separate, see Hiram v. Griffin, 8 Bush (Ky.) 262.

Louisiana.—As to suit for separation of property, see Bird v. Duralde, 23 La. Ann. 319; Ford v. Kittredge, 26 La. Ann. 190; Vickers v. Block, 31 La. Ann. 672.

Maine.—"A married woman may release to her husband the right to control her property." Maine Rev. Stat. 1883, p. 524, § 2. Divorced wife may recover on note executed to her by her husband during coverture. Webster v. Webster, 58 Me. 139; 4 Am. Rep. 253.

Maryland.—As to her contracts, see Maryland Pub. Gen. L. 1888, pp. 800, 802. Only by causes that show an absolute impossibility to discharge the marriage duties can separation be justified. A wife living separate from her husband, unjustifiably and without his consent, cannot be allowed maintenance out of her inherited legal estate. Schindel v. Schindel, 12 Md. 294.

In case of a separation deed not providing for indemnity against the wife's debts, the court will not compel the husband to aid in giving title to land she has assumed to convey. Lippy v. Masonheimer, 9 Md. 310.

A separation deed was recognized in Helms v. Franciscus, 2 Bland Ch. (Md.) 544; 20 Am. Dec. 402, characterized as "a case of a very singular complexity." A separation deed signed by the wife's attorney and not by herself, was held invalid. Wallingsford v. Wallingsford, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 485. A separation deed with trustee, for support, protects the husband, while complaint against a claim for necessities furnished the wife. Brown v. Brown, 5 Gill (Md.) 249.

As to the effect of a husband's post-nuptial deed to a trustee, surrendering property acquired by the marriage, to be disposed of as she might direct "during coverture," where he survived her and she died, see Hutchins v. Dixon, 11 Md. 29. A separation deed disposing of a fund as to survivor, children and representatives, was enforced after death of both. McCubbin v. Patterson, 16 Md. 179.

Massachusetts.—A husband and wife cannot transfer property to each other. Massachusetts Acts, 1884, ch. 132.

A bond between them is not void as against public policy. Winn v. Sanford, 148 Mass. 139. Deeds wherein the husband, in contemplation of immediate separation, agrees to pay a trustee money for the wife's support, are not against public policy. Fox v. Davis, 113 Mass. 255; 18 Am. Rep. 476. Payment of arrears thereunder may be enforced after her death. Holbrook v. Comstock, 16 Gray (Mass.) 109.

The title to a note handed to her on separation, held to remain in him. Carley v. Green, 12 Allen (Mass.) 104. A note and mortgage executed by a husband in 1853 to a trustee to secure the wife for payment of his debts from her own funds, held invalid. Phillips v. Frye, 14 Allen (Mass.) 36.

Michigan.—As to a married woman's separate property, she may contract, convey and bequeath as if unmarried. Michigan Annot. Stat., 1882, § 6295. "All contracts made by persons in contemplation of marriage shall remain in full force after marriage takes place." § 6299.

One's written agreement, in consideration of his wife's discontinuing a divorce suit and recohobiting, to pay her from his estate $500 thirty days after his death, held to be valid and not a mere promise to make a gift. Reithmaier v. Beckwith, 35 Mich. 110. See Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563; infra, this title, Enforcement.

Minnesota.—See Minnesota Stat. 1891, § 3866. Except as to real estate, she may contract with her husband as if sole; they shall be held to have notice of each other's contracts and debts, wherever rights of creditors come in question. § 3687. She may alone release dower in lands of a former husband. Minnesota Gen. L., 1891, ch. 82.

Mississippi.—"The common law, as to the disabilities of married women, and its effect on the rights of property of the wife, is totally abrogated." Mississippi Rev. Code, 1880, § 1167. "Husband and wife may sue each other." § 1168.

As to her contract rights, see Missouri Rev. Stat., 1889, § 6864. Trust companies may "accept from and execute trusts for married women, in respect to their separate property." § 2836.

Deed no bar to a divorce. Stokes v. Stokes, 1 Mo. 320. In Gonsallis v. Douchouquette, 1 Mo. 666—in 1826, in deciding that after a separation contract, "dissolving the marriage," and dividing the community property, real property conveyed to the woman could not be held against the husband's right of possession—the court, by Wash, J., said: "Although the English courts of chancery have, of late, gone great lengths in lending their aid to the execution of such contracts, we feel no disposition to follow their example at present, and sincerely hope that the time is far distant, when the condition of society may make it proper for American courts to do so. But see Durrett v. Piper, 58 Mo. 551.

Montana.—"A married woman may make contracts, oral or written, sealed or unsealed, and may waive or relinquish any right or interest in any real estate, either in person or by attorney in the same manner, to the same extent, and with the like effect as a married man may do." Montana Comp. Stat., 1887, § 1448.

Nebraska.—"A married woman shall not be bound by any covenant in a joint deed of herself and husband." Nebraska Comp. Stat., 1889, p. 651, § 48. See also p. 566, § 2.

The wife may recover on a note executed to her by her husband during coverture. May v. May, 9 Neb. 16; 31 Am. Rep. 399.

Nevada.—"A husband and wife . . . may agree to an immediate separation, and may make provision for the support of either of them and of their children during such separation." Nevada Gen. Stat., 1885, § 518. The mutual consent is a sufficient consideration therefor. § 519.

New Hampshire.—The wife of an alien may, after six months' residence, hold and convey real property as if sole, and have exclusive custody of her minor children living with her. New Hampshire Gen. Laws, 1891, p. 499, § 8.

Under the statute of 1860, giving the wife control of her separate property she may, it seems, contract with her husband thereon. Perkins v. George, 45 N. H. 453. A note and mortgage executed by the husband with a view to a divorce, held void. Cross v. Cross, 58 N. H. 373.

New Jersey.—The wife may contract as if sole, except as accommodation indorser, guarantor or surety. New Jersey Rev., 1877, p. 637, § 5.

A deed not signed by the trustee, held not operative except as an agreement to live separate. Emery v. Neighbour, 7 N. J. L. 142; 11 Am. Dec. 541.

The husband's conveyance to a trustee for the use of his wife on executing articles of separation, will not be set aside for her subsequent adultery while living apart. Dixon v. Dixon, 23 N. J. Eq. 316.

New York.—A married woman may contract as if unmarried. This provision does not apply to any contract between husband and wife. New York Rev. Stat. (Banks') 1889, p. 1404, §§ 28, 29.

In certain cases, cruelty, conduct rendering cohabitation unsafe and improper, abandonment, neglect to provide for the wife, an action may be maintained for separation "from bed and board, forever, or for a limited time." Id., page 887, § 21.

As to the wife's power under the acts of 1848, 1849 and 1860, see Wallace v. Bassett, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 92, sustaining a separation deed. Compare Griffin v. Banks, 37 N. Y. 621; Carpenter v. Osborn, 102 N. Y. 552.

For other New York decisions upon separation deeds, see infra, this title, Requisites, Effect, etc., notes. A leading and reviewing case, sustaining a separation and a mortgage conditioned on fulfillment of the stipulations for the wife's maintenance, is Calkins v. Long, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 97; but therein the court, by Mason, J., shares the doubt, as to public policy, etc., expressed by Walworth, Ch., in Carson v. Murray, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 500.

487; Champlin v. Champlin, 1 Hoff. Ch. (N. Y.) 55.

North Carolina.—A woman living apart under a registered deed of separation, may be a free trader. North Carolina Code, 1883, § 1831. "No contract between a husband and wife made during coverture shall be valid to affect or change any part of the real estate of the wife, or the accruing income thereof, for a longer time than three years. . . ." § 1835. Contracts between husband and wife, not forbidden by the preceding section and not inconsistent with public policy are valid. § 1836. As to North Carolina ideas of "public policy," see supra, this title, Historical View, note. Collins v. Collins, Phil. Eq. (N. Car.) 153; 93 Am. Dec. 153. Commenting on this case in Sparks v. Sparks, 94 N. Car. 531, the court, by Smith, C. J., said: "It may admit of question, in view of subsequent changes in the law of marriage in respect to the property rights of the woman, whether the proposition, in its unlimited extent, can now be upheld. A voluntary separation, under some circumstances, is recognized as a legal condition, out of which may arise certain powers to be exercised over her estate."

Ohio.—"A husband or wife may enter into any engagement or transaction with the other, or with any other person, which either might if unmarried; subject, in transaction between themselves, to the general rules which control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other." Ohio Rev. Stat., 1890, § 3112. "A husband and wife cannot by any contract with each other alter their legal relations, except that they may agree to any immediate separation, and may make provision for the support of them and their children during the separation." § 3113. (Act of 1887.)

Articles, with trustee, for separation and the wife's maintenance are not against public policy. Bettle v. Wilson, 14 Ohio 257; Crooks v. Crooks, 34 Ohio St. 610. So also even without a trustee. Garver v. Miller, 16 Ohio St. 527.

A post-nuptial agreement, appropriating property to her separate use, though void at common law, will be sustained in equity. Wood v. Warden, 20 Ohio 518. Compare as to an oral agreement, Thomas v. Brown, 10 Ohio St. 247.

Oklahoma.—Same provision for a separation agreement as that of Nevada. Oklahoma Stat., 1890, §§ 2987-8.

Oregon.—Conveyance by husband or wife to the other is valid. Oregon Annot. Laws, 1892, § 2871. They may contract with each other. Note to § 2869.

Pennsylvania.—By "the married persons' property act" of 1887, B. P. Dig. Pennsylvania L., p. 2236, the wife may, without a trustee, acquire, hold, use, and dispose of her property as if she were a feme sole. Her covenant in a separation deed made in 1833, not to "claim any jointure, dower, or thirds," held to preclude her from receiving the $300 allowed widows by the Pennsylvania act of 1851. Dillinger's Appeal, 35 Pa. St. 357. Compare Speidel's Appeal, 107 Pa. St. 18.

As early as 1846 the doctrine was deemed well settled that separation deeds "are valid and effectual, both at law and in equity, provided their object be actual and immediate, and not a contingent or future separation." Hutton v. Hutton, 3 Pa. St. 104; Com. v. Richards, 131 Pa. St. 209.

Rhode Island.—As to her contract rights, see Rhode Island Pub. Stat. 1882, p. 423, § 6. In absence of express provision to the contrary, a separation deed is no bar to a divorce. Fosdick v. Fosdick, 15 R. I. 130.

South Carolina.—"Instruments in the nature of marriage settlements," to be good against creditors, must be registered within forty days of execution. S. Car. Stat., 1882, § 2039.

A bond to a trustee, reciting agreement to live separate, and conditioned to pay an annual sum for the use of the wife, is valid; and it may be shown by parol evidence that a separation had previously taken place, and that the bond was given to compromise a suit for alimony. Buckner v. Ruth, 13 Rich. (S. Car.) 157.

Tennessee.—"Married women over the age of twenty-one years, owning the fee or other legal or equitable interest or estate in real estate, who have abandoned their husbands, or whose husbands may be non compos mentis, insane, or of unsound mind; or whose husbands may fail or refuse to cohabit with or have abandoned them, shall have the same powers of disposition by will, deed, or otherwise as are possessed by unmarried women." Tennessee Code, 1884, § 3346. act enabling a married woman to contract as if sole as to her separate property, may, in absence of contrary proviso, apply to articles entered into with her husband; such statute must be liberally construed.¹

3. Requisites—a. FORM.—No particular form is prescribed for the deed, either by statute or usage.²

The husband may be estopped by a separation bond from claiming any portion of the wife's estate. Goodrich v. Bryant, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 325. As to cancellation of a separation bond by the fact of reconciliation, see Keys v. Keys, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 425.

Texas.—"The wife may contract debts for necessities furnished herself or children, and for all expenses which may have been incurred by the wife for the benefit of her separate property." Texas Civil Stat., 1889, § 2854. For such debts the husband and wife shall be sued jointly. § 1205.

That the wife continue to live with her husband is not a valid consideration for a post-nuptial obligation executed by him; e. g., a note making her brother payee. Roberts v. Frisby, 38 Tex. 219. Compare the wife's fraud as to the note in Ximines v. Smith, 39 Tex. 49.

Utah.—The separate property of each spouse "may be held, managed, controlled, transferred, and in any manner disposed of by the spouse so owning or acquiring it, without any limitation or restriction by reason of marriage." Utah Comp. L., 1888, § 2528.

By the Edmunds-Tucker Law of 1887 (dissolving the incorporation of the Mormon church), § 18, "a widow shall be endowed of a third part of all lands whereof her husband was seised of an estate of inheritance at any time during the marriage."

Vermont.—An agreement of separation, signed by the husband and the wife's father, as her agent, was held to be a good defense to her petition for a divorce for acts of cruelty occurring before the agreement. Squires v. Squires, 53 Vt. 208; 38 Am. Rep. 668.

Virginia.—A married woman may contract as if sole in respect to her trade, services or separate estate. Virginia Code, 1887, § 2288.

Washington.—"The earnings and accumulations of the wife and of her minor children living with her, or in her custody while she is living separate from her husband, are the separate property of the wife." Washington Gen. Stat., 1891, § 1403.

West Virginia.—A wife may control her separate property, but not dispose of her real estate without her husband's consent, unless she be living apart from him or he be non compos mentis. West Virginia Code, 1891, p. 620, § 2. If by an ante-nuptial agreement or otherwise he has acquired any of her separate property, he shall be liable for her ante-nuptial debts contracted for its value. § 10. There are five classes of debts for which she may charge her separate property. § 12.

Wisconsin.—The wife's separate property and earnings shall not be subject to her husband's control. Wisconsin Annot. Stat., 1889, §§ 2341-3.

b. ESSENTIALS.—It is evident from what has been said above, and from the principle of the matter, that the rights of the public are not to be ignored in a voluntary marital separation; wherefore it follows that a bargain for a future separation is invalid, while, a separation having once taken place, a provision looking to the wife's maintenance is valid and proper.¹

c. CONSIDERATION.—As between the parties, the husband's duty to support his wife is a sufficient consideration for his promise to pay her an allowance.² She must have some valuable consideration for the release of her rights.³ There must also be some valuable consideration against existing creditors, as, for instance, a third party's promise to indemnify him against her debts.⁴

Mutual consent may be, perhaps of itself alone, a sufficient consideration for the contract; certainly, if so declared by statute.⁵ Conciliation and the family's highest interests are deemed as weighty as any mere pecuniary consideration.⁶ The trustees' indemnifying the husband against the wife's future debts is a valuable consideration, and takes the conveyance out of the statute of fraudulent conveyances.⁷

In England a deed in consideration of separation alone has been held to be voluntary, and not good against existing creditors. Fitzer v. Fitzer, 2 Atk. 511; Clough v. Lambert, 10 Sim. 174.

A covenant that the wife take an annuity in full satisfaction for support, is in substance a covenant to indemnify the husband against her debts. McDonnell v. Murphy, Fox & S. 279.

In a deed under seal a recital that divers unhappy differences exist, was held to import a sufficient consideration. "There may have been circumstances that justified the wife in applying for a divorce a mensa et thoro." Clough v. Lambert, 10 Sim. 174.

In Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 573, the court, by Cooley, C. J., said: "The legal presumption is that her services and the comfort of her society are of a worth to him fully equal to all the obligations which the law imposes upon him because of the marital relation."

Forbearance not to sue for a divorce has been held to be a good consideration. Angier v. Angier, Gibb. Eq. 152. Or for a nullity of marriage. Wilson v. Wilson, 1 H. L. Cas. 538. One's compromise of a misdemeanor has been held to be a good consideration. Elworthy v. Bird, 2 Sim. & Stu. 372.

d. TRUSTEES.—Formerly it was deemed absolutely necessary that the property of which the wife was to have exclusive use be vested in trustees for her benefit; and that the husband's agreement should be made with such trustees, or at least with somebody capable of contracting with him for her benefit.¹ This is still customary and proper, but is not indispensable.²

e. PROVISION FOR CHILDREN.—Ordinarily, the law gives the father the custody of the children.³ The courts, however, look

On a separation in a deed executed between the husband and wife and the trustees of their marriage settlement, she charged her separate property with payment of an annuity to him, and he covenanted to permit her during and notwithstanding the coverture, to receive and enjoy to her own sole and separate use all the property to which she, or he in her right, was or at any time might be entitled. On a bill filed after her decease for arrears of the annuity, held, that his release of his marital right in her future-acquired property was a good consideration to support his claim to the annuity. Logan v. Birkitt, 1 M. & K. 220.

1. In Marshall v. Rutton, 8 T. R. 545, the court, by Lord Kenyon, C. J., said: "From the incapacity of a married woman to contract, or to possess personal property which may be the subject of contract, men and their wives desirous of living separate have found it necessary to have recourse to the intervention of trustees, in whom the property, of which it is intended she shall have the disposition, may vest uncontrolled by the rights of her husband, and with whom he may contract for her benefit; but in such property the woman herself acquires no legal interest whatsoever. Of such trusts, courts of equity alone can take notice." Compare Harvey v. Harvey, 1 P. Wms. 125; Burton v. Pierpont, 2 P. Wms. 79; Peacock v. Monk, 2 Ves. 190; Worrall v. Jacob, 3 Mer. 256.

In Mississippi, in 1857, intervention of a trustee was held necessary. Mills v. Richards, 34 Miss. 77.

In New York so also, as late as 1878. Dupre v. Rein, 56 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 228.

Before the present law extending the property rights of married women, it had been held, in a case often cited in this connection, that, to enable a feme covert to dispose of her real estate, in equity, it is not necessary that the legal estate be vested in trustees. A mere agreement entered into before marriage that she should have power to dispose of her real estate, during coverture, will enable her to do so. Bradish v. Gibbs, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 523. But compare Cropsey v. McKinney, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 47; Beach v. Beach, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 260; 38 Am. Dec. 584; Marshall v. Rutton, 8 T. R. 547; Legard v. Johnson, 3 Ves. 352.

Mediumship of a trustee, and an agreement for an immediate separation, and separate allowance for the wife's support, were upheld in Carson v. Murray, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 483; Carter v. Carter, 14 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 59; Bettle v. Wilson, 14 Ohio 257.

In Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 572, after citing Walker v. Beal, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 743, and other decisions that "have settled the law beyond further controversy" in favor of separation deeds generally, the court by Cooley, C. J., said: "In some of these cases the articles have been enforced against the husband or his estate, and in others against the wife or her estate, and although a trustee for the wife has been usually provided for by the articles in whose name suits on her behalf might be brought, it was long ago determined that this was wholly unnecessary, and that equity, whenever it became needful, would give effect to provisions on her behalf by adjudging the husband to be her trustee, and requiring him to account accordingly." And he thereupon cited Wallingsford v. Allen, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 583; Garver v. Miller, 16 Ohio St. 527; Houghton v. Houghton, 14 Ind. 505; 77 Am. Dec. 69.

to the child's welfare as paramount,¹ and award the custody to that parent who is most proper, fit and able to promote the same.² If not prejudicial to this, any family arrangement in the deed as to custody, visits, etc., will be sustained.³ Under the present English law,⁴ a provision as to children is construed wholly with regard to their welfare.⁵

5. In the deed of a medical officer in the British army, having four children, the eldest eleven and the youngest three years old, he stipulated that after his approaching absence in India, he should resume their entire custody, the wife to be accorded full and free access to them, to the extent, at least, of her having the opportunity of spending one day in every fortnight with them. Four years afterwards he was ordered to Egypt, and proposed to take the first child, a daughter, and the third one, a son, with him. On her application for an injunction—held, that the deed did not preclude him from taking them; there being no proof that his purpose was to prevent her having access to them. Hunt v. Hunt, 28 Ch. Div. 606.

Where the husband had indecently conducted himself towards his female child seven years old, a stipulation in the deed giving the wife the sole care, protection, and management of the children, was held not to be contrary to public policy. Swift v. Swift, 4 De G. J. & S. 710; 34 Beav. 266.

In McAllister v. McAllister, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 345—where the husband had used personal violence against the wife and she appealed from an award of referees under the separation deed—the court by McFarland, J., said: "The most embarrassing question we have had to consider is in regard to the custody of the children. This is a right we would interfere with with the greatest delicacy and caution. We cannot foresee the probable course of future events sufficiently to enable us to form an opinion as to how the interests of the children will best be promoted. . . . Their tender age makes it probable that for the present the complainant [mother] should have their custody. . . . But we cannot say that this will continue so. . . . We doubt not that he has affection for them that should be respected, and his rights regarded." He was allowed "full liberty to visit them."

Hope v. Hope, L. R., 3 P. & M. 326, and Vansittart v. Vansittart, 4 K. & J. 62, led to enactment of 36 Vict. 12, declaring the deed not invalidated by its providing for the father's giving up custody of an infant to the mother; and leaving enforcement discretionary with the court.

Trivial breaches of a husband's covenants in the deed will not debar him from getting enjoined an action by the wife for restitution of conjugal rights; e. g., after covenanting to allow an infant child to remain with her, his concurring as next friend in a petition under the infant's Custody Act (36 Vict., ch. 12) for its removal from her custody, ordered by the court; this not being an actual breach. Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. Div. 605.

4. Avoidance.—The ordinary grounds for avoiding a contract apply to a separation deed; e. g., procurement by fraud or undue stress, etc.,¹ except, sometimes, in case of infancy and coverture.² Resumption of cohabitation, restoring the former relations, will also avoid the deed.³

The fact that before the marriage the wife had had illicit intercourse with another than the husband, and induced him to execute the deed in contemplation of a renewal thereof, would be ground for its avoidance.⁴

benefit of herself and children, and convey a part to them when they should become of age. Held, that the whole title, both legal and equitable, vested in the mother and children; and in an action to determine an adverse claim the court would protect the children's title. *Joyce v. One's conveyance of all his property to his wife and daughter on condition that she discontinue her pending suit for a limited time was held void as to existing creditors. Morgan v. Potter, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 403.

The distinction between executed and executory arrangements for separation seems to have been swept away by Wilson v. Wilson, 1 H. L. Cas. 538.

2. In England, in 1826, in Stamper v. Barker, 5 Madd. 157—where a wife who was an infant, and entitled to a present interest in certain personal property, and to a contingent interest in certain other property, had entered with her husband and her father into a deed of separation, agreeing that she retain her present interest, and her husband have a share in the contingent property if it fall into possession—the court (Leach, Vice Ch.), in holding that upon her survivorship the deed was a nullity as to her, said: "It is true that the law of this court permits a father or a guardian of a female infant to contract, before marriage, on her part, with her intended husband, as to her personal estate, because otherwise it would become his property; and as to her jointure, because her benefit and the convenience of families requires it. But there is no principle or authority for stating that after marriage a parent or guardian can bind the interest of an infant feme covert by contract with her husband."

Where the husband had lived in adultery, and the wife, instead of suing for a divorce, consented to a deed of separation providing for her maintenance, it was held not to be fraudulent as against his creditors. Hobbs v. Hull, 1 Cox 445.

An intention to facilitate divorce proceedings will invalidate the deed. Frampton v. Frampton, 4 Beav. 293.

A mere provision for a future and prospective separation is invalid. Cocksedge v. Cocksedge, 14 Sim. 244; Westmeath v. Salisbury, 5 Bligh N. R. 339.

The husband's conveyance to a trustee for the wife's use, made on execution of separation articles, will not be set aside for her subsequent adultery while living apart.¹

Adultery may be a ground for forfeiture of dower, but not of a jointure. Seagrave v. Seagrave, 13 Ves. 439.

In Converse v. Converse, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 555, the court, by Dargan, Ch., said: "It is well settled that where the wife, under a general power of disposition, bestows her separate estate upon her husband, although the prescribed forms of conveyance be punctiliously observed, the court will regard the transaction with jealousy and look into it with a rigid scrutiny, under an apprehension that the gift to the husband may have been extorted by an abuse of the marital power and authority. And if it appears that the gift has been wrung from her by undue means or influence, the deed will be set aside."

A deed executed under the wife's apprehension of the husband's suit for divorce on the ground of her adultery, and wherein she conveyed to a trustee $12,000 worth of real estate, for him and the two children—he to deliver to the trustee annually certain provision for her support—held invalid. Switzer v. Switzer, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 574.

In England, it has been held, that a deed made between husband and wife and a trustee, with a covenant by the husband to pay the trustee an annuity, in case she live apart from him, is void, as contemplating a future separation at her pleasure, and therefore against marriage policy. Durant v. Titley, 7 Price 577.

In Rodney v. Chambers, 2 East 283; in commenting on Gawden v. Draper, 2 Vent. 217, the court, by Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said: "That case was a provision for a separate maintenance until such time as the parties, by a certain instrument, should declare their assent to live together again. The question raised by the plea was, whether an actual cohabitation afterwards by consent, without its being so signified, and a covenant to retain the provision before stipulated to be paid by the husband during such cohabitation, were a good plea in bar of the first covenant? But at least it shows that the first covenant was good in law; for otherwise the court could never have given judgment for the plaintiff on the covenant declared on."

In Chambers v. Caulfield, 6 East 253, the court by Lawrence, J., restricted the foregoing decision (Rodney v. Chambers, 2 East 283) as follows: "In that case, the court only decided that a covenant for separation and separate maintenance with the consent of the trustees was good; not that a covenant was good generally that a wife might separate herself from her husband whenever she pleased; for that would be to make the husband tenant at will to the wife of his marital rights."

Where a deed stipulated that the husband should not visit the wife without her consent, his visit to her with her consent and passing one night in her chamber was, in absence of any other evidence of reconciliation, held not to avoid the deed. Hitner's Appeal, 54 Pa. St. 110.

The wife's covenant not to disturb the husband is not broken by her instituting suit for judicial separation. Thomas v. Everard, 6 H. & N. 448; Williams v. Baily, L. R., 2 Eq. 731. Compare Brown v. Brown, L. R., 3 P. & M. 202.

When and to what extent one's breach of a covenant will exonerate the other covenantor, see Fearon v. Aylesford, 12 Q. B. Div. 539. (In this case, it seems that the wife's covenant not to disturb the husband was not broken by her committing adultery, though it resulted in the birth of a child.)

One's mere trifling breach of a covenant will not disentitle him to a specific performance of the deed. Crouch v. Waller, 4 De G. & J. 302; Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. Div. 605.

The deed may not import that the parties shall live in chastity; yet gross misconduct of the husband may prevent his relying on the deed as against the wife's insisting on the bargain for maintenance. Gandy v. Gandy, 7 P. Div. 168.

As to enforcement of nuptial agreements in general, see HUSBAND AND WIFE, vol. 9, p. 792.

Enforcement has been refused where no separation actually took place as contemplated. Bindley v. Mulloney, L. R., 7 Eq. 343; Hindley v. Westmeath, 6 B. & C. 200; 13 E. C. L. 141; Jodrell v. Jodrell, 9 Beav. 45.

So also where the wife returned and cohabited fourteen days. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 3 Bro. C. C. 619, note; 2 Cox 98.

Enforcement of a stipulation to live separate was refused in Wilkes v. Wilkes, 2 Dickens 791.

Equity will enforce one's stipulation not to molest his wife. Sanders v. Rodway, 16 Beav. 207.

Equity will enjoin the wife's suit for restitution of conjugal rights. Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. Div. 605.

On one's breach of a covenant not to sue for restitution of conjugal rights, the other covenantor may plead the separation deed by way of equitable defense. Marshall v. Marshall, 5 P. D. 19. Formerly, however, the remedy was by injunction. Hunt v. Hunt, 4 De G. F. & J. 221; Flower v. Flower, 25 L. T. N. S. 902.

The covenants may not be interdependent; but it seems that acts of one party wholly inconsistent with the objects of the deed, will exonerate the other from liability thereunder. Fearon v. Aylesford, 12 Q. B. Div. 539.

A bond executed by the husband to secure payment of an annuity provided in the deed will support a suit by the trustee, notwithstanding the wife's subsequent divorce a vinculo, and marriage to another. Blaker v. Cooper, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 499.

In Jones v. Waite, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 341; 35 E. C. L. 130, the court by Denman, C. J., said: "That the husband himself may derive protection against debts incurred by his wife while living apart from him, by showing that he had agreed with a trustee to provide adequate funds for her maintenance, and had in fact provided them, is clearly established by several cases," particularly by that of Nurse v. Craig, 2 N. R. 148; 5 B. & P. 153.

Compensation for breach of the covenant may be assessed at a pecuniary sum. Fearon v. Aylesford, 12 Q. B. Div. 539.

A tripartite deed not executed by the trustee, will not be enforced in equity. Smith v. Knowles, 2 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 413.

The court will enforce the legal covenants, regardless of the illegal ones. Hamilton v. Hector, L. R., 13 Eq. Cas. 511.

A separation deed without a valuable consideration is not enforceable at law. Beach v. Beach, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 260; 38 Am. Dec. 584; Griffin v. Banks, 37 N. Y. 621.

A deed professing to be a mutual settlement may stand as a good will of one of the spouses, though it be invalid as to the other from defect of execution. Millar v. Birrell, 4 Sc. Ct. Sess. (4th series) 87. Compare Lang v. Brown, 5 Sc. Ct. Sess. (3d series) 789.

An agreement for the husband and wife's parting, and for his returning her portion, £160, to her father, and for the father's indemnifying him from her maintenance and debts, was established by a decree, although the husband offered to receive her back and maintain her. Seeling v. Crawley, 2 Vern. 385.

Where the husband wrote to the

6. Effect—a. IN GENERAL.—At common law a married woman could not contract and be sued as a feme sole, even though living apart from her husband and having a separate maintenance wife's father, agreeing to pay her an annuity quarterly, so long as they continue separate, this was decreed on her suit to recover arrears, although it did not appear that the deed contained any indemnity against her debts. Head v. Head, 3 Atk. 547.

In Pennsylvania, equity will not enforce an agreement to live separate, but will recognize the wife's acquirement of separate property under a separation deed. McKenna v. Phillips, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 571.

In Ohio, an agreement for separation, wherein the wife stipulated to renounce dower and to support three of the children, in consideration that the husband would convey to her in fee simple a specified part of the farm, was enforced after his death by decree enjoining partition and ordering conveyance. Thomas v. Brown, 10 Ohio St. 247.

In Michigan, in an action between a husband and wife on a contract between them, equity will, if needful, adjudge him to be her trustee, and require him to account accordingly. Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563.

In Iowa, a wife's petition for alimony (without divorce) was granted, although in consideration of the husband's having given her $500 worth of personal property, she had orally agreed at the separation to release all further claim on him; she being, at the trial of the case, desirous to reconvert with him. Farber v. Farber, 64 Iowa 362.

In Missouri, a separation contract so framed as to take effect only on condition that a divorce is granted without alimony, even though with trustee and in escrow, will not be enforced. Speck v. Dausman, 7 Mo. App. 165.

In Vermont, courts of equity (and not of probate) must enforce both antenuptial and post-nuptial contracts. Mann v. Mann, 53 Vt. 48; Graves v. Wakefield, 54 Vt. 313.

A, on separation from his wife, executed to B a bond conditioned to pay her, at B's house, 5s. during A's life, and let her be separate and go where and with what friends she thinks fit. She discontinued to reside in B's family, and lived in adultery with C. Thereupon B, with A's consent, burnt the bond. Held, that, nevertheless, the contract should be enforced, Sir Wm. Grant, M. R., saying: "At common law, dower was not forfeited by adultery." Seagrave v. Seagrave, 13 Ves. 439.

Therein the Master of the Rolls cited Blount v. Winter, 3 P. Wms. 276, n., where, on behalf of trustees and children, execution of marriage articles was decreed against the husband, notwithstanding the wife's living in adultery.

Adultery of the wife after separation is no answer to an action on a covenant to pay a trustee a separate maintenance for her. Baynon v. Batley, 8 Bing. 256; 1 M. & S. 339; 21 E. C. L. 295.

A caused B to be indicted for beating and imprisoning B's wife, who was A's daughter. On return of a verdict of guilty, and at instance of justices, the counsel of the parties executed an agreement that a deed of separation be executed by B to A as trustee to pay her a certain annuity quarterly, A to indemnify B against Mrs. B's debts and B not to be molested by her, all actions pending against any person for criminal conversation with her to be discontinued. B refused to execute the deed. Held, that specific performance should be decreed, and that the compromise of prosecution was not against public policy. Elworthy v. Bird, 2 Sim. & Stu. 372.

A separation deed executed as a compromise of a divorce suit may be made an order of the court as to payment of costs. Smythe v. Smythe, 18 Q. B. Div. 544.

In England, a court of chancery will enforce specific performance of an agreement for a separation deed and for compromise of a suit in the divorce court, without infringing the Judicature Act, prohibiting proceedings pending in another branch of the court; and this though it provided for the wife's having custody of the children. The term, "usual covenants," does not apply to a dum casta clause therein; the term will be construed with reference to surrounding circumstances; her alleged adultery not proven will not be considered. Hart v. Hart, 18 Ch. Div. 670.

secured to her by deed.¹ But this rule has been largely modified by statute.²

1. In Marshall v. Rutton, 8 T. R. 545 (assumpsit against a married woman living apart, for goods sold her), the court, by Lord Kenyon, C. J., said: "The agreement to live separate is supposed to be made between two parties, who, according to the text of Littleton, § 168, being in law but one person, are on that account unable to contract with each other; and if the foundation fail, the consequence is that the whole superstructure must also fail. This difficulty meets the plaintiff in limine. If it did not, and the parties were competent to contract at all, it would then become material to consider how far a compact could be valid, which has for its object the contravention of the general policy of the law in settling the relations of domestic life, and which the public is interested to preserve; and which, without dissolving the bond of marriage, would place the parties, in some respects, in the condition of being single, and leave them in others subject to the consequences of being married, and which would introduce all the confusion and inconvenience which must necessarily result from so anomalous and mixed a character. It may be asked . . . how any power short of the legislature can change that which, by the common law of the land, is established as the course of judicial proceedings?" Compare an earlier case, deciding that the husband must be joined in a suit against a feme covert sole trader. Beard v. Webb, 2 B. & P. 93.

2. In Pennsylvania one's stipulation that the wife "shall exercise all the rights of a feme sole, wholly freed and discharged from all his power and authority"—held to empower her to bequeath her earnings. Wagner's Estate, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 448.

In New York, in a separation deed between husband and wife and trustee, he covenanted that she might prosecute suits and he not interfere, but ratify her proceedings. Two years after separation, she instituted in both of their names, an action for slander. Held, that his release of the cause of action was a good bar to a recovery. Beach v. Beach, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 260; 38 Am. Dec. 584.

As to the effect under later New York statutes, see Griffin v. Banks, 37

N. Y. 621; Carpenter v. Osborn, 102 N. Y. 552.

After articles of separation wherein the husband agreed to pay the wife $200 annually, she to surrender all claim to support and dower, a decree of divorce from bed and board was rendered in which she accepted a gross sum of $1,100, "in lieu of alimony and of all claims for her separate support and maintenance forever." Held, that as he failed to pay the annuity, the articles were ineffectual as to dower. Day v. West, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 592.

In Maryland, one's covenant, in a separation deed, voluntarily and with full knowledge of the wife's adultery, executed with her and her father, to pay for her personal support and maintenance a certain sum annually during the husband's life, was held not to be avoided by a divorce a vinculo matrimonii obtained at the husband's instance. In such case, the custody and care of the children may properly be awarded to the father. Kremelberg v. Kremelberg, 52 Md. 553.

A husband and wife's entering into a written agreement for a separation, in contemplation of a divorce, under which specific articles of personal property were agreed to be held by each, respectively, but which contained nothing evidencing an intention on his part to abandon his rights to all the property she might thereafter acquire and die possessed of, in case there was no divorce, was held to give title, nor would the fact that she was indebted at the time of her death give her creditors the right to administer; and this, though he be insolvent or out of the State. Willis v. Jones, 42 Md. 422.

In Maryland it has been held that the husband's compliance with a provision in the deed to support the wife exonerates him from paying a claim for necessities. Brown v. Brown, 5 Gill (Md.) 249.

In Tennessee it was held that after the husband's death, the wife might elect between holding property conveyed to the trustee in the separation deed or taking her dower or distributive share. Watkins v. Watkins, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 283; Parham v. Parham, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 287.

In England it has been held that the

b. AS TO DIVORCES.—A deed of separation is generally no bar to a suit for a divorce.¹

III. SEPARATION WITHOUT DEED—1. Rights in General.—By the common law of England and of many of the States, and by the statutes of some States, he who has abandoned his wife without provision for her support is presumed to have waived his right to her acquisitions as a sole trader, and she may sue and be sued, contract and convey, as a feme sole; in many instances, however, an ordinary protracted absence being distinguished from that of his imprisonment, exile, or other civil death. The subject can be comprehended only by an historic and comparative view.²

general reputation of separation and allowance for support is sufficient to protect the husband against a claim for necessities. Todd v. Stoakes, 1 Salk. 116. But in a case where the allowance was only 5s. per week, it was held otherwise, Lord Mansfield however, dissenting. Nurse v. Craig, 5 B. & P. 148. Compare Cragg v. Bowman, 6 Mod. 147; Corbet v. Poelnitz, 1 T. R. 5.

1. Beeby v. Beeby, Hagg. Consist. 143, n.; 1 Eccl. 789; Anderson v. Anderson, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 380; Fosdick v. Fosdick, 15 R. I. 130; Stokes v. Stokes, 1 Mo. 320; J. G. v. H. G. 33 Md. 401; 3 Am. Rep. 183; Kremelberg v. Kremelberg, 52 Md. 553.

In Squires v. Squires, 53 Vt. 208; 38 Am. Rep. 668, it was held otherwise, but the weight of authority seems to be against this Vermont decision.

In Miller v. Miller, 1 N. J. Eq. 386, it was held that in the circumstances the deed was no bar to the wife's claim for alimony. A similar conclusion was reached in Wilson v. Wilson, 40 Iowa 230.

See Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. Div. 605; Thomas v. Thomas, 2 S. & T. 113; Rowley v. Rowley, L. R., 1 H. L. Sc. 63; Barker v. Barker, 2 Addam's Eccl. 285; Coode v. Coode, 1 Curtels 757; Morrall v. Morrall, 6 P. Div. 98.

Brown v. Brown, 5 Gill (Md.) 249, has been cited as an authority to show that in Maryland a voluntary deed of separation between the parties is a bar to an application for divorce, but the court in J. G. v. H. G., 33 Md. 401, said that it did not so interpret that decision.

In Matthews v. Matthews, 1 S. & T. 499, it was held that the lapse of nine years, when taken in connection with a separation deed made three years before the bringing of a suit for divorce, showed a want of good faith and therefore the petition was dismissed. This decision was followed in Williams v. Williams, 35 L. J. Rep. M. C. 85.

In Hunt v. Hunt, 31 L. J. Ch. 161, it was held that a deed of separation would afford ground for enjoining a suit by the husband, for a restitution of conjugal rights.

In England, articles of separation were, in the House of Lords, held to form an insuperable bar to the special interposition of the legislature, on an application for a divorce. Esten's Divorce, 33 Hans. Parl. Hist. 1306.

The deed may, by express stipulation, bar a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. Hunt v. Hunt, 31 L. J. Ch. 161; Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. Div. 605; Marshall v. Marshall, 5 P. Div. 19.

In England, the law was declared in a case (temp. 2 Anne) the total report whereof is as follows: "An ordinary working man married a woman of like condition; after cohabitation for some time he left, and during his absence she worked; and this action being brought for her diet, it was held that the money she earned should go to keep her." Warr v. Huntley, J. Holt 102 (sub nom. Warr v. Huntley, 1 Salk. 118).

For the current of adjudication concerning the rights and liabilities of the husband, upon his return, see Walford v. Pienne, 2 Esp. 554; Kay v. De Pienne, 3 Camp. 123; Deerly v. Mazarine, 1 Salk. 116 (sub nom. "Deery," etc., 1 Ld. Raym. 147); Newsome v. Bowyer, 3 P. Wms. 37; Carrol v. Blencow, 4 Esp. 27; De Gaillon v. L'Aigle, 1 B. & P. 357; Marsh v.

Hutchinson, 2 B. & P. 226; Farrer v. Count de Grenard, 11 East 301; De Wahl v. Braune, 1 H. & N. 178.

These decisions were not wholly uniform. Moreover a distinction was drawn between the husband's liabilities in equity and at law. Clayton v. Adams, 6 T. R. 605. It was also held that a wife eloping and running in debt, could not be sued alone. Hatchett v. Baddeley, 2 W. Bl. 1079. Nor did a divorce a mensa restore her capacity as a feme sole. Faithorne v. Blaquiere, 6 M. & S. 73.

As to the liability of a second husband (taken after the civil death of the first) see Corbett v. Poelnitz, 1 T. R. 5.

As to the effect of bankruptcy of a convict's wife, see Ex parte Franks, 7 Bing. 762; 20 E. C. L. 323.

Where, after an order had been made for payment of the wife's life income of a fund in court, he deserted her, and became bankrupt, it was held that two-thirds of the income should be paid to herself, and one-third to his assignees. Vaughan v. Buck, 3 Eng. L. & Eq. 135.

Where, during the husband's imprisonment, the wife carried on a business on her own account, it was held that he was liable for articles furnished her therein after his insolvent discharge, with his knowledge, although the invoices and receipts were in her name, and she paid the poor rates. Petty v. Anderson, 3 Bing. 170; 11 E. C. L. 84. Compare Lovett v. Robinson, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 105.

It was also held that a wife living apart could not contract as a feme sole when having a settled provision. Marshall v. Rutton, 8 T. R. 545; Hyde v. Price, 3 Ves. 437. Also that a woman divorced for her adultery could not so contract. Lewis v. Lee, 3 B. & C. 291; 10 E. C. L. 84. Also that her ante-nuptial debts survived against her upon his death or divorce. Woodman v. Chapman, 1 Camp. 189. (Compare Waul v. Kirkman, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 599; Clarke v. Windham, 12 Ala. 798.) Also that if a husband deserts his wife, he is liable to a tradesman for necessities obtained (she alive) by another woman falsely by him represented to be his wife. Robinson v. Nahon, 1 Camp. 245.

In Alabama, where the husband remained at Georgia, permitting the wife to go with their children into Alabama and there carry on business, it was held that his assent to her indorsing bills and notes in her own name must be presumed. Roland v. Logan, 18 Ala. 307. (Citing Story on Bills 91.) Also that if he has abjured the State, she may sue and be sued as a feme sole. Arthur v. Broadnax, 3 Ala. 557; 37 Am. Dec. 707; James v. Stewart, 9 Ala. 855. After he has deserted her, she can be proceeded against at law for a debt which she owed before marriage. Clarke v. Windham, 12 Ala. 798.

In California, his protracted absence removes her disability to contract as a feme sole, and neither he nor his creditors can claim her acquisitions meanwhile made. Lawrence v. Spear, 17 Cal. 421; Loring v. Stuart, 79 Cal. 200.

In Arkansas, otherwise. Rogers v. Phillips, 8 Ark. 366; 47 Am. Dec. 727.

In Idaho, by statute, the earnings of the wife when living separate, and also those of the minor children with her, are her own property. Idaho Rev. Stat. 1887, § 2502. (For somewhat similar provisions of other States, see infra, this title, Compulsory Statutes.)

In Illinois, by statute, a deserted spouse may prosecute and defend any action as might the deserter. Ill. Rev. Stat. 1891, p. 1790, § 3. As to the effect, upon the wife's agency, of the statute making both spouses responsible for family expenses, see Gaffield v. Scott, 40 Ill. App. 380; Woodyatt v. Connell, 38 Ill. App. 477; Lipe v. McClevy, 41 Ill. App. 59; Hazelbaker v. Goodfellow, 64 Ill. App. 238. As to the earlier law, see Love v. Moynahan, 16 Ill. 277; 63 Am. Dec. 306.

In Kentucky, it has been held that after the wife's divorce or death, the husband is not liable for her debts contracted dum sola, unless they have been reduced to judgment against him. Morrow v. Whitesides, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 411.

In Maryland, the common-law doctrine of England has prevailed. Worthington v. Cooke, 52 Md. 297.

In Massachusetts, in 1818, it was held that a feme covert, whose husband had deserted her in a foreign country, and who had thenceforth maintained herself a feme sole, and for five years had lived in Massachusetts (he never being in the United States), was competent to sue and be sued as a feme sole, and her release was a valid discharge of a judgment recovered by her. Gregory v. Paul, 15 Mass. 31 (Citing Belknap's Case, Co. Lit. 132a; Willmot's Case, Moore, 851; Dubois v.

Hale, 2 Vern. 614; Portland v. Rogers, 2 Vern. 104; Derry v. Mazarine, 1 Ld. Raym. 147). This decision was quoted with approval in Rhea v. Rhenner, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 108. See also Cox v. Kitchin, 1 B. & P. 338; Gregory v. Pierce, 4 Met. (Mass.) 478.

In Massachusetts, moreover, it was early held that a wife whose husband is an alien or non-resident, is restored to her capacity to contract as a feme sole. Abbott v. Bayley, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 89. So also after her divorce a mensa. Dean v. Richmond, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 461.

In Mississippi, upon the wife's divorce or death, the husband is not liable for the wife's contracts dum sola, even upon his promise thereafter made to pay, if made with no new consideration. Waul v. Kirkman, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 599. His desertion will not invest her with power to make a will. Cain v. Bunkley, 35 Miss. 119.

In New York, upon his temporary absence, circumstances may raise a presumption that she is his authorized superintending agent. Church v. Landers, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 79. And in case of his absence for seven years, under circumstances raising a presumption of his death, she may sue and be sued as a feme sole. King v. Paddock, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 141.

In Pennsylvania, the fact that the wife has been decreed a feme sole trader, does not exempt the husband from liability for necessities. Markley v. Wartman, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 236. Otherwise, as to her shop-keeping debts, he residing in the same city. Jacob v. Featherstone, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 346. If he has long deserted her, she may dispose of her acquisitions as her own. Starrett v. Wynn, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 130; 17 Am. Dec. 654. So held also, in the case of the wife of a mariner, absent two years, without leaving her any support. Valentine v. Ford, 2 Browne (Pa.) 193. Compare Mackinley v. McGregor, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 369; Walker v. Simpson, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 83; 42 Am. Dec. 216; Hultz v. Gibbs, 66 Pa. St. 360. Upon his deserting her, she cannot be held liable as a feme sole trader unless she has been decreed such. Hentz v. Clawson, 34 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 5; Cleaver v. Scheetz, 70 Pa. St. 496. She cannot become surety, unless it be necessary in prosecuting her business or profession. Cochran v. Garrettson, 1 Leg. Gaz. (Pa.) 218.

There, moreover, her renunciation of conjugal intercourse deprives her of the right of administration on his estate. Odiorne's Appeal, 54 Pa. St. 175; 93 Am. Dec. 683; Hettrick v. Hettrick, 55 Pa. St. 290; Platt's Appeal, 80 Pa. St. 501. (Otherwise if he is the deserter. Fyock's Estate, 135 Pa. St. 522.)

After he has deserted her, leaving her in his house, upon his creditors' levy thereon, she can claim the exemption, if not waived by him. Kerst's Appeal, 2 Lew. Supr. Ct. Cas. (Pa.) 117.

Where, in consideration that she would marry him, thereby losing her pension, he confessed a judgment in her favor, it was held that on their separation, each alleging desertion, she could have execution issued thereon, without intervention of a trustee. Kincade v. Cunningham, 1 Mon. Supr. Ct. Cas. (Pa.) 11.

As to the effect of her laches after his death, in seeking to obtain a re-vesting of his property conveyed to her in trust before marriage, see Bigham's Appeal, 123 Pa. St. 262; 10 Am. St. Rep. 522.

A deserted wife's conveyance, held to be void. Thorndell v. Morrison, 25 Pa. St. 326.

In order to sustain his claim of curtesy in the estate of a deserted wife, he must show that his desertion was justifiable. Hahn v. Bealor, 132 Pa. St. 243.

The moral obligation was held to be a sufficient consideration for a renewal, after divorce, of a promise made by the wife, during coverture, to pay a third party for work done upon her son's property. Hemphill v. McClimans, 24 Pa. St. 367.

In South Carolina, in case of the husband's absence long enough to raise a presumption of his death, the wife may sue and be sued as a feme sole. Boyce v. Owens, 1 Hill (S. Car.) 8.

In Texas, it was held that, upon a husband's desertion of his wife, she became vested with absolute control of her personal property (e. g., a negro girl), and that on resumption of cohabitation after her sale thereof, they could not recover either the property or its increase. Walker v. Stringfellow, 30 Tex. 571.

In Vermont, it has been held that during the husband's absence of a few months, the wife may be presumed to be his authorized agent in the care of his farm and live stock, with power to contract for him. Felker v. Emerson, 16 Vt. 653; 42 Am. Dec. 532. See also

After their voluntary separation, they may for some purposes, be witnesses for or against each other.¹ His living apart from her has, under certain circumstances, been held to deprive him of remedy for her misconduct.²

2. Husband's Liability for Wife's Support.—The conjugal relation imposes upon the husband the duty to support the wife.³ If he has provided therefor by deed or otherwise, and is fulfilling the provision, she cannot pledge his credit therefor;⁴ otherwise, if he fails to fulfill the stipulation⁵ or to pay the alimony in a a case as to a child's gravestone. Meader v. Page, 39 Vt. 406. But Compare Robinson v. Reynolds, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 174; 15 Am. Dec. 673; Sawyer v. Cutting, 23 Vt. 486.

His permission, granted upon her departure, that she take her apparel with her, was held to be a waiver of all his rights thereto. Delano v. Blanchard, 52 Vt. 579.

In Virginia, a bill by the husband's administrator for a discovery of money taken away by a deserting wife, was held to be properly dismissed. McCormick v. McCormick, 7 Leigh. (Va.) 66.

The present common law thereon in case of separation without deed, most generally accepted, is very well expressed in certain statute law; e. g., Ga. Code, 1882, § 1758, similar to that of the California statute of 1874. See infra, this title, Compulsory Statutes, Cal. Civil Code, 1885, § 175.

This duty is not affected by the fact that he married her in order to secure his discharge in bastardy, and upon assurances that he would not be bound to live with her. State v. Ransell, 41 Conn. 433.

Nor by the fact that she induced the marriage by falsely representing herself to be with child by him. Fairchild v. Fairchild, 43 N. J. Eq. 473.

Under the Iowa statute (McClain's

Iowa Code, 1888, § 3415)—allowing the husband a divorce, if, at the time of the marriage, she was with child by another (unless he had an illegitimate child then living unknown to her)—he is not in such case bound to live with her or support her child. Brannum v. O'Connor, 77 Iowa 632.

In West Virginia, so also, where he did not know of her ante-nuptial prostitution, W. Va. Code, 1891, p. 612, § 5.

In England, he is liable also to support her children by a former marriage, if he has taken them into the family. Stone v. Carr, 3 Esp. 1.

In some of the States, a statute declares this to be his duty, if he has taken them in, etc. Cal. Civil Code, 1885, § 209.

An early English case has been much criticised. A husband before, and in consideration of the marriage, and of 6,000 pounds, the wife's portion, had made a decree a mensa.¹ In general, upon their voluntary separation without sufficient provision for her maintenance, he is liable for medical attendance or other necessities furnished her by third parties.² This general rule applies in many instances of separation not mutually voluntary.³ The decisions as to the requisites of recovery in a suit against him upon debts incurred by her for support while apart, are not uniform.⁴ While the presumption of her agency continues, the burden of proof is on the husband to show that he had supplied her sufficient maintenance according to their condition in life.⁵

trust deed of lands, to pay her annually 100 pounds pin money. After cohabiting many years they quarreled, and she went alone to France, and remained there; finally inducing her trustees to bring ejectment for recovery of the term. He filed a bill in equity, tendering cohabitation, and payment of the annuity if she would return, and praying injunction of the suit. But Ld. Hardwicke, chancellor, refused the prayer, and ordered him to account. Moore v. Moore, 1 Atk. 272.

Brown*, 139 Mass. 35.

He assenting to her living apart and earning her own support, cannot recover for her earnings paid to her and appropriated thereto. Norcross v. Rodgers, 30 Vt. 588.

A precarious income from some extraneous source is not sufficient. Thus the fact that a deserted wife had a pension of 300 pounds a year, determinable at the pleasure of the crown was held not to preclude her from pledging her husband's credit. Thompson v. Harvey, 4 Burr. 2177.

3. So held where, without such provision, he unjustifiably left the State to get a divorce. Hanover v. Turner, 14 Mass. 227; 7 Am. Dec. 203.

Where he unjustifiably absented himself, he was held liable for debts meanwhile incurred by her in keeping a boarding house for her support. Rotch v. Miles, 2 Conn. 638.

If he abandons her, she can put her minor children to proper service, and assign their wages to aid in their support. Camerlin v. Palmer Co., 10 Allen (Mass.) 539.

4. As to suits for necessities furnished during cohabitation, see HUSBAND AND WIFE, vol. 9, p. 830.

In England, one who furnishes support to an unjustly deserted wife, has a remedy in equity against the husband. Deare v. Soutten, L. R., 9 Eq. 151; Jenner v. Morris, 3 De Gex F. & J. 45.

In New York, until the code system, a suit at law was held to be the proper remedy. Pomeroy v. Wells, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 406.

5. Baker v. Sampson, 14 C. B. N. S. 383; 108 E. C. L. 382; Frost v. Willis, 13 Vt. 202; Walker v. Loughton, 31 N. H. 111; Tebbetts v. Hapgood, 34 N. H. 420.

As to circumstances requiring the tradesman to show that the husband did not make sufficient provision, see Mott v. Comstock, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 544; Pool v. Everton, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 241.

Where, on separation by mutual consent, the husband paid the wife $300, she agreeing to make no claim to support, and to release her dower right in his land, and she made no such claim nor any offer to return, it was held that he was not chargeable with other supplies furnished her. Alley v. Winn, 134 Mass. 77; 45 Am. Rep. 297.

Where, on such separation, he contracted with her father for her maintenance, but she afterwards left her father without any good cause, it was held that she could not pledge her husband's credit for her support. Pidgin v. Cram, 8 N. H. 350.

Where she justifiably departed and remained with a relative until divorced, meanwhile receiving (to induce her to join in a conveyance) certain purchase money, the husband was held to be

This presumption does not extend to authorize her to "borrow money to lay out for necessities."¹ His assent to the furnishing will be presumed, upon proof that he knew thereof and made no objection.² Whether upon separation with a sufficient allowance, which the husband continues to meet, or upon adequate provi-liable to him for her board before, but not after the receipt. Litson v. Brown, 26 Ind. 489.

In a suit for apparel furnished her, he may show, in evidence of the superfluity, that she had incurred debts therefor with other parties. Renaux v. Teakle, 20 Eng. L. & Eq. 345.

Proof that she acquiesced in the allowance, is not conclusive that it accorded with her husband's position, etc. Hodgkinson v. Fletcher, 4 Camp. 70. The question of suitability to her estate in life may depend upon her husband's apparent, rather than his actual income. Morgan v. Chetwynd, 4 F. & F. 451; Waithman v. Wakefield, 1 Camp. 120. For circumstances rendering proper a verdict that an allowance of £800 per annum was sufficient for a lady of certain rank, see Holder v. Cope, 2 C. & K. 437; 61 E. C. L. 435. An allowance of $80 per month (less than one-third of his income) was approved. Johnson v. Johnson, 24 Ill. App. 80.

Articles are not rendered "necessaries" merely because substituted for other articles which might be nuisances. Thorpe v. Shapleigh, 67 Me. 235. They are "something more than mere house-room and food enough to sustain animal life." Briggs v. Briggs, 24 S. Car. 377. In Thill v. Pohlman, 76 Iowa 638, the court, by Granger, J., defined them to be "those comforts and surroundings reasonable and necessary for home-enjoyment in the society in which she lives." See also as to quality, quantity, category, etc., Porter v. Briggs, 38 Iowa 166; 18 Am. Rep. 27. What are such is a question of fact for the jury.

In Pennsylvania, a husband living separately is not liable for money loaned to the wife, unless it be shown that he turned her away without cause, and that the money was actually expended for necessities. Walker v. Simpson, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 73; 42 Am. Dec. 216.

2. These are ordinarily considered as governed by the rule of necessities. Thus it has been held that he is liable for the reasonable costs of proceedings at law or in equity against him by her. Williams v. Fowler, 1 M'Cl. & Y. 269; Sprayberry v. Merk, 30 Ga. 81; 76 Am. Dec. 637.

Where he needlessly sought to compel her to find sureties to keep the peace, he was held to be liable for her expenses in defense. Warner v. Heiden, 28 Wis. 517; 9 Am. Rep. 515.

In England, if he has turned her out, and rendered it necessary for her to exhibit articles of the peace against him, he is liable for the attorney's fees therein. Shepherd v. Mackoul, 3 Camp. 326; Turner v. Rookes, 10 A. & E. 47; 37 E. C. L. 35. But compare Grindell v. Godmand, 1 N. & P. 168; Mecredy v. Taylor, 7 Ir. C. L. R. 256.

In the United States also, he has been held liable for her expenses in necessarily proceeding against him for breach of the peace. Morris v. Palmer, 39 N. H. 123.

Otherwise, if her proceeding was groundless. Smith v. Davis, 45 N. H. 566.

As to her costs in divorce proceedings generally, see DIVORCE, vol. 5, p. 745; COSTS, vol. 4, p. 319.

Where the wife instituted a suit for divorce, but the husband reconciled her, and she withdrew it, her attorney was not permitted to recover expenses against him. Phillips v. Simmons, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 287.

In Iowa, it has been that where her attorney had reasonable grounds to believe her entitled to a divorce, but it was refused, the husband was nevertheless bound for the services. Preston v. Johnson, 65 Iowa 285; Porter v. Briggs, 38 Iowa 166. But compare Johnson v. Williams, 2 Greene (Iowa) 97; 54 Am. Dec. 491.

In Porter v. Briggs, 38 Iowa 166; 18 Am. Rep. 27, in holding the husband liable for legal services in a divorce suit brought by the wife to establish her innocence of a charge of adultery made by himself—the court, by Beck, J., declared “necessaries” to include “apparel, furniture, or personal services of servants, mechanics, artists, physicians, or others whom she may employ.”

It has been held that he is not liable for legal services rendered in her successful defense against his divorce suit. Coffin v. Dunham, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 404; 54 Am. Dec. 769; Wing v. Hurlburt, 15 Vt. 607; 40 Am. Dec. 695; Dorsey v. Goodenow, Wright (Ohio) 120; McCullough v. Robinson, 2 Ind. 630; compare Brown v. Ackroyd, 5 E. & B. 819; 85 E. C. L. 818; Shelton v. Pendleton, 18 Conn. 417; Morrison v. Holt, 42 N. H. 478.

In absence of statutory provision therefor, a court will not grant her temporary allowances pending her divorce suit. Harrington v. Harrington, 10 Vt. 505.

Sometimes although the husband prevails in a suit for separation, the court may find cause for declining to order him to pay any allowance. Waring v. Waring, 100 N. Y. 570.

As to her expenses of proceeding for restitution of her conjugal rights, see Wilson v. Ford, L. R., 3 Ex. 63. As to those for separation, see Rice v. Shepherd, 12 C. B. N. S. 332; 104 E. C. L. 330.

In Louisiana, he has been held not to be liable for her expenses in a suit a mensa, even though she be poor, and where his wrongdoing compels the separation.¹ So also is he liable therefor, if she, although voluntarily and unjustifiably leaving him, has returned, or has made a bona fide offer to return.²

This decision has been severely animadverted upon in England. In Houlston v. Smyth, 3 Bing. 127; 11 E. C. L. 64, the court, by Gaselee, J., said: "If a man renders his house unfit for a modest woman to remain in it, she is authorized in going away."

In West Virginia, "a charge of

Her bigamy, if committed through his fault, has been held not to exempt him from liability for her support.¹ So also as to her adultery committed through his connivance.² Proof that the wife, at the time of furnishing her the necessaries, was living in open adultery, constitutes a valid defense to the suit against the husband therefor.³ So also if the plaintiff knew at the time that prostitution made by the husband against the wife falsely, shall be deemed cruel treatment," etc. W. Va. Code, 1891, p. 613, § 6.

As to sævitia of the wife, adjudged insufficient to justify his abandoning her, see Boyce v. Boyce, 23 N. J. Eq. 337.

In Louisiana, where a wife's "incessant demands for money," scorn and personal violence were met by the husband "with unresisting imbecility," until he abandoned the dwelling, she was held not to be entitled to a decree of separation. Naulet v. Dubois, 6 La. Ann. 403. Compare Lalande v. Jore, 5 La. Ann. 32.

A husband cannot without justifiable cause be compelled to support his wife elsewhere than at his own home. Monroe Co. v. Budlong, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 493; People v. Vitan, 20 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 298; Wallace v. Ellis, 42 Ind. 582; Morgan v. Hughes, 20 Tex. 141; Houts v. Houts, 17 Ill. App. 439; Johnson v. Johnson, 24 Ill. App. 80.

Where they quarreled, and she left him, not through fear of his violence, and refused to return unless he would drive his relatives from the house, he was held not to be liable to her father for board furnished to her meanwhile. Blowers v. Sturtevant, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 46.

In California, "the husband is the head of the family. He may choose any reasonable place or mode of living, and the wife must conform thereto. Cal. Civil Code, 1885, § 156. "Neither can be excluded from the other's dwelling," § 157.

In Idaho, the same. Idaho Rev. Stat. 1887, § 2494.

But in New Jersey, where a husband opened a boarding house in another city, with a woman who was unfriendly to his wife, and insincerely invited the wife to come there, he was held to be liable for her support elsewhere. Elliott v. Elliott, 48 N. J. Eq. 231.

In Louisiana, the wife must follow the husband wherever he fixes his domicile. Chretien v. Chretien, 5 Martin, N. S. (La.) 60.

In New York, as to the residence of the husband not drawing with it the residence of the wife in divorce jurisdiction, see Toosey v. Toosey, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 537; De Meli v. De Meli, 120 N. Y. 485; 17 Am. St. Rep. 652.

1. In A's action to recover of B for the support of A's sister C, it appeared that B had married C in London, had forced her away by cruelty, and married D, with whom, after serving a sentence of bigamy therefor, he came to Massachusetts and procured report that he was dead. C then married E, but B caused her to be sentenced for bigamy therefor, and she never after lived with E, but was supported by A. Held, that A was entitled to recover. *Cartwright v. In New Hampshire, it has been held that his duty to support her is not terminated by her adultery committed with his written consent given on condition that she shall not look to him for support. Ferren v. Moore, 59 N. H. 107.

3. Emmett v. Norton, 8 C. & P. 506; 34 E. C. L. 503; Atkins v. Pearce, 2 C. B. N. S. 763; 89 E. C. L. 762.

the husband had discarded her for her adultery.¹ Separation by insanity of either does not change the general rule as to their rights and liabilities meanwhile.² The husband's liability, upon separation, for the support of a pauper wife, is not the same in all the States; owing ordinarily to the difference in their poor laws.³

IV. COMPULSORY STATUTES.—In many States, a statutory provision is made for compulsory support of the wife by a husband unjustifiably abandoning her.⁴

In absence of proof of her guilt, her actual want of the necessities must be clearly shown. Hardie v. Grant, 8 C. & P. 512; 34 E. C. L. 506.

She may be a witness to prove the adultery, and that her husband's visits to her were only to negotiate a deed of separation. Cooper v. Lloyd, 6 C. B. N. S. 519; 95 E. C. L. 518. And it has been held that after her adultery and being consequently turned away, he is not bound to support her, even though himself had previously committed adultery. Govier v. Hancock, 6 T. R. 603. But in such case he was not allowed to prove her adultery by mere evidence of proceedings to a verdict in the divorce court without a decree. Needham v. Bremner, L. R., 1 C. P. 583.

If he turns her out after condoning her adultery, he is liable for subsequent necessities furnished her. Harris v. Morris, 4 Esp. 41.

Where she had left in consequence of a dispute, it was held that the party seeking to render him liable for her board and lodgings must show either that his conduct rendered it improper for her to live with him, or that he knew where she was residing, and made no right-conditioned offer to take her back. Reed v. Moore, 5 C. & P. 200; 24 E. C. L. 277. Compare Rex v. Flintan, 1 B. & Ad. 227; 20 E. C. L. 380.

1. Govier v. Hancock, 6 T. R. 603. See dicta in the noted case, Forrest v. Forrest, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 289. See also Dailey v. Dailey, Wright (Ohio) 514.

The fact that she had been jailed on a complaint for adultery was held to be sufficient notice. Hunter v. Boucher, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 289.

It has even been held that where the wife eloped with an adulterer, the husband was not liable, although the tradesman had no notice of the fact. Morris v. Martin, 1 Stra. 647.

2. Richardson v. Du Bois, L. R., 5 Q. B. 51; Read v. Legard, 6 Exch. 636.

The husband's insanity does not necessarily exempt his estate from liability for necessities furnished. Read v. Legard, 6 Exch. 636; Davidson v. Wood, 1 De G. J. & S. 465.

The wife of a lunatic cannot transfer his property to pay one creditor, to the prejudice of the others. Alexander v. Miller, 16 Pa. St. 215.

In an action for necessities, the validity of her marriage to a lunatic cannot be questioned. Stuckey v. Mathes, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 461.

In Colorado, allowances may be made to the wife of a solvent lunatic as to a widow. Colo. Annot. Stat. 1891, § 294.

3. In New York, the wife of a husband able to support her is not a "pauper" within the statute; and although he unjustifiably turns her out, the superintendents of the poor cannot recover of him for necessities furnished her. Norton v. Rhodes, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 100.

In Massachusetts, otherwise. Monson v. Williams, 6 Gray (Mass.) 416.

In Vermont, he is liable for not over one year's support. Vt. Rev. Laws, 1880, § 2821.

In Ohio also, he is liable. Springfield Tp. v. Demott, 13 Ohio 104; Howard v. Whetstone Tp., 10 Ohio 365.

In Iowa, the husband is not liable for expenses of a treatment of his insane wife in the State hospital. Delaware Co. v. McDonald, 46 Iowa 170.

See generally POOR AND POOR LAWS, vol. 18, p. 766.

4. As to what constitutes desertion, etc., see DIVORCE, vol. 5, p. 799. As to the custody of the children, see PARENT AND CHILD, vol. 17, p. 364.

The Massachusetts statute affords a good illustration. "When a husband fails, without just cause, to furnish suitable support for the wife, or has deserted her, or when the wife, for justifiable cause, is actually living apart from her husband, the probate court may, by its order on the petition of the wife, or, if she is insane, on the petition of her guardian or next friend, prohibit the husband from imposing any restraint on her personal liberty for such time as the court shall in such order direct, or until the further order of the court thereon; and the court may, upon the application of the husband or wife or of her guardian, make such further order as it deems expedient concerning the support of the wife, and the care, custody, and maintenance of the minor children of the parties, and may determine with which of the parents, the children or any of them shall remain; and may, from time to time, afterwards, on a similar application, revise and alter such order, or make a new order or decree, as the circumstances of the parents or the benefit of the children may require." Mass. Pub. Stat. 1882, p. 823, § 33.

This statute is constitutional, although it makes no provision for trial by jury. Bigelow v. Bigelow, 120 Mass. 320. The husband, though under guardianship as a spendthrift, may be prohibited from restraining the wife's liberty. Kavanaugh v. Kavanaugh, 146 Mass. 40. The probate court cannot, without consent, order payment of a sum in gross for all the future support of the wife. Doole v. Doole, 144 Mass. 278. As to the effect of the decree in evidence, see Barney v. Tourtellotte, 138 Mass. 106. The fact that the husband has deserted his wife and gone to another State, does not preclude the statutory award for separate maintenance. Blackinton v. Blackinton, 141 Mass. 432; 55 Am. Rep. 484. The petition may be granted, although the living apart was only for a day. Smith v. Smith, 154 Mass. 262. The fact that she has executed a release of all claim for support, and that the consideration has been received by her, is no bar to her petition. Silverman v. Silverman, 140 Mass. 560.

Where an attachment has been ordered for separate maintenance, successive executions may be issued thereon. Downs v. Flanders, 150 Mass. 92.

Massachusetts also affords a good representative of statutes declaring such abandonment a criminal offense. "Whoever unreasonably neglects to provide for the support of his wife or minor child shall be punished by fine not exceeding $20, or imprisoned in the house of correction not exceeding six months;" the fine, at discretion of the court, to go to the town, city, society or person actually supporting, etc. Mass. Stat. 1885, ch. 176.

In a prosecution thereunder, the complainant, to rebut the husband's charge that she had failed in her marital duty, was permitted to adduce a decree of the probate court for her separate maintenance, also a decree dismissing his libel for divorce. Com. v. Ham (Mass. 1892), 31 N. E. Rep. 639.

In England, by Stat. 20 Vict. ch. 85, a wife wrongfully deserted by her husband, may have an order for protection of her property; and upon judicial separation, have the rights of a feme sole. As to requisites of proof of one's refusal to support his wife, in a case thereunder, see Flannagan v. Bishop Wearmouth, 8 E. & B. 450; 92 E. C. L. 450.

In Alabama, upon voluntary separation, the chancery court may, on petition of either party, give either the father or mother "the custody and control of the children and to superintend and direct their education, having regard to the prudence, ability and fitness of the parents, and the age and sex of the children." Ala. Code, 1886, § 2368.

The expression "voluntary" applies to a case where the conduct of the husband, though not amounting to legal cruelty or other cause of divorce, has justified the wife in leaving his house and going to her father's. And the custody of a daughter five years old was in such case given to the wife. Anonymous, 55 Ala. 428.

In California, by the act of 1874, "if the husband neglect to make adequate provision for the support of his wife, except in the cases mentioned in the next section, any other person may in good faith supply her with articles necessary for her support, and recover the reasonable value thereof from the husband." Cal. Civil Code, 1885, § 174. "A husband abandoned by his wife is not liable for her support until she offer to return, unless she was justified, by his misconduct, in abandoning him; nor is he liable for her support when she is living separate from him by agreement, unless such support is stipulated in the agreement." § 175.

The husband is not bound to maintain his wife's children by a former marriage, unless he has taken them into the family. Cal. Civil Code, 1885, § 209. Compare, as to one in loco parentis, Williams v. Hutchinson, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 122. Under § 136, the court, though refusing the wife a divorce, may require the husband to provide for her maintenance apart. Hagle v. Hagle, 68 Cal. 588.

In Colorado, as to compulsory support pending her suit for divorce, see Colo. Annot. Stat. 1891, § 1567. His liability for her ante-nuptial debts is not extinguished by her death. § 3015.

In Connecticut, any husband neglecting, without good cause, to support his wife, may be sentenced to hard labor for not more than sixty days, or compelled to give bond, etc. Conn. Gen. Stat. 1888, § 3402.

Upon a prosecution for failure to support, her adultery is a sufficient defense. State v. Schweitzer, 57 Conn. 532.

In the Dakotas, as to the wife's remedy against the liquor seller, for consequences of the husband's drunkenness, see Dak. Comp. Stat. 1887, § 2206.

A wife through cruelty justifiably living apart, may maintain an action for support, without asking for a divorce. Bueter v. Bueter (S. Dak. 1890), 45 N. W. Rep. 208.

In Delaware, a husband deserting his wife without provision, etc., is liable to have his property sequestered by the board of trustees of the poor. Del. Laws, 1874, p. 236, § 15.

As to the effect of a special legislative divorce giving a wife all the rights of a feme sole, see Stilley v. Grubb, 1 Del. Ch. 406.

In Florida, in case of his cruelty or desertion, the court will intercept her estate in his hands, or remove him as trustee. Abernathy v. Abernathy, 8 Fla. 243. As to the ganancial rights of husband and wife, see McGee v. Doe, 9 Fla. 382. He is not liable for her ante-nuptial debts. Fla. Dig. Laws, p. 755, § 7.

In Georgia, "if any man shall whip, beat, or otherwise cruelly maltreat his wife, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and . . . the wife shall be a competent witness." Ga. Code, 1882, § 472.

The statute, rendering him liable for her support (§ 1758), is like that of California, supra. She may, without applying for a divorce, maintain an action against him for intolerable cruelty. Glass v. Wynn, 76 Ga. 319.

In Illinois, as to the wife's right upon his abandoning her or being imprisoned, see Ill. Rev. Stat. 1891, p. 792, § 11. As to her support, while living apart without her fault, see § 22.

They are not living "separate and apart," within the statute giving her a right to separate maintenance, if they are dwelling in the same house, and eating at the same table, though not occupying the same room. Klemme v. Klemme, 37 Ill. App. 54. She must show that the living apart was without her fault. Jenkins v. Jenkins, 3 Ill. App. 641; Cooper v. Cooper, 4 Ill. App. 285; Tureman v. Tureman, 4 Ill. App. 335; Hunter v. Hunter, 7 Ill. App. 253; Umlauf v. Umlauf, 9 Ill. App. 517.

As to compulsory support pending her suit for divorce, see Ill. Rev. Stat. 1891, p. 546, §§ 15, 18.

On a bill for separate maintenance, temporary alimony may be granted, this being not an incidental, but a homogeneous, part of the subject-matter. Johnson v. Johnson, 20 Ill. App. 495. As to the requisites of such bill, see Fountain v. Fountain, 23 Ill. App. 529. Upon mutual fault, and her refusal of his request to return, a decree for separate maintenance will not be granted. Schraeder v. Schraeder, 26 Ill. App. 524. The mere fact of his insanity will not entitle her to a decree for separate maintenance. Nuetzel v. Nuetzel, 13 Ill. App. 542.

In Indiana, the wife, by an ordinary suit against the husband, may obtain support when he has deserted her without cause and without provision, or has been convicted of a felony and imprisoned, or is an habitual drunkard, or renounces the marriage covenant, or refuses to live with her in the conjugal relation, by joining himself to a sect, the rules of which require such renunciation. Ind. Rev. Stat. 1888, § 5132.

The Indiana act for relief of a "deserted" wife, does not apply to a deserting one. Stanbrough v. Stanbrough, 60 Ind. 275. An omission in the complaint to allege that his deserting her was without cause, is cured by verdict. Harris v. Harris, 101 Ind. 498. His unjustifiably deserting her is punishable by fine. Ind. Rev. Stat. 1888, § 2133.

In Iowa, on abandonment by either and absence from the State for one year, without provision, or imprisonment for a year or more, the abandoned spouse may, by ordinary action in the district or circuit court, become authorized "to manage, control, sell and incumber the property of the husband or wife, for the support of the family, and for the purpose of paying debts." McClain's Iowa Code, 1888, § 3398.

In case of her justifiable withdrawal, an action lies for support without applying for a divorce. Finn v. Finn, 62 Iowa 482; Farber v. Farber, 64 Iowa 362; Platner v. Platner, 66 Iowa 378.

In Kansas, "the wife may obtain alimony from the husband without a divorce, in an action brought for that purpose in the district court, for any of the causes for which a divorce may be granted." Kan. Gen. Stat. 1889, § 4762.

In Kentucky, "where the husband abandons the wife, or fails to make sufficient provision for her maintenance, or where he is confined in the penitentiary for an unexpired term of more than one year, the wife may, by action in equity, be empowered to use, enjoy and sell, for her own benefit, any property she may acquire or may have acquired; to make contracts, sue and be sued;" may "sell and convey by her own deed," etc. "But the husband, upon manifesting proper disposition again to live with his wife and make suitable provision for her or upon his release from the penitentiary, by his petition in such action may, in the discretion of the court, have all or part of said powers set aside, be permitted to take upon himself the prosecution or defense of any pending action against her." Ky. Gen. Stat. 1887, p. 722, § 5.

In Louisiana, their voluntary separation does not prevent their acquisitions from falling into the community. Joffrion v. Bordelon, 14 La. Ann. 628. But compare Wooters v. Teny, 12 La. Ann. 449.

In Maine, a wife whose husband has abandoned her and left the State, or is in execution of sentence in the State prison, may be authorized by the supreme judicial court to contract, etc., as a feme sole. Me. Rev. Stat. 1883, p. 525, § 7.

In Maryland, as to the unconstitutionality of acts wherein the legislature assumes judicial determination of a wife's allowances, see Crane v. Megin- nis, 1 Gill. & J. (Md.) 463; 19 Am. Dec. 237.

In Michigan, an abandoned wife may, in the probate court, obtain relief like that in Massachusetts. Mich. Stat. 1882, § 6264. Although her withdrawal was justifiable, her suit for support will be defeated by very long and inexcusable delay—e. g., eighteen years. Reed v. Reed, 52 Mich. 117; 50 Am. Rep. 247. If there are young children, very imperative reasons will be required. Davidson v. Davidson, 47 Mich. 151.

One who is a minor is not liable to a criminal prosecution for failure to support his wife, unless he has the means, or has been emancipated. People v. Todd, 61 Mich. 234.

In Minnesota, the support may be ordered, with or without a decree of separation. Minn. Stat. 1891, § 3924.

In Mississippi, as to the wife's rights and remedies, see Wells v. Treadwell, 28 Miss. 717; Stephenson v. Osborne, 41 Miss. 119; 90 Am. Dec. 358.

In Nebraska, as to their rights on separation after her violation of the terms of his trust deed, see Austin v. Austin, 18 Neb. 310.

In Missouri, as to the requisites for a conviction for abandonment, see State v. Broyer, 44 Mo. App. 393. As to the unconstitutionality of acts wherein the legislature assumes judicial determination of a wife's allowance, etc., see State v. Fry, 4 Mo. 125. The wife may forfeit her dower by her adultery. McAlister v. Novenger, 54 Mo. 251. As to what is a "vagrant" husband within the divorce act, see Dwyer v. Dwyer, 26 Mo. App. 647.

His refusal to assure her of a discontinuance of intolerable insults from his relatives, was held to entitle her to a separate maintenance. Spengler v. Spengler, 38 Mo. App. 266.

His deserting her without good cause is punishable by fine and imprisonment; and on the trial, the marriage may be proved by adducing in evidence therefor the same facts as in a civil action. Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 3501.

In New Hampshire, the wife may, on abandonment, in the supreme court, obtain relief like that afforded by the probate court in Massachusetts. N. H. Pub. Stat. 1891, p. 499, § 4.

The wife of an alien may, after six months, acquire the rights of a feme sole, and have the custody of her minor children. N. H. Pub. Stat. 1891, p. 499, § 8. His becoming a citizen and cohabiting, has the effect of marriage upon her contracts and business, § 9.

Alimony was refused when sought disconnected with a suit for divorce. Parsons v. Parsons, 9 N. H. 309; 32 Am. Dec. 362.

In New Jersey, a husband neglecting to support his family, may be compelled by the overseer of the poor, as a "disorderly person." N. J. Rev. St. 1877, p. 305, § 5. As to the procedure thereupon by the board of chosen freeholders, under the act of 1882, see N. J. Supp. 1887, p. 219, § 2. Equity will decree sale of property of a neglected wife living separate; and she may sell as if sole, p. 447.

Where a husband withdrew from the wife on the alleged ground of her physical formation, etc., but she was willing to cohabit, it was held that she was entitled to relief on her bill for maintenance. Van Arsdalen v. Van Arsdalen, 30 N. J. Eq. 359. A husband having an income of $5,000 per annum, and leaving his wife to support herself and child in one of his houses, or rents of others ($60 per month), was held guilty of "refusing and neglecting to provide for her" within the maintenance act. O'Brien v. O'Brien (N. J. 1892), 23 Atl. Rep. 1073. A husband's departure to another city and opening a boarding house with a woman unfriendly to his wife, although accompanied with an invitation to come and dwell with him (evidently aimed for defense to her suit for maintenance), was held to be an abandonment, within the statute. Elliott v. Elliott, 48 N. J. Eq. 271.

In New Mexico.—"Whenever any difficulty arises between the husband and wife on account of the failure of either to fulfill any of the duties named in the preceding section" [§ 988: "She is obliged to live with him" . . .], "it shall be lawful for the injured party to go before the justice of the peace of the precinct and make complaint." . . . New Mexico Comp. Laws, 1884, § 989 . . . "It shall be the duty of the justice to endeavor to effect a reconciliation. . . . In case of resistance, the said justice may order that such person be confined in the county jail, there to remain until he comply with those duties by which both the husband and wife were both mutually bound."

leaves his wife or child a public charge, his property may be seized by the superintendent of the poor or other proper officer, and on confirmation of the warrant by the court of sessions, may be sold, and the proceeds be applied to pay taxes, liens, repairs and insurance, and the residue for the support and care of the wife and child, etc. N. Y. Rev. Stat. 1890, p. 2277, § 138.

If she has unjustifiably left him, and he offers to maintain her at a place of her own selection, the order will not be granted. People v. Naehr, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 461. Circumstances to justify a decree of maintenance must be such as to justify a decree of separation. Ruckman v. Ruckman, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 278. As to alteration of the decree according to changed circumstances, see Erkenbrach v. Erkenbrach, 63 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 194.

As to the unconstitutionality of acts wherein the legislature assumes judicial determination of a wife's allowances, etc., see Holmes v. Holmes, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 295. As to varying allowances, see Miller v. Miller, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 91; Forrest v. Forrest, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 102, 142; 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 674.

It seems that the New York statutory provision for a recognizance by a neglectful husband was designed to enforce actual physical support only. People v. Pettit, 74 N. Y. 320. As to the requisites thereof, see Bulkley v. Boyce, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 259. As to practice on his appeal, see People v. Hodgson, 126 N. Y. 647. As to a retroactive order for support, see Percival v. Percival, 124 N. Y. 637.

In North Carolina, a husband deserting his wife and living in adultery, forfeits all his right to her personal property, or to property settled upon her at the marriage. N. Car. Code, 1883, § 1845. A wife eloping with an adulterer, and not living with her husband at his death, loses all right of dower. § 1844.

In Ohio, if the husband neglects to provide for the wife, any other person may in good faith supply her with necessaries, and recover the reasonable value thereof from the husband, unless she has unjustifiably abandoned him, and does not offer to return. Ohio Rev. Stat. 1890, §§ 3116-7.

In Oklahoma, if the husband has deserted the wife, or is imprisoned, she may prosecute and defend in his name, etc. Okl. Stat. 1890, § 4319.

In Pennsylvania, if a husband neglects to provide for his wife, she may avail herself of the sole trader act of 1718, B. P. Dig. Pa. L., p. 1154, § 27. Any husband who, for one year before his wife's death, has willfully neglected to provide for her or has deserted her, forfeits all claim and right to her real or personal estate, after her death, as tenant by the curtesy, or under the intestate laws. § 30.

I. DEFINITION.—To sequester, in the civil law, is to renounce or disclaim; or to deposit the subject of a controversy in the hands of a third person to hold for the contending parties.² Under the law of Louisiana, a judicial sequestration is a mandate of the court ordering the sheriff to keep the thing in controversy until after the termination of the suit.³

failure to support her after notification by the overseer of the poor, is a misdemeanor finable not more than $20, p. 51.

In Virginia, by willfully deserting her until her death, he forfeits "all interest in her separate or other estate as tenant by the curtesy, distributee or otherwise." Va. Code, 1887, § 2296. He is not liable for her ante-nuptial debts incurred in respect to her separate estate. § 2290.

Since the married women's act, the husband's curtesy initiate in his wife's lands cannot be sold to pay his debts. Welsh v. Solenberger, 85 Va. 441. As to the effect of a separation agreement upon his tenancy by the curtesy, see Dooley v. Baynes, 86 Va. 644.

In Washington, as to the wife's remedy against the liquor-seller for the consequences of the husband's drunkenness, see Wash. Gen. Stat. 1891, § 2528.

In West Virginia, a decree of separation may provide "that the parties be perpetually separated and protected in their persons and property." W. Va. Code, 1891, p. 614, § 12.

In Wisconsin, whenever the husband or wife is about to abscond or he refuses to support her, "the mayor of the city, president of the village, or supervisors of the town" may issue a warrant, etc., against his or her goods, etc., and on confirmation by the county court, sufficient shall be sold at auction for the maintenance, etc. The property may be restored on bond, etc. Wis. Annot. Stat. 1889, §§ 1506-1510. As to her remedy against the liquor seller for consequences of the husband's drunkenness, see § 1560. When he "shall have deserted her, or shall, from drunkenness, profligacy, or any other cause neglect or refuse to provide for her support, or for the support and education of his children, she shall have the right to transact business in her own name, and to collect and receive the profits of such business, her own earnings, and the earnings of her minor children in her charge," etc., without his interference, or liability for his debts. § 2344.

In Wyoming, pending her suit for divorce, the court may prohibit him from restraining her personal liberty. Wyoming Rev. Stat. 1887, § 1577. He may also be required to give security for obedience to the orders of the court, as to his property, etc. § 1583. He is not liable for her ante-nuptial debts. § 1563.

In Pitot v. Elmes, 1 Martin (La.) 79, the court by Lewis, J., said: "The only case of sequestration known to the civil law is when two persons, or more, lay claim to the same property. In this case the judge orders that, pendente lite, the property in dispute shall remain in the hands of the sequestrators. According to the laws of Spain when a creditor proves his demand, and shows to the satisfaction of the judge, that the

In chancery practice a writ of sequestration affords a remedy for the enforcement of a decree, or for the preservation of the thing in controversy during the suit.¹ The term is used also in English ecclesiastical law. In international law to sequester is to seize the property of an individual and appropriate it to the use of the government.²

II. IN EQUITY PRACTICE—1. In General.—The process was brought into the United States with the chancery system, from England, and has been recognized by the courts and adopted in many of the States.³ Although in a great measure superseded, it has

"This sequestration is not a proceeding in rem. It creates no lien in favor of the person who obtains it. It is not always an original process; it is a mere provisional order, which may be had at any stage of the suit and the judgment that intervenes, is against the estate of the debtor generally, not more against the sequestered property than against any other part of it. It consequently creates no lien, no privilege."

3. In Keighler v. Ward, 8 Md. 254, the court by Mason, J., said: "We have no doubt that this writ is in full force in this State both as a mesne process against a party in contempt, as well as a judicial writ to enforce the performance of a decree, and in its latter office may be said to be analogous to an execution at law. The process of sequestration came with our chancery system from England and has since been fully recognized and adopted by our legislature, as appears from the act of 1785, ch. 72, § 25. The circumstance that it has never been resorted to in practice in the State does not, on that account, render it inoperative or powerless."

It was said in Clymer v. Willis, 3 Cal. 363; 58 Am. Dec. 414, that if an attaching creditor of an execution plaintiff were otherwise remediless, it might be that chancery would afford relief by process of sequestration.

In In re Hoare, 14 Ch. Div. 41, it was questioned whether a writ of sequestration could be properly issued to enforce a simple judgment for a debt, or to enforce an order upon a judgment debtor's summons.

In Hosack v. Rogers, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 603, it was said to be doubtful whether a sequestration could be granted where, by the non-imprisonment act, a party cannot be committed upon execution, or by attachment for not paying the money due upon a decree in a suit founded on contract.

Under the rule of the United States circuit court, if the delinquent party cannot be found, a writ of sequestration issues against his estate upon a return of non est inventus to compel obedience to the decree. See the 8th Equity rule.

In Steam Stone Cutter Co. v. Sears, 9 Fed. Rep. 8, the plaintiff, as owner of a patent, brought a bill against a company for infringement and obtained a decree establishing the title to and validity of the patent, the fact of infringement, and for an account of the profits. After the decree, on application of the plaintiff, a writ of sequestration in the nature of an attachment, to create a lien for satisfying the decree, was issued and served by attaching the real estate of the defendant. The only question made was as to whether the court had power to issue such writs and whether the service of such a writ in that manner created a lien that would hold until decree, and it was held, that the court had the power and that by the due service of such a writ a valid lien was created.

In Shainwald v. Lewis, 6 Fed. Rep. 766, a decree was entered against the respondent by which he was adjured to have obtained possession of the funds of a bankrupt firm of which the complainant was assignee, by fraud. He was decreed to be a trustee for the complainant, of such funds and was ordered to pay over the amount as ascertained by the decree. An execution was issued and returned unsatisfied. The court by Hoffman, J., said: "The appointment of a receiver of all the property of the defendant is, in truth, as we have seen, in the nature, not of an attachment, but of a sequestration, which by the ancient practice of the court of chancery of England, issued as of course upon failure of the defendant to comply with the decree, and the process of sequestration is still in use in England. We have also seen that the court will now, where a sequestration has been ordered to enforce a decree for the payment of money, order the sequestrators to apply what they have received, by virtue of the sequestration, in satisfaction of the decree. . . . The decree was obtained in this court; and perhaps a writ of sequestration might have issued at once upon the failure of the defendant to comply with the decree, as it certainly could have done if the decree had been for the specific performance of some act."

1. White v. Geraardt, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 336.

In Hosack v. Rogers, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 603, the court by Walworth, Ch., said: "The process of sequestration, although it has gone almost out of use since the statute allowing an ordinary execution against the real as well as the personal estate of a party, to enforce the payment of money decreed by this court, may be properly resorted to as a means of enforcing the performance of other decrees, when attachment cannot be served, or when the defendant chooses to remain in prison after his commitment for contempt of the court."

Vermont.—In Steam Stone Cutter Co. v. Jones, 13 Fed. Rep. 567, it was said that the use of the writ of sequestration as mesne process of attachment in a suit in equity in the court of chancery of Vermont is coeval with the institution of the court. It is not the writ of sequestration known to the English chancery; but is merely an attachment by mesne process in an equity suit.

The court by Blatchford, J., said: "It is a mesne security given pendente lite, operating, in that regard and to that end, like a provisional injunction or a temporary receivership, or a writ of ne exeat or other filing of a lis pendens."

North Carolina.—There is a distinction in the course that will be taken by the court between the ordinary case of an injunction to stay execution upon a judgment at law and a sequestration. In the former case, if the equity of the bill be derided fully and fairly in the answer, the defendant will be entitled to a dissolution of the injunction; but in the latter case the right of the plaintiff to have the property sequestered pending the litigation does not depend upon the "equity conferred by the answer;" and the court having secured the fund, will keep it secured until the rights of the parties are adjudicated, unless the application was improvidently granted; or unless, upon the coming in of the answer it appears, taking the whole together, that the claim of the plaintiffs is unfounded; or that the security is unnecessary. McDaniel v. Stoker, 5 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 274.

Pennsylvania.—In Philadelphia, etc., R. Co.'s Appeal, 70 Pa. St. 355, a judgment was recovered against the Philadelphia, etc., Railroad Company. The plaintiff issued a fi. fa. which the sheriff returned unsatisfied. The plaintiff petitioned for and obtained a writ of sequestration and a sequestrator was appointed. The defendants assigned as error the awarding of the writ of sequestration. Held, that by the act of April 7, 1870, instead of sequestration based upon the fi. fa. under the act of 1836, unsatisfied in whole or in part, an alias fi. fa. may be issued to seize and sell the franchises and property of the delinquent corporation out and out; that sequestration was not grantable, and that proceedings below must be reversed.

The court by Thompson, C. J., said: "The Act of 1870 undoubtedly supplies the provisions of the Act of 1836 in regard to insolvent corporations to the extent noticed. Both cannot possibly co-exist as remedies. A judgment creditor proceeding by sequestration could not restrain another from proceeding by execution, the obvious result of which would be to put an end to sequestration by a sale of the property and franchises. There is nothing in any act which would prevent the latter from taking his remedy by execution, under the new law." And in Bayard's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 453, it was held that the act of April 7, 1870, superseded the remedy by sequestration under the act of June 16, 1836, of which it is a supplement and to that extent supplies its provisions.

Formerly, it was the appropriate process to compel the defendant to answer; or to pay money into court or elsewhere;² or to answer interrogatories before a master.³ It issued also in case of contempt for the non-production of papers.⁴ It has been granted in England for not returning papers according to order.⁵ It has been held to afford a remedy where the defendant, to save his estate, obstinately lay in prison or exhausted his estate in paying other creditors to the injury of the plaintiff.⁶ The remedy has been applied to secure alimony;⁷ and to enforce an order to deliver the defendant's property to a receiver, the defendant being in contempt for not obeying the order.⁸

1. Pratt v. Inman, 43 Ch. Div. 175. See also Roberts v. Stoner, 18 Mo. 481, where Scott, J., said: "A writ of sequestration is a process for contempt used by chancery courts to compel a performance of their orders and decrees."

"When there is a decree against a party for the payment of money or to do any other act, this process cannot issue until he is put in contempt, or it is shown that process cannot be served."

"It would seem that a sequestration merely to compel the payment of money, cannot now issue, as imprisonment for debt is abolished. As process against the body for the non-payment of a debt cannot now issue, there would be no means of putting a party in contempt. When the decree is for the performance of acts within the power of the party, he may be compelled by sequestration . . . This manner of enforcing decrees is now very unusual, since the statute has given the writ of execution to courts of chancery to carry into effect their decrees. It is necessary whenever the writ issues, that the court should name the sequestrators who are to take charge of the defendant's estate."

In Wharam v. Broughton, 1 Ves. 184, Lord Hardwicke said: "For the writ of sequestration does not require the sequestrators to levy to the use of the plaintiff, but only to detain and keep him in their hands till the sum is fully paid, the contempt cleared and the court make further order to the contrary. It is not of a great many years' standing, that the court has ordered goods to be sold, to satisfy payment after a decree; but it is very lately that the court has ordered it for a collateral contempt in proceedings before a decree; which the court now does in aid of its proceedings."

Miscellaneous Instances.—During the construction of a railway an injunction was granted against the company, restraining them from further interfering with a particular road, and from so constructing their works as to obstruct, impede, or render less secure the same road, or so as to hinder or prevent the passage of carriages along the same. Great Northern R. Co.*, 15 Jur. 387; cited in 5 Chitty's Equity Index 5288.

Where a widow elected not to take under the will of her husband, the court held that the substituted devise and bequests to the wife were a trust in her for the benefit of the disappointed claimants to the amount of their interest therein, and that the court would assume jurisdiction to sequester the benefit intended for the refusing wife, in order to secure compensation to those whom her election disappoints. Sandoe's Appeal, 65 Pa. St. 314; Gallagher's Appeal, 87 Pa. St. 200.

It was said in Parker v. Grammer, Phil. (N. Car.) 28, that where there is reason to fear that the defendant, in a suit in equity, will remove the subject in controversy beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or destroy it, or otherwise dispose of it, pending the suit, so that the complainant may lose the fruit of his recovery, or be hindered and delayed in obtaining it, the court in aid of the primary equity, will secure the fund by the writ of sequestration, or the writs of sequestration and injunction until the main equity is adjudicated at the hearing of the cause.

The court, by Pearson, C. J., said: "These writs are extraordinary process, and to sustain them on a motion to dissolve the injunction and remove the sequestration the court must be satisfied: 1. That the complainant does not sue in a mere spirit of litigation, and seek to set up an unfounded claim, but has probable cause, and may at the hearing be able to establish his primary equity. 2. That its extraordinary process is not asked for simply to vex and embarrass the defendant, but because there is reasonable ground for apprehension in regard to the security of the fund pending the litigation."

1. Michigan.—When a judgment at law or a decree in chancery is obtained against any corporation incorporated under the laws of Michigan, and an execution, issued thereon, is returned unsatisfied, in whole or in part, upon the petition of the person obtaining such judgment or decree, or his representatives, the court within the proper county may sequester the stock, property, etc., of the corporation and appoint a receiver. Cook v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 45 Mich. 453. See Jennison's Ch. Pr. 318.

Massachusetts.—In Jones v. Boston Mill Corp., 4 Pick. (Mass.) 507, it was said that the supreme court was authorized to issue the processes of distringas and sequestration in proceedings against corporations.

New York.—As to the jurisdiction under the Revised Statutes, see Bangs v. McIntosh, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 591.

In Devoe v. Ithaca R. Co., 5 Paige (N. Y.) 521, it was held that a sequestration ought not to be granted without giving the corporation an opportunity to be heard.

Pennsylvania.—In Reid v. North Western R. Co., 33 Pa. St. 257, the court by Church, J., said: "The seventy third section of the act of June 16, 1836, prescribes this writ of sequestration as the execution process, when judgment has been obtained against corporations, except counties and townships, or others of like municipal character. The writ itself is most certainly of the nature of an execution. It is final process to enforce payment of a judgment."

"Being an execution process it is not ex gratia in the usual acceptation of that term, but is rather demandable of right; and consequently there can be no sound reason for giving previous notice that might not apply to any final process."

It was said in the above case that whether the corporation had assets subject to sequestration made no difference as to the validity of the writ.

In Germantown Pass. R. Co. v. Fittler, 60 Pa. St. 124; 100 Am. Dec. 546, it was said that a corporation was not necessarily dissolved by a writ of sequestration operating as a legal divestiture of all its available assets. See also, on this point, Mann v. Pentz, 3 N. Y. 422.

In the case of corporations where the public is directly interested, creditors must recover their debts by sequestering the earnings of the corporation, allowing it to progress with its undertaking to accommodate the public. Foster v. Fowler, 60 Pa. St. 27.

Moneys received by a sequestrator of an incorporated company are to be distributed amongst all the creditors of the corporation according to the rules established in the case of the insolvency of individuals. Steiners' Appeal, 27 Pa. St. 313.

In Penrose v. Erie Canal Co., 56 Pa. St. 46; 93 Am. Dec. 778, the court by Strong, J., said: "By the act of 1836, relating to executions, a creditor by contract of a canal company after having obtained judgment and after a return of nulla bona to an execution issued thereon, was entitled to have the tolls, rents, issues and profits of the company, together with all its rights and credits, seized and applied to the payment of his claim ratably with the claims of others. This could be effected by a writ of sequestration, and it was the only means of obtaining satisfaction of the debt if an execution proved fruitless. This right to sequestration was not dependent at all upon the manner in which the canal company might manage its property. It was absolute.

"Sequestration was, therefore, a substantial right, and assured by the contract. I do not say that some other process might not have been substituted for it—some other process that would have given the creditor equal facilities for appropriation of the tolls, rents, credits, etc., of the company; but the right to have that property appropriated in some way to the satisfaction of the debt was undoubtedly assured by the court. Such, then, were the rights which the plaintiff had when the act of 1850 was passed. By that it was enacted that it should not be lawful to grant a writ of sequestration and appoint a sequestrator when a return of nulla bona had been made to an execution against the Erie canal company except upon the judgment and decree of the court on hearing that the corporation is guilty of mismanagement, misappropriation of funds, or willful delay in discharging its legal liabilities. The act provided no substitute for sequestration in those cases when it would have been allowed before its passage but not afterwards." Held that the act of 1850 was invalid.

In Muncy Creek R. Co. v. Hill, 84 Pa. St. 459, the court by Woodward, J., said: "By the 73d section [of the act of June 16, 1836] after the return of an execution unsatisfied, a writ was authorized 'to sequester the goods, chattels and credits, rents, issues, and profits, tolls and receipts from any road, canal, bridge or other work, property, or estate of such corporation.' The 74th section made it the duty of the sequestrator to take charge of the property and funds and to make due distribution of their proceeds. That a sequestrator under the act of 1836 was entitled to assume the control of the works and structures out of which revenue was derived, has been repeatedly settled by judgments of this court. The idea of a transfer of possession is embodied in the etymological signification of the word sequestrate. Its original meaning was to give up for safekeeping. Throughout the civil law and common-law precedents, process of sequestration against revenue or income has been treated as carrying with it the right to the possession of the property out of which the revenue or income issued.

"It is competent, however, for the legislature to confine the process to stricter limits. And the peculiar language of the act of the 22d of April, 1858, indicates a purpose to modify and restrict in essential respects the remedy by sequestration as against a particular class of railroad corporations. It declared that so much of the act of 1836 as related to the appointment of sequestrators in cases of judgments recovered against corporations should not apply to any unfinished railroad. The enactment was followed by this proviso: 'That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent a sequestrator from taking custody of the receipts and revenues of any portion of any such road that may be so far completed as to be in running order.' The difference between the phraseology of this act and that of the act of 1836 is marked and significant. The effect of the latter statute is to declare that 'the goods, chattels and credits, rents, issues and profits, tolls and receipts' of an unfinished railroad shall not be sequestered, and that a sequestrator shall not 'take charge of the property and funds' of such railroad, but that he shall have 'power to take custody of the receipts and revenues' of any completed section."

3. What Property Liable.—Land and goods may be sequestered;¹ so may choses in action.²

Minnesota.—The individual liability of stockholders for debts of a corporation can be enforced in a sequestration proceeding, at the instance, or upon the complaint of any creditor who has become a party to it. McKusick v. Seymour (Minn. 1892), 50 N. W. Rep. 1114.

In Hyde v. Greenhill, Dick 107, it was said that a sequestration covers the rents and profits of real estate but not the land.

A salary of an equerry to one of the royal family is not a subject of sequestration. Fenton v. Lowther, 1 Cox 315.

Goold*, 1 B. & B. 387, it was held that dividends of bank stock, being choses in action, could not be sequestered. See generally Fenton v. Lowther, 1 Cox 315; Dundas v. Dutens, 1 Ves. Jr. 196.

If the holder of a chose in action admits the debt to be due, and is willing to pay over under order of the court, it may become the subject of sequestration, but not otherwise. Keighler v. Ward, 8 Md. 254.

In Johnson v. Chippindale, 2 Sim. 55, the vice-chancellor said: "I find no instance in which the court has compelled a third party to pay in a chose in action without a bill, when any resistance has been made by the holder of the chose in action." See generally Francklyn v. Colhoun, 3 Swanst. 276; Simmonds v. Kinnaird, 4 Ves. 735; Proctor v. Reynel, 1 Ch. Rep. 247; Lord Pelham v. Duchess of Newcastle, 3 Swanst. 293, n.

In Hoffman's Ch. Pr., p. 160, it is said that the author cannot perceive the difficulty in sequestering a chose in action. He says: "If the chose is a book debt, note, annuity, bank or other stock, and is sequestered without being collected, the discharge of the process, upon the clearing the contempt, restores it necessarily to the creditor. If there are vouchers, such as certificates of stock, they must be returned to him. If the chose has been collected the proceeds belong to the creditor. The sequestrators have collected it for his use."

In White v. Geraardt, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 336, the court by McCoun, V. Ch., said: "I have no hesitation, therefore, in saying this court is competent through the medium of sequestration to lay hold of property of every description anywhere within its jurisdiction, belonging to a party in contempt for not obeying a decree, and also has power to apply it in satisfaction of the debt or duty decreed against such person."

It was held in Monk v. Lawlor, 1 Jones (N. Car.) 554, that notice of the motion was not necessary.

It was said in O'Arien v. Foley, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 418, that if the party is going against personal property notice of motion must not be given; though otherwise if the party is going against real property.

See also Welsh v. Welsh, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 360.

But in Edwards v. Plunket, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 502, it was held, that if the defendant has not appeared, it is not necessary to give him notice of a motion for liberty to execute a sequestration against his real property, but that the motion would not be granted unless the affidavit set forth the annual value of the lands.

See Rowan v. —, 2 Jones 184.

5. Discharge.—The English authorities have held that a sequestration in mesne process is determined by the defendant's death, if the sequestration was to compel the performance of a personal duty; but that it was otherwise after a decree.¹ It has been held that a sequestration was discharged by the appointment of a receiver in the place of sequestrators.²

6. The Sequestrators.—As an officer of the court a sequestrator is armed with the powers conferred by such orders and decrees as the court makes and can enforce.³ He may be

In Phillips v. Stephenson, 11 Price 473, it was held that the warden's certificate of a prisoner being in his custody for contempt for non-payment of costs taxed was sufficient to found a motion for sequestration, without affidavit of demand and refusal.

Under the English Judicature Act a writ of sequestration against the estate of a receiver or other person for disobedience of an order of the court may be issued without leave of court. Sprunt v. Pugh, 7 Ch. Div. 567.

1. Where sequestration has been issued for the purpose of compelling the performance of a duty, the death of the defendant does not discharge it. If the sequestration issued only to compel the defendant to put in an answer, and he was dead, the sequestration would have been, of course, discharged. Pratt v. Inman, 43 Ch. Div. 175.

A sequestrator may not be able to sue in his own name, but, even using the name of the corporation whose property is sequestered, he may avoid a fraudulent grant. Suydam v. North Western Ins. Co., 51 Pa. St. 394.

And a bill of discovery will lie, if necessary, at the instance of a sequestrator. Suydam v. North Western Ins. Co., 51 Pa. St. 394; Bevans v. Turnpike, 10 Pa. St. 174.

A sequestrator may appeal from the award of arbitrators against the company whose property has been sequestered, since, by statute, he has the powers of trustees under the Insolvency Acts. Turnpike Co. v. M'Anulty, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 293.

A sequestrator is not bound to advance his own money to repair a sequestered road, and he does so at his own risk. But when he has settled an account in court, which has been confirmed, it must be presumed that his proceedings have been sanctioned by the court. While the road was in the hands of a sequestrator an act of assembly authorized judgment creditors to have the road sold upon execution. It was accordingly sold and the money brought into court for distribution. In this case it was held that the sequestrator has the preference as against the execution creditor, the court, by Lowrie, J., saying: "The sequestration put the road into the hands of the law. The law protects its own officer in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him. It has been found that in the discharge of those duties he has properly advanced his own money. By another form of proceeding the law has converted the road into money and is now about to distribute it. Of course it cannot allow that money to go out of its power, until the expenses incurred under its sanction, in the care and custody of the thing converted, have been repaid, at least so far as the money will go." Bean's Appeal, 19 Pa. St. 453.

In Crone v. O'Dall, 2 Moll. 389, a reference was granted to inquire if it would not be for the benefit of all parties that sequestrators should make defense in the name of the proper person to an ejectment brought against lands under sequestration.

empowered to let sequestered real estate,¹ or to sell sequestered goods.²

If sequestrators have been turned out of possession by force, an injunction may issue to restore them.³ If they abuse their powers they may be proceeded against and punished.⁴

It is a contempt of court to disturb a sequestrator in his possession.⁵

Formerly it was held that a writ of assistance would not issue to sequestrators.⁶ Now, however, it seems that the court will direct a writ of assistance to issue for the purpose of putting sequestrators into possession.⁷

The fees of sequestrators are governed by the principles applied by courts of equity in fixing the fees of receivers and other administrative officers.⁸ Sequestrators are required to account to the court.⁹

1. Neale v. Bealing, 3 Swanst. 304, n.; Dunkley v. Scrivenor, 2 Mad. 443. But it has been held that the court will not order sequestrators on mesne process to make leases. Ray v. —, 3 Swanst. 306; Gray v. Hooper, Dick. 638.

2. Hoffman's Ch. Pr., vol. 1, p. 150. But it has been held that it is questionable whether this should be allowed in the case of sequestration on mesne process. See on this point Hales v. Shaftoe, Dick. 711; 3 Bro. P. C. 72; 1 Ves. Jr. 86. The leading authority against the execution of a sequestration on mesne process is Rowley v. Ridley, Dick. 622. See also Wharan v. Broughton, 1 Ves. 184; Simmonds v. Kinnaird, 4 Ves. 735.

In Goldsmith v. Goldsmith, 5 Hare 123, it was laid down that a sequestration on mesne process may in a proper case be executed, and that the court may direct the tenants to attorn to the sequestrators. But the court will not, until the amount of the costs is ascertained, nor except for the purpose of paying such costs, direct the sale of goods seized under the sequestration, although the expense of keeping the goods gradually absorb the value of them.

There would seem to be no difficulty as to the sale of perishable goods, Shaw v. Wright, 3 Ves. 22; or of property, the title to which passes by delivery, Mitchell v. Draper, 9 Ves. 208. As to the sale of a leasehold estate there is more difficulty. See Shaw v. Wright, 3 Ves. 22; Sutton v. Stone, Dick. 107. But in Hoffman's Ch. Pr., vol. 1, p. 151, it is said: "This difficulty does not seem to me sufficient to prevent a sale in a proper case; for although a purchaser will not be compelled to accept a mere equitable title, yet if the sale is made upon such terms expressly, the contract may be enforced. It is admitted that the purchaser would be protected by injunction. That difficulty would only, perhaps, diminish the price."

4. As in Pelham v. Harley, 3 Swanst. 291, n., where one of the commissioners of sequestration had made use of the writ to get possession of certain property to which the sequestration did not rightfully extend; he was compelled to make complete restitution and was committed for contempt.

III. IN LOUISIANA AND TEXAS—1. In General.—Under the Louisiana Code sequestration is a kind of deposit which two or more persons engaged in litigation about anything make of the thing in contest to an indifferent person, who binds himself to restore it when the issue is decided to the party to whom it is adjudged to belong. The depositary in this case is called the sequestrator. A sequestration may be not gratuitous, and then it is rather a contract of hiring than of deposit. When it is gratuitous it is a real contract of deposit, subject to all the rules which apply to that contract, save the differences hereafter explained. A sequestration has this difference from a deposit, that it may have for its object not only movables, but also immovables.¹

The Texas statute contains provisions for sequestration founded on those of the civil law. In Louisiana a sequestration may be obtained where the plaintiff has a lien or privilege on property.² The plaintiff must make oath that he fears the property will be removed out of the jurisdiction of the court before he can have the benefit of his privilege;³ or, in the case of real estate, that he fears the defendant may make use of his possession to dilapidate the property or waste the fruits thereof.⁴

2. Louisiana.—Code of Practice, art. 275.

Sequestration, being a harsh remedy, will be allowed only when one is clearly entitled to it. To entitle one to this writ, the affidavit must state that the plaintiff is either the owner of the property or has a privilege on it. Baer v. Kopfler, 19 La. Ann. 194.

3. It is not the privilege which gives the right of sequestering property, but the circumstance which causes the creditor to apprehend that the removal of the property out of the State may deprive him of its exercise. Sellick v. Kelly, 11 Rob. (La.) 149. See Anderson v. Stille, 12 La. Ann. 669.

4. In Pasley v. McConnell, 37 La. Ann. 552, the plaintiff brought suit to be decreed the owner of certain real estate and prayed for a judicial sequestration. It not being alleged that the plaintiffs had good ground to apprehend that the defendants might make use of their possession to dilapidate or waste the fruits and revenues of the property, or convert them to their own use, it was held that this was insufficient. Sequestration cannot be extended by implication, nor beyond those cases for which the law was expressly provided.

See also Barriere v. Feste, 9 La. Ann. 535.

A party who applies for the stringent remedy of sequestration, must present a case clearly entitling him under the code and statutes to that process. Shropshire v. Russell, 2 La. Ann. 961.

Sequestration is an extraordinary and vigorous remedy, and the doctrine has been uniform that it is to be strictly construed and the requisites of the law must be observed on pain of nullity. Wilson v. Churchman, 4 La. Ann. 452.

In a suit against one partner by the others to compel the former to account for and pay over to the latter the shares of his partners, in which he is a trustee for the firm, sequestration will not issue. Shropshire v. Russell, 2 La. Ann. 961.

A prospective insolvency affords no ground for proceeding by injunction and sequestration against a debtor. Barriere v. Feste, 9 La. Ann. 535.

A vendor of movable property sued the executrix of the vendee for the dissolution of the sale and the recovery of the property, and procured a writ of sequestration. In their petition they alleged that they feared that during the pendency of the suit, the defendant

But mere grounds of suspicion, and those extremely slight, do not authorize a resort to so severe a mode of proceeding.¹ There must be a well-founded apprehension, the grounds of which must appear from the affidavit.² The statute makes provision for the giving by the defendant of an obligation, with surety, to the sheriff, to set aside the mandate of sequestration, the obligation to be in amount equal to the value of the property might part with or dispose of the property. Defendant's counsel contended that the harsh remedy of sequestration should not be resorted to against one who intended no wrongful act. The court, by De Blanc, J., said: "A sequestration is intended to prevent, not merely a wrongful act, but any act—whatever it may be—the result of which would be to remove the sequestered effect from the possession in which it was at the date of execution of the writ. The article of the Code of Practice does not qualify the disposal against which it provides." Daugherty v. Vance, 30 La. Ann. 1246.

In Da Ponte v. New Orleans Transf. Co., 42 La. Ann. 696, it was held that contractual relations exist between a passenger and a transfer company, to which he has surrendered his checks to have his baggage carried for hire from a depot to his residence, which the former may enforce by suit and sequestration.

2. Wilson v. Churchman, 4 La. Ann. 452; Sellick v. Kelly, 11 Rob. (La.) 149.

To entitle the plaintiff to sequester mortgaged property on the ground of apprehension that it will be removed before he can have the benefit of his mortgage, he must set forth in his affidavit, either directly or by reference to allegations of the petition, the facts which induce his apprehension, as required by art. 275 of the Louisiana Code of Practice, which requirement is not considered as dispensed with by the act of 1839. Bres v. Booth, 1 La. Ann. 307.

A writ of sequestration is issuable by a creditor having a special mortgage when he apprehends that the mortgaged property will be moved out of the State before he can reap the benefit of his mortgage, and therefore the propinquity of the property to the border of the State is an element to be considered in estimating the strength of his suspicion. It is not what the defendant really intended to do or not to do that is to be considered, but whether he was doing and saying that from which his creditor might apprehend the existence of an intention to do the hurtful thing that a sequestration would prevent. Duncan v. Wise, 39 La. Ann. 74.

An affidavit in which the plaintiff says that he fears that the slave mortgaged may be removed beyond the jurisdiction of the State is insufficient to obtain a sequestration. The grounds of apprehension must be set out. Clark v. Glover, 14 La. 266.

The Affidavit.—The causes set forth in the affidavit are set forth with sufficient certainty if they are stated in the words of the Code of Practice prescribing the causes for which the writ may be obtained. Carter v. Lewis, 15 La. Ann. 574.

An affidavit for sequestration stated that the defendant was indebted to the affiant "in about the sum of forty-nine hundred and fifty dollars," and that "the deponent verily believes the said churchman will dispose of the same or send it out of the jurisdiction of the court." Held, that the affidavit is insufficient as not naming a sum certain, and that the "whole showing is loose and uncertain." The expression "during the pendency of the suit may not be sacramental, . . . but the necessity of the conservative process should substantially appear." Wilson v. Churchman, 4 La. Ann. 452.

In Texas, where the statute (Texas Rev. St., art. 4490) requires that "the property to be sequestered shall be described with such certainty that it may be identified and distinguished from property of a like kind, giving the value of each article of property and the county in which it is situated," it was held in Boykin v. Rosenfield, 69 Tex. 115, that the description of logs stated as being in the county in which suit was brought, in the possession of the named defendants, each marked cross within a circle on the end of the log, averaging from fourteen to thirty-five feet to be left with the defendant; and provides also that whenever the defendant shall not execute such obligation within ten days after the seizure of the property by the sheriff, it shall be lawful for the plaintiff "to give similar bond and security to the sheriff as that required by law from the defendant; and to take the property sequestered into his possession."¹ in length, and from one foot to thirty inches in diameter and containing, in the aggregate, about four hundred and sixty-five thousand seven hundred and fifty feet in measurement, the value of each log also being stated, was sufficiently certain.

In Wells v. St. Dizier, 9 La. Ann. 119, an affidavit for sequestration was as follows: "He, said affiant, fears that the defendant, August St. Dizier, will conceal, part with or dispose of the flatboat and lumber, claimed in the within petition during the pendency of this suit." It was objected that the affidavit was insufficient, for, 1. It did not state that the defendant was about to remove property out of the jurisdiction of the court; 2. That the plaintiffs do not swear to ownership of the property; 3. That it is in the alternative; 4. That it is not such as would subject the party to perjury if the facts sworn to were proved to be otherwise. It was held that the affidavit was sufficient.

The above case was affirmed in Mabry v. Talla, 15 La. Ann. 562, which held that an affidavit which embraces several of the alternatives provided by the act as a good basis for sequestration, is sufficient.

Allegations showing the plaintiff's right of possession and the wrongful possession of the defendant, and the fear of the petitioners that the defendant will dispose of the property, are sufficient to maintain the sequestration. Lannes v. Courege, 31 La. Ann. 74.

But, in sequestration based on a privilege (at least when the debt secured is due), an affidavit to the debt, to the privilege, and to the fear that "the defendant will conceal, part with, or dispose of the same during the pendency of the suit," is sufficient. The party is not bound to swear to or to prove any other grounds of fear than the simple facts that he has a privilege and that it lies in the power of the defendant to defeat or destroy it by doing some of the acts which he swears he fears he may do. Lowden v. Rob- ertson, 40 La. Ann. 825. Where in a suit for the revendication of the paraphernalia of the wife, claimed by a third person, the husband and wife both appeared as plaintiffs, but the husband alone signed the affidavit for sequestration and made the bond, the sequestration was properly dissolved. Goodin v. Allen, 2 La. Ann. 448.

The title to property sequestered and bonded remains in the defendant until divested by process of law. The plaintiff obtained judgment against the defendant, and his lien and privilege on the property sequestered was recognized, but no execution was issued. Therefore when defendant went into insolvency he should have put the sequestered property in his schedule. Downey v. Kenner, 42 La. Ann. 1129.

See also Coats v. Elliott, 23 Tex. 606.

Custody.—In Field v. Broderick, 12 La. Ann. 552, certain property had been sequestered by the plaintiffs. At the instance of the plaintiffs, the property being perishable was sold, and was purchased by the plaintiffs themselves. They contended that they had a right to retain the price in their own hands because they had a claim pending in court for a privilege upon the property. Held, that the sheriff is the legal custodian of the property; that the effect of the sale was to transfer the custody from the property to the proceeds of the sale.

When the plaintiff in sequestration obtains possession under a release bond, he cannot be sued for that property in another court on the ground that it was improperly bonded while the suit in which it was sequestered is still pending. This is on the ground that the property sequestered and delivered to the plaintiff on bond is in gremio legis. The contrary doctrine would breed confusion. Lemann v. Truxillo, 32 La. Ann. 65.

1. Louisiana Code of Practice, art. 279.

The security thus given by the defendant, when the property sequestered consists in movables, shall be responsible that he shall not send away the same out of the jurisdiction of the court; that he shall not make an improper use of them, and that he will faithfully present them, after definite judgment, in case he should be decreed to restore the same to the plaintiff. Louisiana Code of Practice, art. 280.

"As regards landed property this security is given to prevent the defendant, while in possession, from wasting the property, and for the faithful restitution of the fruits that he may have received since the demand, or of their value in the event of his being cast in the suit." Louisiana Code of Practice, art. 281. See Baldwin v. Black, 119 U. S. 643.

A court may authorize an intervenor to bond sequestered property. Collins v. Edwards, 13 La. Ann. 342.

In Lemann v. Truxillo, 32 La. Ann. 6, the court by Marr, J. said: "The release bond in attachments differs widely from the release bond in sequestration. In the attachment the plaintiff has no right to bond; and the obligation of the defendant who exercises that right is that he will pay and satisfy such judgment, up to the value of the property attached, as may be rendered against him in the suit. On giving this bond the attachment is dissolved, and the defendant resumes the possession of his property, with all the rights, powers and control touching it which he had before the attachment.

"In cases of sequestration the defendant has the exclusive right to bond for ten days. On his failure to avail himself of this right, the plaintiff may have the property delivered to him on bond. In either case the condition of the bond is that the party thus obtaining possession, if the property be movable, will not send it out of the jurisdiction of the court; that he will not make an improper use of it, and that he will faithfully present it after definitive judgment, in case he should be decreed to restore the same to the adverse party.

"The object of the attachment is to enforce the payment of a debt, without any pre-existing right to the property attached; the object of sequestration is to enforce some pre-existing right to the property, whether the plaintiff claim the possession or the ownership or some lien or privilege. These differences would justify the conclusion that the release on bond of property attached takes the property out of the custody of the law, and substitutes, for the purposes of the suit, the bond with security; while, by its very terms, the release bond in a sequestration keeps the property under the control of the court, in order that the decree in reference to it may be enforced against the property itself."

On application for rehearing, the court by Spencer, J., said: "It would be strange, indeed, if a plaintiff could become owner of property by simply sequestering it on a claim of privilege or ownership and bonding it. Yet plaintiff's counsel insists that the effect of plaintiff's release bond is to put the property at his disposal. Is it possible that because I have a privilege on a thing, sequester it and bond it, I can dispose of it at my pleasure? Could not the owner revendicate it in kind in the hands of my vendee? Would not any sale of it by me be absolutely void? Is it not manifest, then, that a plaintiff in sequestration gets by his release bond only the custody and keeping of the thing preceding the litigation? That he holds the property for the court and not for himself? Yet the counsel cites us to 24 An. 570, as authority for the doctrine that plaintiff in such case can dispose at pleasure of the thing sequestered. The case decides nothing of the sort and would be absurd if it did. It simply decides that the defendant and owner who has bonded his property under sequestration may remove it from a rented place which he is leaving. Of course he can. He is its custodian as well as owner."

The Surety.—The surety on a sequestration bond must have his residence within the jurisdiction of the court. Bres v. Booth, 1 La. Ann. 307; Gossett v. Cashell, 14 La. 246.

Where the surety in a sequestration bond leaves the jurisdiction of the court, all objection will be removed by the furnishing of a new bond with a surety residing within the jurisdiction whose solvency is not questioned. Foxworth v. Burckhalter, 3 La. Ann. 365.

In Texas the statute regulating replevy bonds in sequestration cases seems to contemplate that the negative condition or conditions in the bond shall be only that the defendant will not do the particular act which the affidavit of sequestration states the plaintiff fears the defendant will do.

2. Damages for Illegal Sequestration.—Where a party who obtains a writ of sequestration fails to show any real cause of action, or any grounds of suspicion which would justify a man, in the sober pursuit of his right, in resorting to a remedy intended only for extreme cases, he subjects himself to pay damages.¹

Krall v. Printing Press, etc., Co., 79 Tex. 556.

The statute does not require that there shall be a bond executed separately to each defendant in a case in which there are several defendants against whom sequestration is sought. Boykin v. Rosenfield, 69 Tex. 115.

A sequestration bond is defective if it does not correctly describe the parties to the suit, and should be quashed, as the remedies of sequestration and attachment are equally stringent and the same strictness should apply to the procedure in one case as in the other. A bond was made payable to A B and C D without describing them as defendants; but was conditioned that plaintiffs "will pay to the defendants in said suit all such damages," etc., without stating who the defendants are. Although this gives rise to the conjecture that A B and C D are the defendants, the fact does not clearly appear on the face of the bond. Rohrbough v. Leopold, 68 Tex. 254.

1. Stetson v. Le Blanc, 6 La. 266.

A suit by sequestration is a lawful act, and, according to the general rule of law, the plaintiff would not be liable at all in damages for the exercise of the right; but is made liable in such a case for actual damages, in the event of his failure, by virtue of an exception to the general rule. Broxton v. Bloom, 15 La. Ann. 618.

The sheriff who has the sequestered property in charge for the successful litigant is responsible for its loss, if from his negligence it disappears, or is destroyed or lost. Jones v. Doles, 3 La. Ann. 588.

Whatever may be the responsibility of the sheriff, the plaintiff in the sequestration is responsible for the restoration of the property, and the sureties also. Jones v. Doles, 3 La. Ann. 588.

The plaintiff, who obtains a writ of sequestration, if he ratifies the acts of the sheriff, who, in execution of the writ, abused the process of the court, is liable. Casey v. Hanrick, 69 Tex. 44.

In Marin v. Satterfield, 41 La. Ann.

742, the firm of A & B instituted a suit for debt against a partnership of which the plaintiff was a member, and caused the sequestration of some movable property of the plaintiff. After delay, during which the plaintiff failed to bond the property, the defendant, attorney in fact for A & B, furnished a bond releasing the property from sequestration. He then disposed of the property at private sale without order of the court, and before judgment had been rendered. Held, that he had no power to do so, and that he was liable to the plaintiff for the value of the property thus illegally sold.

Measure of Damages.—As between the principals in a sequestration bond and the party whose property has been sequestered, they may be bound beyond the penalty expressed in the instrument. Biggs v. D'Aquin, 13 La. Ann. 21.

A liberal though not vindictive standard. Stetson v. Le Blanc, 6 La. 266.

Where a sequestration has been wrongfully obtained the true standard of damages should be the probable loss sustained in consequence of the party being deprived of the free use or disposal of his own property; and he should be placed as nearly as possible in the sequestration he would have been in if the sequestration bond had never issued. Sellick v. Kelly, 11 Rob. (La.) 149.

In Bonner v. Coply, 15 La. Ann. 504, it was held that actual damages were all that could be recovered, and that interest could not be allowed on the amount found.

In an action against the sureties on a sequestration bond to recover damages for the illegality of the sequestration, the plaintiff must show the value of the property taken and such other injury as was sustained. In the assessment the reasonable expense of counsel in the former suit may be included. But it is not necessary for the plaintiff to show that the counsel fees have actually been paid, it being material only that the liability has been incurred. Jones v. Doles, 3 La. Ann. 588.

SERIOUS.—See note 1.

Evidence in Mitigation of Damages.—The discontinuance of a suit is not conclusive evidence of want of cause of action, and that the sequestration was wrongfully sued out. The fact that the plaintiff had some cause of action may well be given in evidence in mitigation of damages. Stetson v. Le Blanc, 6 La. 266.

In Lacoste v. Duvie, 31 La. Ann. 367, Duvie was surety for Roses on the sequestration bond. Roses brought suit against Lacoste and had property of the latter sequestered, but was non-suited. Lacoste brings action against Duvie for damages resulting from the sequestration. Duvie offered evidence to show that Lacoste was not owner of the goods, and hence no damage. The evidence was rejected on the ground that the question of ownership could not be raised by the surety. Held, error.

In Texas.—Blum v. Gaines, 57 Tex. 135, was a suit brought to recover damages against appellants who had, in an action of trespass to try title, sued out a sequestration, and the appellee, failing to replevy, replevied and took possession of the sequestered property. On the first day of the term of court succeeding the levy, the plaintiff dismissed the suit but failed to return the possession of the property to the appellee. The court by Stayton, J., said: "A writ of sequestration is permitted by law to issue, in a suit of trespass, to try title, for the purpose of preventing injury to the property, its waste, or to prevent the conversion by the occupant of the fruits and revenues of the property; and it is permitted for no other purposes. It was never intended that a party might use such process for the sole purpose of getting possession of property in the possession of and claimed by another. Good faith requires a party plaintiff who obtains property through a writ of sequestration to prosecute his suit to final termination, and if the same is determined against him, to restore it with the revenue and rent of the same to the party from whose possession the same was taken."

"The dismissal of the suit in this regard was equivalent to an abandonment of claim and required a restoration of the property, and a failure to prosecute the suit, or, upon a voluntary dismissal thereof, to restore the property, was evidence, the weight of which was for the determination of the jury in ascertaining whether the writ was sued out for a proper purpose."

Other Cases.—K was the owner of a tug. N and L holding a mortgage thereon brought suit and obtained a writ of sequestration and caused the sheriff to seize the tug. K not having bonded the tug within the time allowed, N and L bonded her and she was released into their possession. B was the surety on the bond and was their agent to receive the tug. He held the tug for about three months during which time she was employed in business of towing vessels under direction of N and L to whom the earnings were turned over. Held, that the proceedings of N and L by which they obtained possession of the tug were in accordance with law, and that therefore, B, their agent, was in lawful possession of her, but only as agent, and therefore there could be no claim against him by K, either in contract or tort, for the earnings of the tug. Baldwin v. Black, 119 U. S. 643.

In a suit for damages sustained by the defendant because the sequestration was wrongfully obtained against the sureties on the bond, not only the fact that the judgment was rendered for the defendant in the sequestration suit will be considered, but also the reasons for the judgment. Clarke v. Scott, 2 La. Ann. 907.

A motion to dissolve may be resorted to in case of sequestration. Crawford v. Jones, 2 La. Ann. 826.

In cases of attachment there is express legislation authorizing summary proceedings against the surety; but there is no such provision for sequestration bonds. Consequently, a surety on a sequestration bond cannot be proceeded against by rule or on motion. Sharp v. Bright, 14 La. Ann. 391.

SERVICE.—1. The being employed to serve another.² The contract by which one person binds himself to serve another is called the contract of service.³ The term also designates the duty or labor due from employé to employer.⁴

2. In feudal law, service was the consideration which the feudal tenants were bound to render to the lord in recompense for the lands they held of him. The services in respect of their qualities were either free or base services, and, in respect of their quantity and the time of exacting them were either certain or uncertain.⁵

danger." George v. State, 21 Tex. App. 317.

"Serious bodily harm" is substantially equivalent to "great bodily harm." Lawlor v. People, 74 Ill. 228. See also HOMICIDE, vol. 9, p. 593.

1. Serve Notice—Serve Process.—(See also SERVICE OF PROCESS).—When notice is to be "served" there is an implication that the notice is to be written. Wilson v. Nightingale, 8 Q. B. 1034; Reg. v. Shermer, 7 Q. B. Div. 323. But the use of the term "serve" does not enjoin personal service. In re McGrath, 24 Q. B. Div. 466. The court by Cave, J., said: "I think the service of the notice was sufficient. The 186th rule requires that, where any order is made appointing the time and place for holding the public examination of a debtor, the official receiver shall serve a copy thereof on the debtor. It does not say that the order must be personally served, but that it must be served on the debtor. Then section 142 of the act provides that all notices and other documents—which words include the copy of an order such as this—for the service of which no special mode is directed may be served by prepaid post letter to the last-known address of the person to be served therewith. Now, undoubtedly, the debtor is the person to be served; and no special mode of service is directed. One way of testing the point is to add to rule 186 the words of section 142; and, reading the two provisions together, there is nothing inconsistent in their language. But, if the rule and section so read had said that the official receiver should serve the debtor personally by sending a copy of the order by prepaid post letter to the last-known address of the debtor, that obviously would have been a contradiction in terms. For these reasons I am of opinion that the document to be served under rule 186 may be sent by a prepaid post letter; and as this has been done in this case in the manner pointed out by rule 92, viz., by a registered letter, the warrant for the arrest of the debtor may be issued."

I. GENERAL NATURE OF THE SUBJECT.—Process is a mandate of the court, and embraces those writs which are necessary to institute and conduct an action or suit and to carry into effect the judgment of the court.¹

It is a fundamental principle of justice that no valid proceedings can be had against any person until he shall have been notified of such proceedings by proper service of process upon him, either actually or constructively, and this right, recognized at

1. See PROCESS; Comet Consolidated Co., 9 Minn. 55; Fitzpatrick v. New Orleans, 27 La. Ann. 457; Bailey v. St. Anthony Falls Water Power, 6 Oregon 71.

common law, is secured by constitutions and judicial decisions.¹ But when a defendant has been once brought into court by a proper service of process, he is charged with notice of whatever action the court may take while the suit is pending,² unless the petition or complaint is changed materially by amendment or otherwise after the original service, in which case he is entitled to further notice.³

II. BY WHOM SERVICE IS MADE.—The sheriff, as the ministerial officer of the court, is ordinarily the proper officer to execute all processes issued from the court, provided he is not an interested party, or otherwise disqualified.⁴ The sheriff making the service must be the one to whom the process is addressed; a writ addressed to one officer confers no authority upon another to execute it;⁵

1. Necessity of Process.—It is provided by the Constitution of the United States that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property, without due process of law, and also that no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law. U. S. Const. Amdts., arts. 5, 14. The constitution of every State in the Union contains a similar provision. See Stimson's St. Law, p. 27. See also Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714; Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 350; 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.) 517, and cases cited; Taylor v. Taylor, 64 Ind. 356; DUE PROCESS OF LAW, vol. 6, p. 43; PROCESS, vol. 19, p. 224.

2. Governor v. Lassiter, 83 N. Car. 38; Hancock v. Pico, 40 Cal. 153; Thomas v. Richards, 69 Wis. 671.

And so where all the parties to an action were summoned to answer the original petition, but the record fails to show whether some of them were summoned to answer an amended petition, it will be presumed, after the lapse of thirty-five or forty years, that all the parties were served with proper process. Best v. Vanhook (Ky. 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 49.

3. Where Petition or Complaint is Amended.—State v. Burke, 37 La. Ann. 231; Thompson v. Allen, 86 Mo. 85; Best v. Vanhook (Ky. 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 49.

But where an amendment of the summons is merely formal and the defendant could derive no possible benefit from being served with it, a second service is unnecessary. Bray v. Creekmore, 109 N. Car. 49; White v. Hinton (Wyoming, 1892), 30 Pac. Rep. 953.

4. By the Sheriff.—See SHERIFFS, vol. 22. See also Bac. Abr., Sheriff; Evarts

v. Georgia, 18 Vt. 15; Knott v. Jarboe, 1 Metc (Ky.) 504.

It is sufficient if the officer is one de facto, although not de jure. Fowler v. Bebee, 9 Mass. 231. Compare, however, Bennett v. Fuller, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 486; Putnam v. Mann, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 202; 20 Am. Dec. 686.

Under the practice in Florida, a process of the supreme court can be served only by a sheriff of that court. A citation to an appellee issued by the clerk of a circuit court is a process of the supreme court, and service of it by a sheriff of the latter court in person or by deputy is invalid. Williams v. Hutchinson (Fla. 1890), 7 So. Rep. 852; Jenssen v. Walther, 26 Fla. 448. See also Guarantee Trust, etc., Co. v. Buddington, 23 Fla. 514.

5. Must Be Served by Sheriff Addressed.—Callaway v. Harrold, 61 Ga. 111; Poltull v. Brown, 84 Ga. 338; Arnold v. Wynn, 26 Miss. 338; Rudd v. Thompson, 22 Ark. 363 (writ directed to sheriff and served by coroner). Compare Adamson v. Parker, 3 Ala. 727. Therefore a writ directed to a constable confers no authority upon a marshal to execute it. Hickey v. Forristal, 49 Ill. 255. Nor can a writ directed to a sheriff or marshal be served by a private person unless he be specially deputized. Schwabacker v. Reilly, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 127; Republican Valley R. Co. v. Sawyer, 13 Neb. 280; Gantier v. Rosecrance, 27 Wis. 488. And a summons issued in a suit commenced in one county and directed to the sheriff of another county, cannot be served by the deputy sheriff of the first county. Branner v. Chapman, 11 Kan. 118.

A writ addressed to —, constable of W. county, may be served by any con-but it seems that where process is directed to the wrong officer and served by the right one, the proceedings based on such service are not necessarily invalid.²

Ordinarily a sheriff or similar officer has no authority to serve process beyond the limits of his county or district; a writ, from whatever jurisdiction issued, must therefore be addressed to and served by the sheriff or other officer of the county or district where service is to be made.³

A deputy has authority to serve process only in cases where his principal would have the authority to make such service; therefore where the sheriff is personally disqualified by reason of interest in the suit, prejudice, partiality, consanguinity to one of the parties, or by being himself a party to the record, service cannot be made by his deputy; but where the sheriff's disability arises from sickness, absence from the county, or other similar cause, his deputy is qualified to serve.⁴ A deputy's authority to serve process expires with that of his principal,⁵ but it seems that service by him after the expiration of his principal's term of office and before his successor has qualified is not necessarily invalid.⁶

Where the sheriff and his deputies are disqualified on the ground of interest the coroner is the proper officer to serve process.⁶ In courts of justices of the peace, the constable, being

See the rule of the text applied in connection with the Michigan watercraft law of 1864, § 3, providing that process issued in either of two adjoining counties may be served in the waters of either, by the sheriff of either. Baker v. Casey, 19 Mich. 220.

3. Service by Deputy.—Minott v. Vineyard, 11 Iowa 90. See also DEPUTY, vol. 5, p. 628; SHERIFFS, vol. 22; Nelson v. Nye, 43 Miss. 124; Branner v. Chapman, 11 Kan. 118.

Service by a deputy upon several co-defendants, one of whom was the sheriff, was held valid in Turnbull v. Thompson, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 306.

In Slocomb v. Powers, 10 R. I. 256, service was allowed to be made by one deputy upon another; and in Gage v. Graffam, 11 Mass. 181, it was held that a deputy sheriff might lawfully serve a deputy jail-keeper, who acted under the same principal. Wood v. Ross, 11 Mass. 271.

4. See DEPUTY, vol. 5, p. 636.

5. Garner v. Clay, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 182.

In some cases the marshal is the proper officer where the sheriff is disqualified. See Gallegos v. Pino, 1 N. Mex. 410.

Under Kentucky Civil Code, § 667, which provides that every process "shall be directed to the sheriff of the county; or, if he be a party, or be interested, to the coroner; or, if he be interested, to the jailer"—process cannot be directed to the jailer unless both the sheriff and coroner are disqualified; and an execution directed to the "coroner or jailer," cannot be executed by the jailer, as the presumption is that the ministerial officer of such courts, is usually the one to serve all processes issued by them.¹ Process from the federal courts is served by the marshal or his deputies.²

It is a general rule that no one who is a party to the action or suit, or who is otherwise interested therein, can make a valid service of process in such suit,³ and in case the officers whose duty it is to serve process are disqualified, an indifferent person must be specially deputized.⁴

In case of service made by an indifferent person, he may be any competent person the court or justice may see fit to authorize.⁵

the coroner was qualified. Gowdy v. Sanders (Ky. 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 82. When there is no coroner in the county, the court may appoint one to serve process against the sheriff. Witkousky v. Rintels, 69 N. Car. 38.

When process is served by the coroner, all the facts necessary to give him authority should affirmatively appear on the face of the writ; a general direction to him is not sufficient. Carlisle v. Weston, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 535; Simonds v. Parker, 1 Met. (Mass.) 508; Beard v. Smith, 9 Iowa 50 (nothing should be left to inference).

2. By Marshal.—U. S. Rev. St., § 787. See Gallegos v. Pino, 1 N. Mex. 410.

3. Service Cannot be Made by Party to the Suit.—Boykin v. Edwards, 21 Ala. 261; Toenniges v. Drake, 7 Colo. 471; Hemmer v. Wolfer, 127 Ill. 435; Snydacke v. Brosse, 51 Ill. 357; 99 Am. Dec. 551; Hayden v. Atlanta Sav. Bank, 66 Ga. 150; Pausch v. Gueward, 67 Ga. 319; Knott v. Jarboe, 1 Met. (Ky.) 504; Morton v. Crane, 39 Mich. 526; Bush v. Meacham, 53 Mich. 574; New York Code Civ. Proc., § 425. Compare Walker v. Hill, 21 Me. 481.

The fact that a sheriff is a ratable inhabitant of a town makes him incompetent to serve a writ against it. Evarts v. Georgia, 18 Vt. 15; Lyman v. Burlington, 22 Vt. 131. Compare Clark v. Bray, 1 Kirby (Conn.) 237; Windham v. Hampton, 1 Root (Conn.) 175.

It is said, however, that service of summons by a party is a mere irregularity, which cannot be taken advantage of after judgment. Hunter v. Lester, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 260; Myers v. Overton, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 344; and in Avery v. Warren, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 559, it is said that § 559 of Tennessee code, providing for service by the coroner when the sheriff is a party, does not apply where he is a mere nominal party.

Where a writ was served by a person not an officer, but deputized by the sheriff, and who bore the same name as that of one of the plaintiffs, and nothing appeared to the contrary, the court held that it must be presumed, from the identity of names, that the person serving the writ was a plaintiff, and that the service was not good. Filkins v. O'Sullivan, 79 Ill. 524. Compare Boykin v. Edwards, 21 Ala. 261. But in Cumming v. Richards, 32 Ala. 459, it is held that the mere fact that the name of the sheriff who executed the summons on one of the defendants to a suit, in which judgment was by default, is the same with that of another of the defendants, is not a sufficient ground, in an appellate court, for presuming an identity, and reversing the judgment.

The fact that the sheriff is a party to a civil suit pending in a district court does not authorize service of process issuing in the cause by a town or city marshal residing in the county. Robinson v. Schmidt, 48 Tex. 13.

A sheriff after being appointed guardian of the plaintiff, cannot complete service commenced before his appointment. Clark v. Patterson, 58 Vt. 676.

In Goodin v. State, 14 Tex. App. 443, it is said that if one of several defendants is the sheriff, process is properly served by the constable, although it does not appear from the face of the petition that the sheriff is a party. Compare Carlisle v. Weston, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 535.

4. See Miller v. Miller, 39 Minn. 376; and cases cited in succeeding note.

5. Service by Indifferent Person.—See

The statutes of some States prescribe the age of such person,¹ but in the absence of statutory provision it seems that he must not be under twenty-one.²

The "summons" which is now used under the code practice in many States, being a mere notification, proceeding from the plaintiff's attorney, and not process, may be served by anyone not a party to the suit, unless otherwise prescribed by law.³

Service must in all cases be made by one duly authorized to make it, whether an officer or a private individual.⁴ Where a private person is deputed to make service, the deputation should be indorsed on the writ or appear of record,⁵ and should

New York Code Civ. Proc., § 1895, providing that summons in an action to recover a penalty given by statute to any person suing therefor can be served "only by an officer authorized by law to collect an execution issued out of the same court," does not apply to an action under New York Laws 1857, ch. 185, giving a penalty of fifty dollars against a railroad company charging an excess of fare. Quade v. New York, etc., R. Co., 14 N. Y. Supp. 875.

4. Service Must be by Person Duly Authorized.—Leavitt v. Leavitt, 135 Mass. 191; Brown v. Brown, 15 Mass. 389 (divorce cases); Gabler v. Elizabeth, 41 N. J. L. 316; Grantier v. Rosecrance, 27 Wis. 488.

In Guarantee Trust, etc., Co. v. Budington, 23 Fla. 514, it was held that service of a writ by an officer having no authority as such to make service, is invalid, and cannot be sustained upon the theory that he was at the time the deputy of the officer whose duty it was to serve it, when the former had at the time no information of the latter's intention to depute him to do it.

Under the Kentucky statute empowering sheriffs, by indorsement on a summons, to authorize a special bailiff to serve it, an indorsement on an original writ confers no authority on a special bailiff to serve an alias. Thompson v. Moore (Ky. 1891), 15 S. W. Rep. 6. See also Lillard v. Brannin (Ky. 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 349. In this latter case, it is held that § 668 of the Kentucky Civ. Code providing that, for good cause, the court may appoint a person to serve a particular process, who shall have the same power as a sheriff, a person appointed in one county cannot serve a process in another, since, by § 667, the process is required to be directed to the sheriff of the county and no sheriff has any authority beyond the limits of his own county.

5. Authority to Serve Must be Indorsed on Process.—Miller v. Miller, 39 show all facts necessary to authorize the appointment of such deputy.¹

III. TIME OF SERVICE.—Service of process, it seems, may be made at any hour of the day or night, and on any day save those excepted at common law and by statute.² Sunday being both by common law and by statute in nearly every State dies non juridicus, service of process is invalid if made upon that day.³ Various other legal holidays are provided in the several States, Minn. 376; Gadsby v. Stimer, 79 Mich. 260; Culver v. Balch, 23 Vt. 618; Pricke v. Cleek, 13 Oregon 415; Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Page, 61 Mich. 72; Coffee v. Gates, 28 Ark. 43.

1. Beard v. Smith, 9 Iowa 50; Simonds v. Parker, 1 Met. (Mass.) 508. Compare Currens v. Ratcliffe, 9 Iowa 309.

It is held that in indorsing upon a summons and deputation of authority to serve it, the justice need not certify that the person authorized is of age and not interested in the suit. It is not presumed that he selects an incompetent person. Buel v. Duke, 38 Mich. 167.

But a different view is taken, and it is held that the fitness of the deputy should appear from the indorsement, in Gadsby v. Stimer, 79 Mich. 260. See Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Page, 61 Mich. 72.

Appointment of Deputy Generally.—In Vermont, the appointment of an indifferent person to execute process is a judicial act, and cannot be delegated. Kelly v. Paris, 10 Vt. 261; 33 Am. Dec. 199.

Such an appointment upon a blank writ is void, and those acting under it are trespassers. Kelly v. Paris, 10 Vt. 261; 33 Am. Dec. 199.

In Vermont, it is also held that service of a subpoena issued from chancery cannot be made by an indifferent person, who is not named in such a subpoena. Allyn v. Davis, 10 Vt. 547. See also Clarke v. Washburn, 9 Vt. 302.

In Connecticut, where an indifferent person is to serve process, the magistrate is required first to administer to him an oath. Kellogg v. Wadhams, 9 Conn. 201; Augur v. Augur, 14 Conn. 82; Eno v. Frisbie, 5 Day (Conn.) 122.

One specially appointed to serve a writ, is an officer de facto for that purpose. Jewell v. Gilbert, 64 N. H. 13; 13 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 117.

As to appointment of a private person as special constable for service of summons, see Johnson v. MacCoy, 32 W. Va. 552. See also Polhill v. Brown, 84 Ga. 338.

It is held, also, that no authority to serve a process can be conferred upon one who has not power by statute for that purpose, without a judicial act of the magistrate who signs the process. Dolbear v. Hancock, 19 Vt. 388; Grantier v. Rosecrance, 27 Wis. 488.

And where a superior court writ is served by a person authorized only by a justice of the peace, and not by the authority signing the writ, the defect is fatal. Howard v. Walker, 39 Vt. 163.

Nebraska Code provides that at a party's request, and on being satisfied that it is expedient, a justice may depute a "discreet" person of suitable age to serve a summons, and that such deputation must be in writing, on the process. Under this, the appointment need not show that the justice was requested to make it, nor that he was satisfied of its expediency; it is sufficient to address the summons to the appointee as "special constable." Morse v. Carpenter, 31 Neb. 224; Culver v. Balch, 23 Vt. 618; Haskins v. Citizens Bank, 12 Neb. 39. Compare Gadsby v. Stimer, 79 Mich. 260; holding that the request must appear in the indorsement.

In Jewett v. Garrett, 47 Fed. Rep. 625, it is held that the appointment of a special deputy to serve process is not invalidated by the fact that the marshal delivered a signed blank writ for such appointment; and that plaintiff's attorney filled the blank with the deputy's name. Compare Kelly v. Paris, 10 Vt. 261; 33 Am. Dec. 199.

2. Stone's Case, 129 Mass. 156; McKalley's Case, 9 Coke 651.

3. See SUNDAY. See also, DAY, vol. 5, p. 85. Dies non juridicus means a day upon which no judicial proceedings can be had; and the term judicial proceedings embraces the issuing and service of all process. State v. Ricketts, 74 N. Car. 193.

either by State or Federal statutes; but whether these holidays are such that valid service of process cannot be made upon them is a question concerning which there is much doubt. It seems to be true, however, that service on such days is at least irregular.¹ The general rule is sometimes relaxed in favor of attachments, owing to the peculiar character of this remedy, and also in favor of criminal process, so that a valid service of such process may be made at times when the service of any other process would be invalid.²

Service must, of course, be made a sufficient time before the cause is to be heard for the defendant to prepare his defense and make his appearance. Therefore, it is required by statute in most of the States that service shall be made a certain number of days, at the least, before the return day, which is usually the first day of the term of the court at which the cause is to be heard;³ and in computing this time the day of service and the return day are not both to

1. Paul v. Bruce, 9 Bush. (Ky.) 317. In Lampe v. Manning, 38 Wis. 673, it is said that whenever a State statute declares a certain day to be a legal holiday, it becomes dies non juridicus.

In New York, service on election day is invalid, except service of a subpoena in chancery, or an injunction. Wheeler v. Bartlett, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 323; Meeks v. Noxon, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 280; 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 289; Bierce v. Smith, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 411; but it is held in the same State, that service on any other legal holiday, for example, Saturday afternoon, is not invalid. Didsbury v. Van Tassel, 31 N. Y. St. Rep. 204. See Malengreen v. Phinney (Minn. 1892), 52 N. W. 915 (publication on May 30, valid). In Connecticut, service of process on a day appointed by the government as one for public thanksgiving is forbidden, and if made then is void. Gladwin v. Lewis, 6 Conn. 49; 16 Am. Dec. 33.

In West Virginia, it is held that process may be served on the fourth day of July as well as on any other day. Horn v. Perry, 11 W. Va. 694.

In New Jersey, valid service may be made on any day except Sunday. Glenn v. Eddy, 51 N. J. Eq. 255.

In Arkansas, a service on the Fourth of July is forbidden except in extreme cases. Swinney v. Johnson, 18 Ark. 534. Compare Rogers v. Brooks, 30 Ark. 612.

In Whitney v. Blackburn, 17 Oregon 564; 11 Am. St. Rep. 857, it is said that service of process upon a legal holiday is irregular, and may be pleaded in abatement, or set aside on motion; but a notice of an election contest, like a summons, is not a technical "process," so that service of it is not necessarily invalid because made on a holiday.

2. Thus, in Arkansas, it is provided that no person shall on Sunday, or the Fourth of July, serve or execute any writ or process, except in criminal cases for breach of the peace, or when the defendant is about to leave the county. See Swinney v. Johnson, 18 Ark. 534; Rogers v. Brooks, 30 Ark. 612.

An attachment is in the nature of a summary remedy, and is intended to afford a remedy to a plaintiff when the defendant in the suit is about to abscond. Therefore, its effect might frequently be lost if it could not be used on a holiday. See 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.) 479; SUNDAY.

Unless process is served the required time before the return day, it is utterly void, and may be cured only by the voluntary appearance of the defendant. Draper v. Draper, 59 Ill. 119; Central Mfg. Co. v. Hartshorne, 3 Conn. 199; Thrower v. Brandon, 89 Ala. 406; Meisse v. McCoy, 17 Ohio St. 225; Harrington v. Harrington

A writ served on the thirty-first day of October, requiring the defendant to appear at 2.30 P.M. the third day of November, was held to have given the three days' notice required by statute of Kansas. Foster v. Markland, 37 Kan. 32.

Where statute required service at least ten days before return day, a service on Friday, June 22, the return day being Monday, July 2, was held sufficient. Womack v. McAhren, 9 Ind. 6. So service on the 15th, the return day being the 25th, is sufficient. Korpeteter v. Wright, 15 Ind. 456.

But under § 3227 of Virginia code, requiring service ten days before return day, a summons issued March 29, returnable on first Monday in April, cannot be served on March 30. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Vaughan, 88 Va. 832. See for other cases, Moffitt v. Bining, 17 Ind. 195; Martin v. Reed, 9 Ind. 180; Blair v. Davis, 9 Ind. 236.

California Code, § 406, requires summons to be served within one year from the filing of the complaint. This provision is mandatory. Linden Gravel Min. Co. v. Sheplar, 53 Cal. 245.

Under the Indiana rule, which requires service of summons to be made ten days before the first day of the term, the latter day to be included and the day of service excluded, a service made on December 27, returnable January 7 (the second day of the term), is sufficient; and a default taken on that day is valid. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Flinn (Ind. App. 1891), 28 N. E. Rep. 201.

Service being required to be made ten days before the next succeeding term of court, the 29th day of February is to be included in the computation. Helphenstine v. Vincennes Nat. Bank, 65 Ind. 589; 32 Am. Rep. 86.

In computing the time for serving a writ, the return day is to be excluded; and if it falls on Sunday, the succeeding Monday is the day on which the return is to be made. *Baxley v. Defendant may waive a defect in the service in being made too near the return day, and it seems that he does so impliedly by failure to object. Torrent v. Sulter, 67 Ga. 32.

As to extension of time for service, see Allen v. Mutual Loan, etc., Co., 86 Ga. 74.

Whether or not a writ is served within required term, is a question for the jury. People v. Clement, 72 Mich. 116.

Subpoena.—The rule as to service of a subpoena for witnesses is laid down in 1 Greenleaf's Ev., § 314; like other mesne process it must be served a reasonable time before the day on which the witness is to appear, and this reasonable time must never be less than one day. Hammond v. Stewart, 1 Stra. 510; Sims v. Kitchen, 5 Esp. 46; Scammon v. Scammon, 33 N. H. 52. Service after the return day is utterly void. Lofland v. Jefferson, 4 Harr. (Del.) 303. As to what is a reasonable time in such connection, see Ex parte Williams, 2 L. M. & P. 580; 21 L. J. M. C. 46.

bears date after the officer's return of service, the return is no evidence of service and need not be traversed.¹

IV. WHERE AND UPON WHOM SERVICE IS MADE.—Service of process, to be valid, must be made within the territorial jurisdiction of the court from which the process issued and of the officer making the service.²

Service is to be made upon the party named in the process to be served; in case of summons this is ordinarily the defendant in the suit.³ If one is served with a process which contains his name as that of the defendant, but which he believes is intended for another person of the same name, he must nevertheless appear; if he fails to do so, relying upon the mistake in identity, he may be bound by the judgment by default rendered against him.⁴ A material mistake in the name of the party shown by the return to have been served will invalidate the service.⁵

A district court has jurisdiction where defendant was served with process upon an Indian reservation. The process of the court runs and may be served there, unless a treaty with the Indians stipulates otherwise. Hyde v. Harkness, 1 Idaho (N. S.) 536.

In Peabody v. Hamilton, 106 Mass. 217, it is said to be no objection to the validity of the service of process in a civil action that it was made upon the defendant while he was still on board a British mail steam vessel after she arrived at the dock but before she was moored.

A village marshal, to whom is given the powers of a constable for two counties, may serve process in either county. Starkweather v. Sawyer, 63 Wis. 297.

Under the Pennsylvania statute requiring service of process against one engaged in business in another county, to be made "at the usual place of business or residence" of such party, a personal service not made at one of such places is invalid. Lehigh Valley Ins. Co. v. Fuller, 81 Pa. St. 398.

Where a suit against a corporation is instituted in the county which is the domicile of such corporation, service on the president outside the State is not sufficient. Dillard v. Central Va. Iron Co., 82 Va. 734. See also infra, this title, Upon a Corporation.

Where a city marshal has no authority to serve process outside of the city limits, his return on a writ of attachment issued by a justice, will not confer jurisdiction unless it shows affirmatively that the writ was served within the city. Alverson v. Dennison, 40 Mich. 179.

3. Upon Whom Service Is Made.—See generally, PARTIES TO ACTIONS, vol. 17, p. 470.

In Coleman's Appeal, 75 Pa. St. 441, a bill was filed against a corporation, D., and persons alleged to be indebted to D., to compel a transfer of stock held by D. and payment to the petitioner by D. of money arising out of certain corporate transactions. It was held that D. was the "principal defendant," under the act of 1859 regulating the issuance and service of process in equity cases.

V. MANNER OF SERVICE.—1. Upon a State.—In case of process issued against a State, either at law or in equity, it should be served upon the governor or chief executive magistrate, and the attorney-general.¹ The rule as to service of process against a State applies only in cases where the State is a party to the record; when the suit is prosecuted by an officer, conducting proceedings in his own name or that of his office, but acting in behalf of the State, the citation in error must be served on him, and service as against the State would be insufficient.² Process against a State issues "against the State of ——"."³

2. Upon a Corporation.—At common law, process against a corporation was by writ of summons against some one of its officers, and in case no appearance was made, then by a distringas against its goods; so that if the corporation had neither land nor other property, there was no way to compel its appearance either at law or in equity.⁴

officer that he served the summons upon "James Mayberry" and delivered the said "Jame May" a certified copy of the complaint, is sufficient. Allen v. Mayberry, 14 Nev. 115. But service on "Asher B." is no service on "Ashley B." Bates v. State Bank, 7 Ark. 394; 46 Am. Dec. 293. Nor is service on "Jonathan McCarver" notice to "Jonathan McCravery." McCravery v. Cox, 24 Ark. 574.

Writing "Rosa K." instead of "Rose K." is not a material error. Galliano v. Kilfry, 94 Cal. 86. And in an action against "A. J. Veasey," a return of service upon "Jack Veasey" is held sufficient to support a judgment by default. Veasey v. Brigman, 93 Ala. 548. A return of process against "Jacob Kraig" as served on "Jacob Krug," is insufficient; the names are not idem sonans. McClaskey v. Barr, 45 Fed. Rep. 151. See also Cheshire v. Milburn Wagon Co. (Ga. 1892), 15 S. E. Rep. 311 (immaterial clerical error).

In Huger v. South Carolina, 3 Dall. (U. In Massachusetts, it is held that in proceedings where the commonwealth is a party, or interested, and no other special mode of summons is provided by law, notice to the governor, as the chief executive officer, is sufficient. Com. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 3 Cush. (Mass.) 25.

Where the United States is defendant, it is not a sufficient service of the writ of error to leave a copy thereof at the residence, and with the wife, of the United States attorney. Conway v. U. S., 2 Wash. 336. See also Bennet v. U. S., 2 Wash. 179.

pable of being apprehended or committed to prison; and, therefore, it cannot be outlawed, for outlawry supposes a precedent right of arresting which has been defeated by the party's absconding; and that also a corporation cannot do. For these reasons the proceedings to compel a corporation to appear to any suit by attorney, are at common law always by distress on its goods and the profits of its lands after a summons has been executed and not obeyed." 1 Minor's Inst. (3d ed.) [565] 644.

In Absence of Statutory Provision.—In the case of Heltzell v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 77 Mo. 315; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 619, it was said that, "in the absence of any statutory mode of service of notice upon a corporation, when it cannot be had upon the chief officer or managing agent, service upon any officer whose official relation to the governing body or managing agent or chief officer would make it his duty to communicate the notice, will be sufficient." Also that the secretary of a railway corporation is such an officer.

When there are no special provisions relative to service of process upon foreign corporations, such corporations, it is held, are within the operation of a general statute providing for service upon corporate agents. Hannibal, etc., R. Co.*, 19 Mich. 336; Hebel v. Amazon Ins. Co., 33 Mich. 400.

1. Constitutionality of Statute Conflicting with Charter.—A statute which prescribes a mode of service of process upon a corporation different from that provided for in its charter, is not void as impairing the obligation of the charter contract. Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Hecht, 95 U. S. 168; New Albany, etc., R. Co. v. Mc-

Namara, 11 Ind. 543; Sturgis v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122.

Manner of Service.—The exact manner of service varies, of course, according to the language of the various statutes. The provision usually is that service shall be made by delivering a copy to an officer, etc. See New York Code Civ. Proc., §§ 431-2. And where this is the case, service cannot be made by merely reading the contents of the writ to such officer. Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Janier, 72 Ill. 520. See also Sleeper v. Free Baptist Assoc., 58 N. H. 27.

New York Statutes.—The New York statute, relative to service of process upon a domestic corporation, may be quoted as affording a fair example of the statutes on the subject. New York Code Civ. Proc., § 431, provides: "Personal service of the summons upon a defendant, being a domestic corporation, may be made by delivering a copy thereof within the State as follows: 1. If the action is against the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of New York, to the mayor, comptroller or counsel to the corporation. 2. If the action is against any other city, to the mayor, treasurer, counsel, attorney, or clerk; or, if the city lacks either of those officers, to the officer performing corresponding functions under another name. 3. In any other case, to the president or head of the corporation, the secretary or clerk to the corporation, the cashier, the treasurer, or a director or managing agent." See 1 Bliss' Annotated Code of New York 265; New York Code Civ. Proc., § 431; Winslow v. Staten Island, etc., R. Co., 51 Hun (N. Y.) 298; Emerson v. Auburn, etc., R. Co., 13 Hun (N. Y.) 150; Rochester, etc., R. Co., v. New York, etc., R. Co., 48 Hun (N. Y.) 190.

In Barrett v. American Tel., etc., Co., 31 N. Y. St. Rep. 465, it is said that if the person served sustains sufficient character and rank to render it reasonably certain that the corporation will be apprised of the service, the requirement of the statute is answered.

2. Statutes Provide an Exclusive Method of Service.—It has been held in

It has been decided that since the object of such statutes is merely to carry out the principle that no proceeding may be had against the defendant until due notice has been given him, a service which virtually accomplishes this object will not be held invalid, if the statute is capable of a double construction.¹

many cases that the method prescribed by statute for the service of process is exclusive of any other method of service; and this is particularly true in the case of foreign corporations. See In re St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 36 Minn. 85; 28 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 255; Little Bobtail Min. Co. v. Lightbourne, 10 Colo. 429; Well v. Greene Co., 69 Mo. 281; Cosgrove v. Tebo, etc., R. Co., 54 Mo. 495; North v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 10 Ohio St. 548; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Owen, 30 Mich. 441; Congar v. Galena, etc., R. Co., 17 Wis. 477; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Pillsbury, 29 Kan. 652. Compare Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Willie, 53 Tex. 318; 37 Am. Rep. 756.

Therefore, where a statute prescribing the mode of service upon foreign corporations, only authorized service upon some one authorized by power of attorney to receive it, proof of service upon the "agent" of a foreign corporation was insufficient. American Express Co. v. Conant, 45 Mich. 642; Gallagher v. American Express Co., 56 Mich. 13.

But this all depends upon the particular statute. Thus, where a statute provided that in actions for a failure to ring a bell before reaching a crossing, service might be made on a director of the railroad company,—the direction of the statute was held to be permissive, and not mandatory or exclusive; so that service might be made on a station agent of the company. State v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 51 Mo. 532; Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Willie, 53 Tex. 318; 37 Am. Rep. 756; Quade v. New York, etc., R. Co., 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. 479.

A statute providing for service of process upon corporations, supersedes the common-law method of compelling corporations to appear in court; and the method of bringing into court any corporation charged with a criminal offense, is by service of a copy of summons upon one of its officers or agents. State v. Western N. Car. R. Co., 89 N. Car. 584; 22 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 58; Boston, etc., R. Co. v. State, 32 N. H. 215. Compare State v. Ohio, etc., R. Co., 23 Ind. 362.

1. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Yocum, 34 Ark. 493; Ghiradelli v. Greene, 56 Cal. 629; Cicero Tp. v. Shirk, 122 Ind. 572; Nye v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 60 Vt. 585. The case of Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Cottrell, 83 Va. 511; 31 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 235, affords an instance of this, where the court had under observation a statute which it styled "cumbrous in style and somewhat involved." The service was held valid, since it virtually gave the corporation notice of the proceeding against it. But see, as to this case, 13 Va. Law Jour. 775-6.

In the case of Pope v. Terre Haute Mfg. Co., 87 N. Y. 137, it was observed that "the object of all service of process for the commencement of a suit or other legal proceeding is to give notice to the party proceeded against; and any service which reasonably accomplishes that end, answers the requirements of natural justice and fundamental law." See also Barrett v. American Tel., etc., Co., 31 N. Y. St. Rep. 465; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. McDougall, 108 Ind. 179; State v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 51 Mo. 532; Peoria Ins. Co. v. Warner, 28 Ill. 429 (statutes to receive a liberal construction).

And in one State it is specifically provided that no summons or service thereof shall be set aside when sufficient to inform the party of the action, the name of the plaintiff, the court, and the time when he must appear. Indiana Rev. Stat. (1881), § 317; Cicero Tp. v. Shirk, 122 Ind. 572. Where proper service is made upon an agent, a failure to notify the president by mail as the statute requires is a mere irregularity which does not invalidate the service. Emerson v. McCormick Harvesting Machine Co., 51 Mich. 5; Central R. Co. v. Smith, 69 Ga. 268.

Rule of Construction.—Such statutes being of a remedial nature are therefore to receive a liberal construction. Peoria Ins. Co. v. Warner, 20 Ill. 429; 1 Minor's Insts. (3d ed.), 40; Pope v. Terre Haute Car Mfg. Co., 87 N. Y. 137; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. McDougall, 108 Ind. 179.

In an action by certain officers of a corporation against the corporation itself, service is not valid if made upon one of the officers who is himself a plaintiff.¹

a. DOMESTIC CORPORATIONS.—Personal service is required by the various statutes to be made upon some officer of the corporation, or upon some one of its agents as designated by the statute.² Where the term "general agent" is used, it is intended to mean only those agents who have the general control of any

1. Service Upon a Corporation Officer Who Is Plaintiff in the Suit.—In the case of St. Louis, etc., Min. Co. v. Edwards, 103 Ill. 472, the directors and certain stockholders of the corporation brought suit against the corporation and the remaining stockholders for its dissolution. The service was made upon the corporation by serving only the plaintiff director with process. It was held that this was a void service, of which advantage might be taken in the supreme court after the case came up on writ of error, as well as in the trial court. The same principle is upheld in St. Louis, etc., Min. Co. v. Sandoval, etc., Min. Co., 111 Ill. 37; Lee v. Fox, 89 Ill. 226; Rhem v. German Ins., etc., Inst., 125 Ind. 135; Craig v. Gisborne, 13 Gray (Mass.) 270; Buck v. Ashuelot Mfg. Co., 4 Allen (Mass.) 357. In this last case it was observed: "A service thus made by giving a copy of the writ to the plaintiff was to no essential purpose a service on the corporation as defendants. The action might as well have proceeded without any service of the writ as one of that character. The plaintiff had notice of the action because he instituted it. The notice to be effective must be notice to an adverse party. If there was no other agent or officer of the corporation except the plaintiff, it would seem to be the proper course to serve the process on some member of the corporation, and that member some other person than the plaintiff."

2. Service Upon a Mere Member.—State v. Bennett, 47 N. J. L. 275. Unless there is a specific statutory provision to that effect, service of process upon one who is only a member of the corporation and not an officer or agent, cannot be valid even though no officers have been elected for many years. Bache v. Nashville Horticultural Soc., 10 Lea (Tenn.) 436; 4 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 128; Rand v. Proprietor, etc., 3 Day (Conn.) 441; Fort Scott v. Schulenberg, 22 Kan. 648. Compare, however, King v. Mobile Harbor Board, 57 Ala. 135, where service made upon all the members was held valid.

Service Must be Upon a De Facto Officer.—Where there are adverse claimants to certain offices, service must be made upon the officer de facto. Berrian v. Methodist Soc., 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 424; 6 Duer (N. Y.) 682.

Service may be made upon the acting president in the absence of the president. Chamberlain v. Mammoth Min. Co., 20 Mo. 96.

The president of a corporation removed from the county where the place of business of the corporation was located, and at a meeting of the board, another person was elected president pro tem., for that meeting. The old president, however, never resigned, nor was he removed; although he took no part in the management of the affairs of the corporation. Held, that service upon the absent president was sufficient to give the court jurisdiction over the corporation. Eel River Nav. Co. v. Struver, 41 Cal. 616.

Service Upon One Not an Officer of the Corporation.—Where, as in case of a Mississippi statute, it is provided that service must be made upon one of certain designated officers, or as the court may direct, service upon one who is a mere agent is not sufficient to bring the corporation within the jurisdiction of the court. Southern Express Co. v. Craft, 43 Miss. 508. So under the New York statute, service on a mere employé is insufficient. Ruland v. Canfield Pub. Co., 10 N. Y. Supp. 913.

In Waco Lodge v. Wheeler, 59 Tex. 554, service upon a trustee who was not an officer of the corporation, was held insufficient.

Service Upon Vice-President.—Colorado Code provides that service shall be made by delivering a copy of the writ to the president or other head of the corporation, or to the secretary, cashier, treasurer, or general agent thereof. It has been held, that service upon a vice-president of a corporation is sufficient, even though the return does not show that the president could not be found in the county. Comet Consolidated Min. Co. v. Frost, 15 Colo. 310.

See, also, as to service on vice-president, Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Cottrell, 83 Va. 512; 31 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 235.

Secretary.—Service upon a secretary as a managing agent, or one whose knowledge would be that of the corporation is valid, in the absence of any statutory requirement otherwise. Heltzell v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 77 Mo. 315; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 619.

Directors.—Service of notice on a general director of a corporation has been held a valid service, even though the director never notified the corporation or its board of officers. Boyd v. Chesapeake, etc., Canal Co., 17 Md. 195; 79 Am. Dec. 646.

Other cases in which service upon a director has been held to be service upon the corporation, are: Curtis v. Avon, etc., R. Co., 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 148; Com. v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 2 Pearson (Pa.) 408; Com. v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 7 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 707; Lewis v. Glenn, 84 Va. 947 (service made on cashier also. In this case the officers recognized the service, but disclaimed any right to answer officially); Railway Co. v. McCoy, 42 Ohio St. 251 (service of notice of lien of material men); Childs v. Harris Mfg. Co., 104 N. Y. 477; Grubb v. Lancaster Mfg. Co., 10 Phila. (Pa.) 316; Washington, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 445; Carnaghan v. Exporters', etc., Oil Co., 57 Hun (N. Y.) 588 (service on director held valid although the corporation was dissolved when service was made).

A director is not a "head or managing agent," however. Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Burns, 43 Ala. 169.

Upon Treasurer.—Service may be made upon the treasurer where it appears that the president or chief officer is absent from the county. McMurtry v. Tuttle, 13 Neb. 233. But service on an assistant treasurer is held to be invalid, although the treasurer is a non-resident. Winslow v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co., 51 Hun (N. Y.) 298.

Service Upon Stockholder.—The Colorado Code, § 40, provides for service of process on a foreign corporation by delivery of the writ to a stockholder, when there is no agent or officer of the corporation within the State. Under this, it was held that one who gratuitously transfers his stock in the corporation to trustees whose names he does not know, for some unknown and undefined purpose; and at the same time contributes $50 to cover the expense of the transfer, is a stockholder within the meaning of the code. Colorado Iron Works v. Sierra Grande Min. Co., 15 Colo. 499.

Conductor.—A conductor has been held to be an agent upon whom valid service may be made. New Albany, etc., R. Co. v. Grooms, 9 Ind. 243.

Civil Engineer.—In a proceeding to condemn land for a right of way, a civil engineer in charge of the surveys and location of the road in the county where the appeal is taken, is a proper agent upon whom a notice of appeal may be served. Jamison v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 69 Iowa 670; 27 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 413.

Highest Officer Found in County.—Tennessee Code provided that process might be served "on the president or other head of the corporation, or, in his absence, on the cashier," etc.; or, if none of these officers, reside in the State, then on the chief agent in the county where suit is brought. A return of service on "the superintendent, the highest officer to be found in the county," shows a sufficient service. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Daughtry, 88 Tenn. 721, affirmed in 138 U. S. 298.

Under § 73 of Kentucky Code, process in an action against a common carrier, whether a corporation or not, may be served in the county where the action is brought, in case the defendant's highest officer or agent resides therein. Adams Express Co. v. Crenshaw, 78 Ky. 136.

Where Railroad Is Operated by Receiver.—In the case of Heath v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 83 Mo. 617, it was held, that service on the agent of a receiver operating a railroad gave no jurisdiction over the company. A contrary rule is laid down, however, in Gauebin v. Phelan, 5 Colo. 83; Eddy v. Lafayette, 49 Fed. Rep. 807 (service on station agent).

And where a State had seized a railroad for nonpayment of its bonds; and the receiver appointed by the court retained the employes in business, it was held, that such employes were not the agents of the railroad company for the purpose of service. Cherry v.

North, etc., R. Co., 59 Ga. 446. See also Georgia, etc., R. Co. v. Bigelow, 68 Ga. 219.

Resignation of Officer to Prevent Service.—An officer of a corporation is not bound to retain his office for the purpose of enabling process to be served upon him; and a resignation to prevent service cannot be held invalid. Ervin v. Oregon Steam Nav. Co., 22 Hun (N. Y.) 598; Amy v. Watertown, 130 U. S. 320.

Nor will service upon him after he has filed his resignation, be of any effect. Amy v. Watertown, 130 U. S. 320; Sturgis v. Crescent Jute Mfg. Co., 57 Hun (N. Y.) 587.

In New Jersey.—When suit is brought against a corporation, created for and engaged in trade or business, service of process on any officer or agent of such corporation, whose duty it is, either in his official capacity or by virtue of his employment, to communicate the fact of such service to the governing body of the corporation, is good under the provisions of the Practice Act of New Jersey. Dock v. Elizabethtown Steam Mfg. Co., 34 N. J. L. 312. See State v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 41 N. J. L. 250; 42 N. J. L. 490.

On Lessee of Railroad Company.—Under Georgia Code, § 3407, which provides that the lessee of a railroad shall be liable to suit of any kind in the same court or jurisdiction as the lessor before the lease, service of summons in an action against a lessee railroad company, by leaving a copy at the office of the superintendent in the county in which the declaration alleges the principal offices of the lessor and lessee were and are situate, is good. Hills v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 37 Fed. Rep. 660.

But leaving a copy with a depot agent is not sufficient service of a process issued against an individual lessee. Jones v. Georgia Southern R., Co., 66 Ga. 558; Wright v. Gossett, 15 Ind. 119 (service on conductor insufficient). See also Van Dresser v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 48 Fed. Rep. 202 (lessee is agent of lessor to receive service where lease is unauthorized).

Georgia Code, § 3369, requires that in suits against railway companies which have leased their lines, service shall be sent "to the president of the leasing company." The "leasing company" is the lessor, and not the lessee. Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Harrison, 76 Ga. 757.

One Person Agent for Two Companies.

—In a suit against two railroad companies, having the same local agent upon whom service is made, a separate certified copy could be left with such agent for such defendant. Central, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, 68 Tex. 49.

Issuance of process against a corporation does not begin a suit against another, although service is made upon a common agent of both. Pennsylvania Co. v. Sloan, 1 Ill. App. 364.

Other Cases.—Under some statutes, the character of the agent upon whom process may be served depends upon where the service is made, or the cause of action arose. Thus, under the Oregon statute, service on any other than the president, secretary, cashier, or managing agent, will be set aside unless it appears that the cause of action arose in the county or district. Lung Chung v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 19 Fed. Rep. 254; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 548.

The Tennessee Code, § 2832, provides that "if neither president, cashier, treasurer, nor secretary, reside within the State, service upon the chief agent of the corporation residing at the time in the county where the action is brought, shall be deemed sufficient." Where it appeared that the defendant railroad company had no office, nor any part of its line in the State, but had only an agent who was employed to induce travelers to take its route, and who had no authority to sell tickets or to otherwise represent the company, service upon him was held invalid under the statute. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Walker, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 475; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 553; Maxwell v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 286.

To make a writ of mandamus effective it must be served on the officers of the corporation who have the power, and whose duty it is to execute it; and against whom attachment to enforce its obedience may issue. Thus, a writ commanding a railroad company to build certain bridges is not properly served on the superintendent of the New Jersey division of the company's road. State v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 41 N. J. L. 250; 42 N. J. L. 490.

Where the clerk of the court issues a summons to another county in an action against a corporation, it must be presumed that the necessity exists, by reason of there being no one in the county where the action is brought on whom valid service can be made.

particular department of its business or employment.¹ And the term "special agent" is intended to include only those who

In the case of Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Hunt, 39 Mich. 469, the court by Cooley, J., in speaking of service upon an agent of the corporation, observed: "But what sort of an agent? Was he an agent to buy wood, or to employ a switchman, or to keep cattle off the track, or what was his agency? Every servant of the road is in some sense an agent, yet there must be something more definite than a mere designation of a man as agent, before a court can say that his relation to the corporation was such as to make him its representative for the purpose of receiving service of process for it. The terms general or special agent are very indefinite, but employed as they are here, they evidently intend agents who, either generally or in respect to some particular department of the corporate business, have a controlling authority either general or special. They do not mean every man who is intrusted with a commission or an employment." See also as to general agents, Lister v. Allen, 31 Md. 543; 100 Am. Dec. 78; London Sav. Fund Soc. v. Hagerstown Sav. Bank, 36 Pa. St. 498; 78 Am. Dec. 390; Lobdell v. Baker, 1 Met. (Mass.) 193; 35 Am. Dec. 358.

The Code of Civ. Proc. of Colorado (1883), § 40, provides for service upon domestic corporations by means of their general agent. The court in the case of Great West. Min. Co. v. Woodmas of Alston Min. Co., 12 Colo. 46; 13 Am. St. Rep. 204; 24 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 60, after a holding that this term "general agent" did not embrace one who was merely a foreman with authority to oversee laborers in a mine, went on to observe: "There is a wide distinction between a general and a special or particular agent; a distinction not unfounded or useless, and one which solves many cases. A special agency exists where there is a delegation of authority to do a single act; and a general agency exists where there is a delegation to do all acts connected with a particular trade, business or employment. Story on Agency, § 17. Numerous other authorities recognize this same distinction, so clearly laid down by Mr. Story. Beals v. Allen, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 363; 9 Am. Dec. 221; Martin v. Farnsworth, 49 N. Y. 555; Merserau v. Phoenix, etc., Ins. Co., 66 N. Y. 274; Atlantic, etc., R. Co. v. Reisner, 18 Kan. 458; Cruzan v. Smith, 41 Ind. 288."

Service upon a certain person as agent will be held valid where it appears that such person was furnished with stationery and books necessary in the business; that the manager of the company referred others desiring policies to such person, and informed plaintiff's attorneys before suit that such person was the company's agent; and where the affidavits against the agency consisted merely of a formal denial of it by the secretary, and statements of the manager and the alleged agent that he was not an agent, because no bond had been filed by him and approved by the company. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Williams, 79 Tex. 633.

Resident Clerk.—A corporation whose principal office was in the city of H., carried on its manufacturing business in W., where its accounts were kept and its employes paid. The secretary resided in W., but went every day to H., where he spent the entire day in the company's office, and where all his duties were performed. Held, that he was not to be regarded as residing in W. within the meaning of § 12 of the Connecticut statute and that service upon the clerk at W. who paid the employes was valid. Adams v. Wilmantic Linen Co., 46 Conn. 320.

General or Special Agent.—The Michigan statute provided for service of summons in garnishment, upon a "general or special agent" of the corporation. The court, in the case of Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Hunt, 39 Mich. 469, held that the agent meant by the term, was an agent having a general or special controlling authority, either generally or in respect to some particular department of the corporate business, and therefore not merely a person who was described as a "ticket agent of such road."

have authority to do a certain particular thing.¹ The term "managing agent" is of frequent use and is generally considered to embrace such persons as have a supervisory control

Ticket and Depot Agents.—It has been often held that service of summons upon a depot or station agent is sufficient to confer jurisdiction—in one case it being declared that, in the absence of proof to the contrary, a station agent of a railroad would be presumed to be employed in the management of the business of the road in the county within which the station is located. Smith v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 60 Iowa 512; 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 534; Schlenger v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 61 Iowa 235; 19 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 625; Central R. Co. v. Smith, 69 Ga. 268 (no letter to president necessary in such case); Ex parte St. Louis etc., R. Co., 40 Ark. 141; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 547; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Collier, 62 Tex. 318; 18 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 218; Hudson v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 53 Mo. 525; East Tenn., etc., R. Co. v. Bayliss, 74 Ala. 150; 19 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 150 (without affidavit); Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Crowe, 9 Kan. 496; Ruthe v. Green Bay, etc., R. Co., 37 Wis. 344. Compare Miller v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 431; Jones v. Georgia Southern R. Co., 66 Ga. 558.

But in the case of Doty v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 427, a person who merely sold tickets for a railroad company whose whole road and traffic was without the State, was held not a managing agent upon whom service of process may be made. See also Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Hunt, 39 Mich. 469.

In the case of Mackereth v. Glasgow, etc., R. Co., L. R., 8 Exch. 149, it was held that under a statute providing that process against a corporation shall be served upon the head officer, clerk, secretary or treasurer, service upon a ticket agent of a Scotch railroad at Carlisle was insufficient to charge the corporation, although it ran its cars into the railway station at that place.

Commercial Agent.—The service of process on a commercial agent of a railroad company is not a good service, under a statute which provides that it may be served upon "any station agent or ticket agent." Detroit v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 63 Mich. 712.

Book-keepers.—In the case of Chambers v. King, etc., Bridge Mfg. Co., 16 Kan. 276, it was held that a service of summons upon a person who kept books for a corporation, but who was not secretary or clerk of the corporation, or any other officer or agent upon whom legal service might be made, was not a valid service. The court, by Valentine, J., observed: "It is true, a book-keeper is, in one sense, a clerk; any person who performs clerical duty is in one sense a clerk. But the service of summons on a corporation cannot be made on every person who may, in some remote sense, be styled a clerk of the corporation. . . . It must be made on the clerk—the principal clerk of the corporation, if made on a clerk at all. It must be made upon the person who holds the office of clerk or secretary, as the case may be." See, also, Dock v. Elizabethtown Steam Mfg. Co., 34 N. J. L. 312; Hill v. St. Louis Ore, etc., Co., 90 Mo. 103.

Local Freight Agent.—In an action against a railroad company it was held, in the case of Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Owen, 43 Ind. 405, that where the principal office of the company was not within the State, service might be made upon a local freight agent, he being a general agent of the company within the meaning of the Indiana statute.

Local Superintendent of Affairs.—Service on a section foreman of a railroad company is valid, under Kansas statute providing for service of process against a railroad company, on the local superintendent of affairs. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. DeFord, 38 Kan. 299.

Local Express Agent.—A local express agent, who supervises all the company's business in his town, is a general agent on whom process may be served. Adams Express Co. v. St. John, 17 Ohio St. 641. See Southern Express Co. v. Skipper, 85 Ga. 565; as to service on express company under Georgia statute.

over some general department of the business of the corporation, as distinguished from a mere superintendent of some particular division, and whose knowledge would be that of the corporation.¹

In all cases the service must be upon the identical agent provided for by the statute, and a service upon an agent or employé of a corporation who is not an agent upon whom service is authorized to be made, is no more binding upon the corporation than if no process at all had issued against it.²

The term "managing agent," means one invested with general powers involving the exercise of discretion, as distinguished from one who acts under the control of a superior authority both as to the extent of his work and the manner of executing it. Reddington v. Mariposa Land, etc., Co., 19 Hun (N. Y.) 405.

In the case of Emerson v. Auburn, etc., R. Co., 13 Hun (N. Y.) 150, one T. was employed by the president of the defendant railroad company to superintend the running of horse-cars on a portion of the defendant's road not yet completed. T. had no authority to make contracts for the defendant, except to purchase horses and feed, nor had he any control over or knowledge of the defendant or its books; and his employment was to continue during the president's pleasure. It was held, that he was not a managing agent upon whom process might be served.

In a suit in the U. S. circuit court against a town, service was made upon the town clerk. It was held that this was not a valid service, since the town clerk could not be said to be the managing agent of the town. Young v. Dexter, 18 Fed. Rep. 201. See also Stout v. Sioux City, etc., R. Co., 8 Fed. Rep. 794; 2 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 645.

The recording agent of an insurance company, whose business is merely to write policies and look after the interests of the company in connection with property insured by him, is not an agent employed in the general management of the business, within the meaning of Iowa Code 1873, § 2612, relating to service of process on corporations. State Ins. Co. v. Waterhouse, 78 Iowa 674.

Business Manager.—The Nevada statute provided for service of process upon the managing agent, and where the return showed service upon the "business manager," it was held insufficient. "Courts," it was said, "must know, and officers are presumed to know, what the legislature meant by the term 'managing agent,' but courts cannot know what an officer means by designation unknown to the law." *Scorpion Silver Min. It is almost invariably provided that service may be made upon the chief officer, with the alternative of the subordinate officers, generally according to the rank they occupy; and where they are named successively—as, for example, “president, secretary, cashier or treasurer,” etc.—it seems that service may be made upon any one of them without showing the absence of those preceding.¹ But where it is provided that service may be made upon a certain officer, “or in his absence, upon an agent,” etc., the fact that the officer named could not be found must affirmatively appear by the officer’s return before service upon the agent can be justified.²

In actions or proceedings against a defunct corporation, service made upon the members of its last acting board of

The locality of suits against corporations is usually provided by statute; and in connection with this it is often required that service of process shall be made upon some officer or agent within the county where the suit is brought, or where the principal office of the corporation is located, etc.¹

The same general rules apply to service upon municipal corporations, and under this head may properly be included service of process against cities, towns, villages and counties. Service should be made upon the chief executive officer of the municipality, and in his absence upon the next in order of official rank, unless otherwise especially provided.²

directors is sufficient to give jurisdiction under the Ohio statute. Warner v. Callender, 20 Ohio St. 190.

1. Locality of Service.—The Virginia statute concerning service of process on corporations is particularly explicit in this regard. See 13 Va. L. J. 741-776 (Virginia statute discussed in article by W. M. Lile); 1 Minor's Insts. (3d ed.) 564, et seq.; Virginia Code (1887), § 3225, et seq.

By the Michigan statute a corporation officer may be served in any county of the State. See Potter v. John Hutchinson Mfg. Co. (Mich. 1890), 44 N. W. Rep. 595. But in West Virginia it is held that the president can only be served in the county in which he resides, and return must show service in such county. Taylor v. Ohio River R. Co., 35 W. Va. 328.

Other instances of such requirements are seen in Dewey v. Central Car, etc., Co., 42 Mich. 399; People v. Judge, 23 Mich. 493; Haywood v. Johnson, 41 Mich. 601; *Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Where Corporation Is "Found."—Where foreign corporations engage in business in a State whose law provides that they may be summoned by process served upon an agent in the charge of its business, they are "found" in the district in which such agent is doing business within the meaning of act of Congress relative to the jurisdiction of the federal courts. Block v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 21 Fed. Rep. 529; McCoy v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 13 Fed. Rep. 3; Brownell v. Troy, etc., R. Co., 3 Fed. Rep. 761.

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Conant, 11 Colo. 111, it was held that within the meaning of the Colorado act, a domestic corporation is "found" only in the county where the principal office of the corporation is kept, or its principal business carried on. See also Little Bobtail Gold Min. Co. v. Lightbourne, 10 Colo. 429.

County Equivalent to Judicial District.

—Virginia Code, 1887, § 3225, provides that "service of process against a railroad corporation may be made on any agent of the corporation when certain officers cannot be found in the county where the action is brought." The sheriff's return showed that the writ was served on the defendant's station agent and did not state that none of the said officers could be found in the judicial district. It was held that such service was insufficient, since, in the federal courts, the statutory limitations as to place apply to the district instead of the county. Miller v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 431; Lung Chung v. North Pac. R. Co., 19 Fed. Rep. 254; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 548.

2. Upon a City.—See the rule of the text applied in Amy v. Watertown, 130 U. S. 301; Dugan v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 70 Md. 1 (service accepted by city solicitor); Sacramento v. Fowle, 21 Wall (U. S.) 119 (service properly made upon president of board of trustees of city); Merriden v. Trussell, 52 Miss. 711; Gabler v. Elizabeth, 41 N. J. L. 316; *Worts v. The constitution of Texas (art. 16, § 17) provides that "all officers within this State shall continue to perform the duties of their offices until their successors are qualified." Under this, service of process is properly made upon officers of a city whose terms have expired, and who have attempted to resign, or ceased to act, but whose successors have not been elected; especially if, by the failure to elect successors, it was designed to defeat the collection of debts owing by the city. Jones v. Jefferson, 66 Tex. 576. See also Cloud v. Pierce City, 86 Mo. 357 (similar case).

In Watertown v. Robinson, 69 Wis. 230, it is held that the mayor is the only officer upon whom service of process against the city can be made; and a service upon the chairman of the board of street commissioners and upon the city clerk confers no jurisdiction of the city which will support a judgment against it by default, even though there be at the time no mayor and no presiding officer of the common council. Compare Worts v. Watertown, 16 Fed. Rep. 534.

On a Town or Village.—A Wisconsin statute requires service upon a town to be made by delivering a copy of the summons "to the chairman of the town and to the town clerk." Under this, a service upon one alone is wholly ineffective for any purpose. Mariner v. Waterloo, 75 Wis. 428. And a return that copies were delivered to "the chairman of said town, and Edward Crump, the clerk of said town, elected at the last annual town-meeting, who claims he was not qualified, and upon Ida Lusk, who has charge of the records of said town and is the acting town clerk of the town and upon W. D. Stiles, clerk of said town; who was elected, and who qualified as such clerk, and who is the last clerk of said town who was elected who qualified," is insufficient to give the court jurisdiction. Mariner v. Waterloo, 75 Wis. 438.

A township supervisor has no representative authority outside the county in which the township is situated, and a summons served upon him as agent for the township, under § 737, How. St. Michigan, must be served upon him within such county. Pack v. Greenbush Township, 62 Mich. 122. See also generally Cicero Tp. v. Shirk, 122 Ind. 572.

The statutory method, if any exists, must be pursued. Thus, where it was provided that service of process against a town should be made upon two certain officers, service upon one will confer no jurisdiction. Mariner v. Waterloo, 75 Wis. 438.

On County.—As Missouri Rev. Stat. 1879, § 3489, authorizes the service of the summons, in an action against the county, on the clerk of the county court, he is thereby made the agent of the county, and any neglect of his to communicate the fact of such service to the county court will not affect the validity of the service, or the judgment obtained therein by default. Knox Co. v. Harshman, 133 U. S. 152.

Process against a county should be issued against the clerk of the board of county commissioners and served upon him. Leavenworth Co. v. Sellew, 99 U. S. 624. And a county clerk may accept service of a notice of appeal in a suit against the county. Read v. Benton Co., 10 Oregon 154.

A mandamus to the county commissioners is properly served on their chairman while the board is in session. State v. Wellman, 83 Me. 282.

On School District.—A writ may be properly served upon a school district by attaching certain personal property of the district and leaving a true and attested copy of the writ with the officer's return thereon at the house of the clerk of the district and in the hands of his wife. Dow v. School Dist. No. 12, 46 Vt. 108; and see Downs v. Board of Directors (Wash. 1892), 30 Pac. Rep. 147.

On Unincorporated Association.—New York Code, § 1919, requires that in suits against an unincorporated association service shall be made on the president or treasurer of such association. Under this, service may properly be made on the chairman or presiding officer, it appearing that the association has no officer called the president or treasurer. Hatheway v. American Min. Stock Exchange, 31 Hun (N. Y.) 575.

is no essential difference between foreign and domestic corporations as to service.¹ In many States, however, there are explicit statutory regulations as to how and upon whom service shall be made against a foreign corporation.² These statutes generally require, as a condition precedent to the right to transact business within the State, that the corporation shall appoint a resident agent upon whom process against the corporation may be served. The legislative power to make and enforce such a requirement is well settled.³ Where it is required that a particular State officer, as, for example, the auditor or insurance commissioner, shall be designated as such agent, his authority to receive and accept service is implied from the fact that the corporation carries on business within the State; and service may be made upon him, although the corporation has failed to act in the premises.⁴ The higher resident officials of foreign corporations are frequently designated by the statute as having authority to receive

1. In Johnson v. Hanover F. Ins. Co., 15 Fed. Rep. 97, it was held that the statute of Illinois relative to service of process against domestic corporations applied equally to process against foreign corporations, and this seems to be the accepted view. Haygin v. Comptoir D'Escompte, 33 Q. B. Div. 519; except where the statute provides a specific manner of service for foreign corporations. Quade v. New York, etc., R. Co., 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. 479. See also Johnson v. Hanover F. Ins. Co., 15 Fed. Rep. 97; State v. U. S. Mut. Accident Assoc., 67 Wis. 624.

In Missouri, if a corporation of another State has a chief officer or place of business in the State, as designated by the statute, such foreign corporation is regarded as being a domestic one so far as service of process is concerned, and is amenable to the jurisdiction of the Missouri courts by the common process of summons. But if it has no such place of business the proceeding against it must be in rem by attachment. Middowgle v. St. Joseph, etc., R. Co., 51 Mo. 520. See also Gross v. Nichols, 72 Iowa 239.

2. Statutory Method Exclusive.—Desper v. Continental Water Meter Co., 137 Mass. 252 (service on treasurer held insufficient, he not being one of the officers designated by the statute); Lewis v. Northern R. Co., 139 Mass. 294 (similar case); Rhem v. German Ins., etc., Inst., 125 Ind. 135; Gates v. Tusten, 89 Mo. 13.

3. Appointment of Agent to Accept Service.—See FOREIGN CORPORATIONS, vol. 8, p. 383; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 168; U. S. v. American Bell Teleph. Co., 29 Fed. Rep. 17; Gibson v. Manufacturers' F. & M. Ins. Co., 144 Mass. 81; Van Dresser v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 48 Fed. Rep. 202; Ehrman v. Teutonia Ins. Co., 1 McCrary (U. S.) 123. See Osborne v. Shawmut Ins. Co., 51 Vt. 278, for peculiar application of such a law.

4. Thus in Missouri, a foreign corporation is prohibited from carrying on business in the State until it has filed with the insurance commissioner a certificate stipulating that service may be made upon him. If a corporation does business in the State it will be presumed that it impliedly accepts the provisions of the statute, and service upon the commissioner is valid though he refuses to receive the summons, no certificate having been filed by the corporation. Knapp v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co., 30 Fed. Rep. 607. The same view is sustained in other cases. Ehrman v. Teutonia Ins. Co., 1 McCrary (U. S.) 123; Hagerman v. Empire State Co., 97 Pa. St. 534; Funk v. Anglo American Ins. Co., 27 Fed. Rep. 336 (in case of such failure service may be upon any agent transacting the company's business); U. S. v. American Bell Teleph. Co., 29 Fed. Rep. 17; Van Dresser v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 48 Fed. Rep. 202; State v. U. S. Mut. Accident Assoc., 67 Wis. 624; Gibbs v. Queen Ins. Co., 63 N. Y. 114; 20 Am. Rep. 513.

In Farmer v. National L. Ins. Assoc., 50 Fed. Rep. 829, it is said that the service.¹ As in the case of domestic corporations it is often provided that service may be made upon a "managing agent,"² and this does not necessarily mean an agent having complete charge of the whole business of the corporation.³ Generally service on appointment of the State superintendent of insurance to receive service does not authorize him to accept service by mail.

Where the statute plainly provides that the corporation may appoint "some person" who is authorized to receive service, the term "agent or agents," as used in other portions of the statute, being purposely omitted, service can be made only on such agent as is appointed and a return of service upon "one of the agents of such company" summoned as garnishee, does not show a valid service. Gates v. Tusten, 89 Mo. 13; Stone v. Travelers Ins. Co., 78 Mo. 655. See Goodwin v. Colorado Mortgage, etc., Co., 110 U. S. 1 (agent's name need not be given).

Service of summons issued from the city court of New York may be served on the superintendent of insurance in his office at Albany. People v. Justices, 11 N. Y. Supp. 773.

As to fraudulent use of statute authorizing appointment of agent for service of process, see Richardson v. Western Home Ins. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 8 N. Y. Supp. 873.

1. Upon Officers.—Benwood Iron Works v. Hutchinson, 101 Pa. St. 359 (valid service made on secretary); Tennessee Code, § 2832. Compare Desper v. Continental Water Meter Co., 137 Mass. 252 (service on treasurer held invalid).

A person in the State who receives the money of a foreign corporation, is a "cashier" within the meaning of § 432 of New York Code of Civ. Proc., upon whom process may be served, there being no other officer of the corporation in the State. McCulloh v. Paillard, etc., Watch Co. (Supreme Ct.), 14 N. Y. Supp. 491.

2. Reddington v. Mariposa Land, etc., Co., 19 Hun (N. Y.) 405.

On Managing Agent.—A "managing agent," within the meaning of the New York code, is a person designated as general agent—e. g., a general passenger agent; he is not necessarily one who controls the road. Tuchband v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 115 N. Y. 437; 40 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 612. See also Hat-Sweat Mfg. Co. v. Davis Sewing Mach. Co., 31 Fed. Rep. 294 ("managing agent" defined).

On the time-tables of a defendant, a railroad company, and on the windows of its office on Broadway were the words: "O., General Agent Passenger Department, 261 Broadway." O. made affidavit that he was not its managing agent, but only in charge of the passenger department, and that defendant had another agent in the State in charge of the freight department. It was held, however, that he was a managing agent within the meaning of the code, § 432, providing for the service of process on foreign corporations. Tuchband v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 115 N. Y. 437; 40 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 612, note; Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Williams, 79 Tex. 633.

That a foreign corporation had an agent in Ohio, whose duty was merely to receive what was sent to him and to remit back proceeds, did not constitute him a managing agent, on whom process against the corporation might be served. Gibbin v. Kanawha, etc., Coal Co., 2 Cin. Sup. Ct. Rep. (Ohio) 75. See also FOREIGN CORPORATIONS, vol. 8, pp. 386 et seq.

3. In the case of Palmer v. Pennsylvania Co., 35 Hun (N. Y.) 370 (affirmed 99 N. Y. 679), the court said: "There is no doubt that the defendants hold P. out to the world as their agent in the city of New York. It is plain that he has a large authority, and within a wide field his acts are binding on defendant. The code does not specify the extent of the agency required to bind defendants by service of process, except that the person upon whom the service is made must be a managing agent. Were the rule to be established, as contended by appellants, that the agent must have charge of the whole business of the corporation, the statute would be a dead letter, for such an agency seldom, if ever, exists. Every object of the service is obtained when the agent served is of sufficient character and rank to make it reasonably certain that the defendant would be apprised of the service made. The statute is satisfied if he be a managing an agent may be sufficient if the person served was the agent conducting the transaction out of which the suit arose.¹ Service on an agent is valid only when made during the term of the agency,² but a corporation cannot by revoking the authority of an agent agent to any extent." See also Berlin Iron Bridge Co. v. Norton (N. J. 1889), 17 Atl. Rep. 1079.

1. Estes v. Belford, 22 Fed. Rep. 275.

On Attorney.—Where the statute authorizes service on a certain attorney appointed to accept service, a return of service on the "lawful attorney" of the corporation is sufficient. Webster Wagon Co. v. Peterson, 27 W. Va. 314.

A foreign corporation had appointed a commissioner of corporations to be its attorney on whom process might be served pursuant to Massachusetts statutes, and its attorney in the suit accepted service "to the same extent that the plaintiff would have obtained service by leaving a copy of the writ with the commissioner of corporations." It was held that such service was valid and gave jurisdiction to render a personal judgment against defendant. Wilson v. Martin-Wilson, etc., Fire Alarm Co., 149 Mass. 24; Webster Wagon Co. v. Peterson, 27 W. Va. 314.

But an attorney who merely has claims to collect for a foreign corporation is not an agent on whom process against the corporation may be served. Moore v. Freeman's Bank, 92 N. Car. 590.

On Agents Generally—Who Is Proper Agent.—Service on any agent appointed by the corporation to receive service is valid. Swallow v. Duncan, 18 Mo. App. 622.

But authority given by a corporation to an agent to accept service "in actions on any liability or indebtedness incurred or contracted" by the corporation, does not authorize his acceptance of service in garnishment proceedings. Moore v. Speed, 55 Mich. 84.

A person whose sole duty it is to solicit travel for the railroad which he represents is not an agent upon whom process against the company may be served, even though he was employed by it to try to compromise the claim involved in the suit. Maxwell v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 286; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Walker, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 475; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 553.

Under the New Jersey Corporation Act, § 88, providing for the service of process upon agents of corporations, it is held, that the person to whom is committed the management and control of the business of a foreign corporation becomes an agent of the corporation for the purpose of receiving such service of process. Berlin Iron Bridge Co. v. Norton (N. J. 1889), 17 Atl. Rep. 1079.

But in an action against a New York corporation, service in New Jersey upon a person whose only connection with the corporation consisted in receiving advertisements at the published rates, forwarding the same to the home office, receiving the bills for the same, and collecting them upon commission, was not held service upon an agent of the company. Mulhearn v. Press Pub. Co., 53 N. J. L. 150, 153.

Service on a general agent was held sufficient in Société's Foncière v. Milliken, 135 U. S. 304; and in Saunders v. Sioux City Nursery, etc., Co. (Utah, 1890), 24 Pac. Rep. 532, it is said that if the statutory general agent cannot be found, service may be made on any agent having property in charge.

A finding by the trial court that the agent served was competent will not be reversed on appeal where the evidence is conflicting. Vorheis v. People's Mut. Ben. Soc., 86 Mich. 31; Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Williams, 79 Tex. 633; Sugg v. Thornton, 73 Tex. 666.

See generally as to proper agent, Norton v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. (Cal. 1892), 30 Pac. Rep. 585; Snelling v. Joffrion, 42 La. Ann. 886; Shafer Iron Co. v. Stone, 88 Mich. 464; Burgess v. Aultman, 80 Wis. 292; Gottschalk v. Distilling, etc., Feeding Co., 50 Fed. Rep. 681.

2. Service on Agent After Expiration of Agency.—If the agency for carrying on the business out of which the contract sued on arose, has been discontinued and the agent's authority revoked, service cannot be made on an agent employed in the same place to transact other business. Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co. (Iowa, 1891), 50 N. W. Rep. 565.

protect itself from service in a suit growing out of a transaction conducted by such agent.¹

Frequently there are special statutory provisions relating to service on foreign insurance companies.² Generally service may be made on a local agent of a foreign insurance company whose business it is to issue policies, collect premiums, pay losses, etc.,³ but it has been held that a mere recording agent was not competent to receive service.⁴ So generally service may be made on any general

1. Revocation of Agent's Authority in Order to Prevent Service.—Thus service may be made upon the agent of insurance company who issued the policy, although he is no longer agent. Gillespie v. Commercial Mut. Ins. Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 201; 71 Am. Dec. 743.

A Massachusetts statute required foreign insurance companies to appoint an attorney as its agent to receive service. A firm consisting of A., an attorney, and B., who was not an attorney, was appointed. The firm was afterwards dissolved and B. continued to act. Just before service in a certain suit, the company withdrew B.'s authority. It was held that service on B. was nevertheless valid. Gibson v. Manufacturers' F. & M. Ins. Co., 144 Mass. 81.

Death of Appointed Agent.—Virginia Acts of 1876-7, ch. 252, providing that if the agent in that State of a foreign insurance company should die and a new agent should not be appointed, process against the company might be served on the personal representative of the deceased agent, is prospective only, and cannot be held to apply to the representative of the agent of a company which had abandoned business in the State years before. Ellis v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 19 Blatchf. (U. S.) 383.

2. Service Upon Insurance Companies.—Rehm v. German Ins., etc., Inst., 125 Ind. 135. See Osborne v. Shawmut Ins. Co., 51 Vt. 278.

3. Insurance Agents.—Sadler v. Mobile L. Ins. Co., 60 Miss. 391 (agent to collect and remit premiums); Vorheis v. People's Mut. Ben. Soc., 86 Mich. 31 (agent to receive payment of assessments and give receipts therefor); Southern Ins. Co. v. Wolverton Hardware Co. (Tex. 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 615 (local agent); Southwestern Mut. Ben. Assoc. v. Swenson (Kan. 1892), 30 Pac. Rep. 405 (local or branch secretary appointed to receive assessments from members and to countersign and deliver receipts therefor and to forward money so received). Compare State Ins. Co. v. Waterhouse, 78 Iowa 674.

In Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Williams, 79 Tex. 633, it appeared that the agent served was furnished with stationery and books necessary for insurance business and that the manager of the company referred others desiring policies to him. The service was held valid.

Wisconsin Rev. St., § 1977, declares that all persons who aid in transacting any business for any insurance company are insurance agents upon whom service of process against the company may be made. The statute applies as well to unlicensed companies as to others, and its definition will include one who receives premiums for insurance, takes his commissions and advertises himself as the company's agent.

In State v. U. S. Mut. Accident Assoc., 67 Wis. 624, the court said: "By that definition, whoever solicits insurance on behalf of any insurance corporation, or transmits an application for insurance, or a policy of insurance to or from any such corporation, or who makes any contract of insurance, or collects or receives any premium for insurance, or in any manner aids or assists in doing either, or in transacting any business for any insurance company, or advertises to do any such thing, shall be held an agent of such corporation to all intents and purposes, and the word agent whenever used in ch. 89 of the Rev. Stat. shall be construed to include all such persons. The several things thus enumerated are connected by disjunctives and the doing of any one of them makes such party an agent."

4. Recording Agent—Iowa Statute.—State Ins. Co. v. Granger, 62 Iowa 272; State Ins. Co. v. Waterhouse, 78 Iowa 674. In this latter case the business of the recording agent was to write policies and to look after the company's interests in connection with property insured by him. The court agent of the company having the general charge of the company's business in the county.¹

When service of process is made within a State upon an agent of a foreign corporation, it is essential, in order to support the jurisdiction of the court to render a personal judgment, that it should appear somewhere in the record that the corporation was engaged in business in that State.² Service made upon an officer or agent of a foreign corporation, who is casually within the State and not there in an official or business capacity, is therefore void and cannot support a judgment.³ The same is true where an offiheld that he was not an agent "employed in the general management of the business" within § 2612 of Iowa Code (1873), relating to service of process against foreign corporations generally. This decision depends upon the peculiar Iowa statute and seems to be at variance with the holdings of other courts. As to the Iowa statute, see also Philp v. Covenant Mut. Ben. Assoc., 62 Iowa 633.

1. On General Agent.—Centennial Mut. L. Assoc. v. Walker, 50 Iowa 75 (valid service may be had on any agent, general or special, having charge of company's business in the county); Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Highsmith, 44 Iowa 330; Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Abens, 3 Ill. App. 488.

The Iowa statute requires that service shall be upon an "agent appointed" for the purpose or upon one "employed in the general management" of the company's business. A person employed by an insurance company to investigate losses, to look up testimony in lawsuits, and at times to look after local agents, but not to take risks or to issue policies, and who has no office within the State, is not such an agent, and valid service cannot be made upon him in a suit against the company. Philp v. Covenant Mut. Ben. Assoc., 62 Iowa 633.

The Iowa Code, § 2613, also provides that where a corporation has an agency in another county, "service may be made on any agent employed in such office or agency, in all actions growing out of or connected with such office or agency." Under this, service on one agent of process in an action growing out of the business of another and former agent who conducted a different office in the same town is not good. State Ins. Co. v. Granger, 62 Iowa 272.

If a corporation of Colorado has an office in the city of New York and nowhere else, and all persons competent to represent it are also in New York, service may be made upon its agents in the latter State. Hunter v. International R. Imp. Co., 26 Fed. Rep. 299. But where a foreign corporation is doing no business in the State beyond negotiating a mortgage on its property, and having the bonds secured thereby put on the list of the Stock Exchange, it is not engaged in business in the State, and no jurisdiction over it is acquired by service of summons on the president while temporarily in the State for this purpose. Crews v. Woodstock Iron Co., 44 Fed. Rep. 31; Bentlife v. London, etc., Finance Corp., 44 Fed. Rep. 667; Reifsnider v. American Imp. Pub. Co., 45 *Fed. cer has been inveigled into a jurisdiction for the purpose of securing service of process upon him.¹

The principles governing the effect of constructive service of process on non-residents² apply as well to corporations as to private persons; so that no personal judgment rendered against a corporation, based upon a service by publication, can be of any force or validity except as to the property of the corporation within the State, to reach and affect which was the object of the suit.³ A State may provide, however, that service of process on 350; 1 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 19. Compare Klopp v. Creston City, etc., Co. (Neb. 1892), 52 N. W. Rep. 819 (such service held valid). See also Snelling v. Joffrion, 42 La. Ann. 886 (resident agent).

Thus service cannot be made on the vice-president of a corporation while he is temporarily within the State as a witness. Mulhearn v. Press Pub. Co., 53 N. J. L. 153.

The president of a street railroad company in Galveston, while on a personal visit to Chicago, sent a telegram from the latter place in relation to a sale of the road. It was held not to be an act which would authorize service of process against the company upon him so as to enable the Illinois courts to render a personal judgment. Galveston City R. Co. v. Hook, 40 Ill. App. 547. See same principle held in St. Louis Wire-mill Co. v. Consolidated Barb-wire Co., 32 Fed. Rep. 802. Compare Shickle, etc., Iron Co. v. Wiley Construction Co., 61 Mich. 226, 1 Am. St. Rep. 571, holding that if service is made on an officer of the corporation it is not necessary that he should be in the State on official business or that he should be specially authorized to receive service.

A Pennsylvania air brake company sent a train of cars into Iowa for the purpose of exhibiting its brake. The chief officer of the company attended the train. It was held that service could not be made upon time of process in a suit against the company in the federal court for the Iowa district. Carpenter v. Westinghouse Air-brake Co., 32 Fed. Rep. 434.

Resident Agent.—Code of Civil Proc. South Carolina, § 155 (amended by 19 St. 385), provides that service may be made on a foreign corporation "only when it has property within this State, or the cause of action arose therein, or where such service shall be made in this State personally upon the president, . . . or any resident agent thereof." It was held that whether service upon one who was not an officer, but who was alleged to be a resident agent was sufficient or not, was a question of fact for the trial court. Hester v. Rasin Fertilizer Co., 33 S. Car. 609; 33 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 44.

S.) 407; Winsdor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 274; FOREIGN CORPORATIONS, vol. 8, pp. 384-396.

Service by Publication.—The laws of Kansas provide that service by publication may be made where defendant foreign corporation has property within the State. It was held that such service might be made where there is property in the hands of a receiver of the court where the action is pending, which was delivered to him by the sheriff, who seized it in an action of replevin by defendant against a third person, though the action is still pending before the same court. U. S. Electric Lighting Co. v. Martin, 43 Kan. 526.

Bonds of a foreign corporation having an agent in the State, and not the obligations which they evidence, are personal property within the provision of the New York Civ. Proc., § 438, par. 5, which provides that an order directing service of summons by publication may be had where the complaint dean authorized agent of a foreign corporation may support a personal judgment against it.¹

3. Upon a Partnership.—Outside of special statutory regulation, the rule in this connection seems to be that when the suit is against the firm in the firm name, service upon one of the members of a commercial partnership is a valid service upon all, provided such service is made during the continuance of the partnership;² and that valid constructive service may be made, as in case of corporations, by service upon any clerk or general agent, or by leaving a copy at the usual place of business.³ But if service purports to be made upon the individual members of a firm it must be carmands judgment affecting the title to specific personal property within the State. Where the bonds are without the State in the possession of defendants, an order of publication against them cannot be made. Von Hesse v. Mackaye, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 365.

In the case of McClaren v. Byrnes, 80 Mich. 275, it was held, that in proceedings to enforce a laborer's lien against the personal property of a foreign mining corporation on which personal service cannot be had, § 8404 must be followed, which provides that in such case plaintiff may obtain substituted service by publication, upon pursuing the method pointed out for an attachment proceeding. Michigan How. St., § 8145, applies only to cases where personal service can be obtained.

Service upon an alleged partner, the fact of partnership not being established, does not confer jurisdiction over his alleged partners. Nixon v. Downey, 42 Iowa 79.

Any method of service of process upon partnerships prescribed by statute does not exclude the method of service upon each individual partner, unless such statute specially declares it to be excluded. Herron v. Cole, 25 Neb. 692.

At Common Law.—The rule at common law was that all partners must be served before a judgment could be obtained against any of them. Hall v. Lanning, 91 U. S. 166; Edwards v. Carter, 1 Stra. 473; Tidd's Pr. 423; Rice v. Doniphan, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 123. See also Houston v. Ward, 8 Tex. 124; Johnson v. Vaughan, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 217; *Swift v. ried out just as in the case of private persons.¹ A judgment based upon a service only upon one partner as managing agent for the firm, like a similar service upon corporations, is valid only as it affects firm property.²

Where the plaintiff commences his suit against certain persons as a partnership, and afterwards amends the process and sues them as a corporation, a new service is necessary.³

4. Upon Non-residents.—Subject to the constitutional provision that no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, any State has the right and power to subject the property of non-residents within its territorial limits to the satisfaction of the claims of its citizens by any mode of procedure which it may deem proper and convenient.⁴ But the judgment or decree of the court of a State can have no force beyond its own limits, unless the defendant was actually served with process, or unless he actually appeared.⁵

Service of process upon non-residents, when they cannot be found within the jurisdiction of the court, is usually made by publication of the summons, the fact of non-residence having been previously established, either by clear and undisputed evidence, or by affidavit.¹ Such service, however, is unsatisfactory, since a judgment or decree based upon it can have no force except as regards property within the limits of the State within which it was rendered, and to reach and affect which was the object of the proceedings in which such judgment or decree was rendered.² If a defendant, although a non-resident, can be personally served with process within the territorial jurisdiction of the trial court, a judgment founded upon such service is available out of the State as well as within, and in proceedings in personam as well as those in rem.³ Personal service, however, cannot be

These authorities show that while "full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of every other State," still the jurisdiction of the court of another State may be inquired into, and if it appears that the parties were not properly summoned, or did not appear, the judgment or decree of such court will not be enforced. See ATTACHMENT, vol. 1, p. 934; JURISDICTION, vol. 12, p. 148; FOREIGN ATTACHMENT, vol. 8, p. 323.

In Lockett v. Rumbaugh, 45 Fed. Rep. 23, an action was commenced in a federal court against three partners, one of whom was not served and no alias summons was issued against him. The court held that as to such partner the suit was at an end, and that a subsequent attachment upon an affidavit of non-residence and service by publication was void, though authorized by the code of the State where the court was sitting, since the court could not thus acquire jurisdiction without service in personam.

Therefore where a person had left the State never intending to return, judgment rendered against him on service by copy on his wife at the place where they had resided prior to his leaving was void. Amsbaugh v. Exchange Bank, 33 Kan. 100.

Chute, 45 Minn. 277; PROCESS, vol. 19, p. 221; Cooley's Prin. of Const. Law, p. 186; Vorce v. Page, 28 Neb. 294. From these cases it will be seen, therefore, that where the proceeding is one purely in personam, the judgment rendered upon notice by publication is utterly invalid as being coram non judice.

By Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, this principle, already well known and established, has been more firmly fixed, that case insisting that the principle is required by the Fourteenth Amendment if not before. See for a discussion of this case, 13 Va. L. J., p. 768. See also 9 Va. L. J., p. 385.

It has been held that, by the act of Tennessee of 1787, where process is served on one material defendant, the court obtains jurisdiction over all the others also, no matter where resident, and may proceed to decree the matter in dispute, although the rights of the non-residents are wholly distinct from those of the parties before the court. Jackson v. Tiernan, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 172.

But in such case, to give jurisdiction the "whole transaction," which is the ground of the action or proceeding, must have taken place in Tennessee. Jackson v. Tiernan, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 172.

If a defendant whose residence is out of the State be served with process while temporarily in the State, such service will confer complete jurisdiction over his person, his presence being residence for such purposes. Alley v. Caspari, 80 Me. 234; Thompson v. Cowell, 148 Mass. 552.

A citizen of Missouri went to Illinois to attend the taking of depositions before a notary public, in an action pending in Missouri in which he was defendant. Soon after they were taken, and while he was in his attorney's office consulting concerning them, he was served, by reading the summons, in an Illinois suit brought against him by the same plaintiff for the same cause of action. It was held that this was a valid service. Greer v. Young, 120 Ill. 184.

In Massachusetts, if the defendant is not an inhabitant of the State, there must be actual service upon him, or some estate or effects of his must be attached, and a summons left at his last and usual place of abode, if he ever was an inhabitant of the State; if he never was an inhabitant, and his estate is attached, a summons may be left with his tenant, agent or attorney; but a summons left with his tenant, etc., is not a legal service, unless his estate or effects be attached. Any deficiency in these requisites of service is good ground for abating a writ. Gardner v. Barker, 12 Mass. 36; Jacobs v. Mellen, 14 Mass. 132; Guild v. Richardson, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 364; Lawrence v. Smith, 5 Mass. 362. See also Wright v. Oakley, 5 Met. (Mass.) 400; Tappan v. Bruen, 5 Mass. 193; Bank of Burlington v. Catlin, 11 Vt. 106.

made beyond the jurisdiction of the court whose process is to be served, and, therefore, if made out of the State in which the court sits, is invalid and of no effect,¹ except in cases where there is a statutory provision otherwise, and even then it would seem that such service is of no more effect than a mere notice by publication.²

The Pennsylvania statute relating to divorce suits directs the service of subpoena on the defendant personally "wherever found." But a service beyond the limits of the State is not authorized, and confers no jurisdiction which the New York courts will respect. Burton v. Burton, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 68.

Service of process out of the territorial jurisdiction of the court from which it issues, at common law, is a nullity; and the defendant's admission of service not showing that it was made within the State is inefficacious. Litchfield v. Burwell, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 341; Weil v. Lowenthal, 10 Iowa 575.

It is no objection, however, to the service of process in a civil action, that it was made upon the defendant while he was still on board a British mail steam vessel after she arrived at the dock, but before she was moored. Peabody v. Hamilton, 106 Mass. 217.

Mr. Cooley clears up this whole subject in his treatise on the Principles of Constitutional Law, p. 186, where he says: "Constructive service of process by publication or attachment of property is sufficient to enable the courts of a State to subject property within it to their jurisdiction, in such cases as the statutes of the States may provide therefor; but such a service cannot be the foundation of a personal judgment. Process from the tribunals of one State cannot run into another State and summon parties there domiciled to leave its territory and respond to proceedings against them. Publication of process or notice within the State where the tribunal sits cannot create any obligation upon the non-resident to appear. Process sent to him out of the State, and process published within it, are equally unavailable in proceeding to establish his personal liability. But in respect to the res, a judgment in rem, rendered with competent jurisdiction, is conclusive everywhere." Citing D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. (U. S.) 165, and other cases.

When personal service cannot be secured, and the defendant fails to appear after a publication of the summons, the proceeding against a non-resident defendant must be by attachment, or some similar proceeding in rem or quasi in rem, which must be confined to property within the State limits.¹ Service of process, either

When the real estate of a defendant who does not reside in the State, and has no known tenant, agent, or attorney, is attached under Vermont Gen. Stat., ch. 83, § 37, it is not enough to leave an attested copy of the writ in the office where a deed of such estate would be recorded; but another copy with the officer's return thereon must be left in the same office, for the defendant. Washburn v. New York, etc., Min. Co., 41 Vt. 50.

In the well known case of Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, the court by Field J., said: "The proceeding in such cases [i. e., by foreign attachment], though in the form of a personal action, has been uniformly treated, where service was not obtained, and the party did not voluntarily appear, as effectual and binding, merely as a proceeding in rem and as having no operation beyond the disposition of the property or some interest therein. And the reason assigned for this conclusion has been that which has been already stated, namely, that the tribunals of one State have no jurisdiction over persons beyond its limits, and can inquire only into their obligations to its citizens, when exercising its conceded jurisdiction over their property within its limits." See also Heidretter v. Elizabeth Oil Cloth Co., 112 U. S. 294.

Rule to be Strictly Followed.—The rule, as stated in the text, is to be strictly followed. Thus it is held in Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151, where this whole subject is thoroughly considered, that a decree of a State court for the removal of a cloud upon the title of land within the State, rendered against a citizen of another State, who has been cited by publication only, as directed by the local statutes, is no bar to an action by him in the circuit courts of the United States to recover the land against the plaintiff in the former State. The court in this case, by Gray, J., said: "Generally, if not universally, equity jurisdiction is exercised in personam and not in rem, and depends upon the control of the court over the parties by reason of their presence or residence, and not upon the place where the land lies in regard to which relief is sought. Upon a bill for the removal of a cloud upon title, as upon a bill for the specific performance of an agreement to convey, the decree, unless otherwise expressly provided by statute, is clearly not a judgment in rem, establishing a title in the land, but operates in personam only, by restraining the defendant from asserting his claim and directing him to deliver up his deed to be canceled, or to execute a release to the plaintiff." Langdell's Eq. Pl. (2d ed.), §§ 43, 184; Massie v. Watts, 6 Cranch (U. S.) 148; Orton v. Smith, 18 How. (U. S.) 263; Vandever v. Freeman, 20 Tex. 334; 70 Am. Dec. 391. The court continuing said: "It would, doubtless, be within the power of the State within which the land lies to provide by statute that, if the defendant is not found within the jurisdiction, or refuses to make or cancel the deed, this should be done in his behalf by a trustee appointed by

on the person or the property of the defendant, is indispensable to give jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the controversy;¹ therefore, if there can be no personal service, and there is no property within the State subject to such process, the suit must fail.²

The law assumes that property is always in possession of its owner, either in person or by agent, and proceeds upon the theory that its seizure will inform him not only that it is taken into the custody of the court, but that he must look to any proceedings authorized by law upon such seizure for its condemnation and sale.³

5. Service by Publication.—Closely allied to the subject of service of process on non-residents, is that of service by publication. In view of the difficulties existing in securing valid service upon defendants who cannot be reached and who have no residence within the State, statutes have been passed in almost every State providing for service by the publication of the summons or notice in a newspaper of proper circulation for a certain length of time. The character of the paper, the length of time the publication must continue, and other similar details, are set forth elsewhere.⁴ We may here examine the general nature and effect of such service. It is sometimes broadly stated that statutes providing for the court for that purpose. Felch v. Hooper, 119 Mass. 52; Ager v. Murray, 105 U. S. 132. But in such a case, just as in the ordinary exercise of its jurisdiction, a court of equity acts in personam, by compelling a deed to be executed or canceled by or in behalf of the party.

"Such a decree being in personam merely, can only be supported against a person who is not a citizen or resident of the State in which it is rendered, by actual service upon him within its jurisdiction; and constructive service by publication in a newspaper is not sufficient. No court deriving its authority from another government will recognize a merely constructive service as bringing the person within the jurisdiction of the court. The judgment would be allowed no force in the courts of any other State; and it is of no greater force against a citizen of another State, in a court of the United States, though held within the State in which the judgment was rendered. Hollingsworth v. Barbour, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 466; Boswell v. Otis, 9 How. (U. S.) 336; Bischoff v. Wethered, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 812; Knowles v. Logansport Gas Light, etc., Co., 19 Wall. (U. S.) 58; *Pennoyer v. In all cases, in order to render a valid personal judgment the court must have jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the person. Gray v. Hawes, 8 Cal. 562.

3. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 719; Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151; Thomas v. Mahone, 9 Bush (Ky.) 111.

When once jurisdiction of the person is obtained of personal service or appearance, jurisdiction of the property follows. The converse, however, is not true, and in suits begun by attachment nothing is affected by the judgment rendered, except the property attached. Gilman v. Gilman, 126 Mass. 28; 30 Am. Rep. 646; Peabody v. Hamilton, 106 Mass. 217; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 308; Wilbur v. Ripley, 124 Mass. 468.

4. NOTICE, vol. 16, p. 808, et seq.

service of process by publication are constitutional,¹ but this is not necessarily true, and the constitutionality must in each case depend upon the character of the particular statute under examination. And it may be considered settled that any statute which provides for a method of service so as to authorize a judgment in personam against a party not actually summoned nor appearing, is violative of that provision of the constitution that no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, and will not, therefore, be upheld.² It lies solely within the province of the Federal Supreme Court to ultimately

In the case of Palmer v. McCormick, 28 Fed. Rep. 541, the decision was, that "in such cases [i. e., where the proceedings were in rem] statutes authorizing service by publication when personal service cannot be had, are not unconstitutional." The same principle is upheld in Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316 (authorizing service by publication in suits to determine the title to land).

In the case of In re Empire City Bank, 18 N. Y. 199, the court by Denio, J., has to say: "If we hold, as we must, in order to sustain this legislation, that the constitution does not positively require personal notice in order to constitute a legal proceeding due process of law, it then belongs to the legislature to determine in the particular instance whether the case calls for this kind of exceptional legislation, and what manner of constructive notice shall be sufficient to reasonably apprise the party proceeded against of the legal steps which are taken against him." And this language is quoted and approved in Mason v. Messenger, 17 Iowa 272. But both these cases were decided before the adoption of the 14th Amendment, at a time when the inhibition of the Federal constitution concerning due process of law was confined to the action of the Federal courts; and it may well be doubted whether the same reasoning would now be considered correct.

2. This idea is presented in 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.), [517] 559, where it is said: "There is probably no State, however, which has empowered its courts to render any judgment without either a personal summons, actual or constructive, or without laying hold of property of some kind within its jurisdiction; and if there be in any State such a statutory provision, it would not only be condemned by the fundamental principles of justice which forbid that anyone should be deprived of any right, relating to person or property, without having an opportunity to make his defense, but it would be plainly contrary to Amendment XIV., U. S. Constitution." And this view is sustained in many well considered cases. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 719; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 308; Fairfax v. Alexandria, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 16; Philadelphia R. Co. v. Trimble, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 377; Settlemyer v. Sullivan, 97 U. S. 447; Cooley's Prin. of Const. Law, 186; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, vol. 3, p. 712, and cases cited; Gray v. Hawes, 8 Cal. 562; Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 388; 19 Am. Rep. 656.

In Batt v. Procter, 45 Fed. Rep. 515, it was held that statutes providing for service by publication are to be construed strictly.

There are some cases opposed to the doctrine announced in the text, but they were all decided either before the 14th Amendment, or before the definite settlement of the law by the case of Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714.

Thus, in the case of Burnam v. Com., 1 Duv. (Ky.) 210, decided in 1864, it was held that the Kentucky act of March 15, 1862, authorizing proceedings against officers of the "provisional" government was constitutional and valid, though it authorized judgments in personam to be rendered upon service by publication.

An Exception.—To this general rule there is an apparent exception. Where the record on appeal shows that the defendant appeared in the subordinate determine what is and what is not due process of law, and no legislature can, by enactment, lower the limit which that court chooses to fix as to what shall constitute such due process, though it seems a legislature may impose as many additional conditions upon the suitor or plaintiff as may seem fit.¹

a. EFFECT IN PROCEEDINGS IN PERSONAM.—It has already been seen that a judgment in personam based upon any other than actual personal service of process within the jurisdiction of the trial court, or upon an appearance by the defendant, is of no effect whatever.² Neither the principles of international comity, nor the full faith and credit clause of the constitution, require that a court of one State shall not inquire as to whether the courts of another State have jurisdiction in which the judgment sought to be enforced was rendered.³

court and there litigated the merits to final judgment, he cannot defeat an appeal by removing from the jurisdiction so as to render a personal service of the citation impossible. In such a case, service by publication, according to the law of the jurisdiction and the practice of the court, is free from objection, and amply sufficient to support the judgment of the appellate court. Nations v. Johnson, 24 How. (U. S.) 195; Mandeville v. Biggs, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 482.

1. This follows as a necessary consequence of the adoption of the 14th Amendment as a part of the Federal Constitution. The term "due process of law," as there used, means the law of the land; and it does not lie within the power of Congress or of any other legislative body to determine what shall constitute due process. Thus, in Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 140; 40 Am. Dec. 274, the court, by Bronson, J., said: "The words 'by the law of the land,' as used in the constitution, do not mean a statute passed for the purpose of working a wrong. That construction would render the restriction absolutely nugatory, and turn this part of the constitution into mere nonsense. The people would be made to say to the two houses: 'You shall be vested with the legislative power of the State, but no one shall be disfranchised or deprived of any rights or privileges of a citizen, unless you pass a statute for that purpose. In other words, you shall not do the wrong unless you choose to do it.'" So in Hoke v. Henderson, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 15; 25 Am. Dec. 677, it is said that the term "the law of the land" does not mean merely an act of the legislature.

If it did, every restriction upon the legislative authority would be at once abrogated. See also Cooley's Const. Lim. (4th ed.), p. 354; Jones v. Perry, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 59; 30 Am. b. EFFECT IN PROCEEDINGS IN REM.—At common law no valid judgment affecting personal property could be rendered unless it was founded on an actual personal service of process, or on the defendant's appearance, or on the seizure of his property within the jurisdiction of the court.¹ And by virtue of the interpretation which has been given to the 14th Amendment, the same rule prevails in the United States;² so that service by publication is of no effect except where the proceeding is in rem. In such proceeding the property is either actually or constructively within the possession of the court, and the judgment is valid so far as it affects such property,³ though no further.⁴ The judgment

Mr. Justice Bradley, in his opinion in Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 471, quotes and approves the language of Beasley, C. J., in Mackay v. Gordon, 34 N. J. L. 286, where it is said: "Every independent government is at liberty to prescribe its own methods of judicial process, and to declare by what forms parties shall be brought before its tribunals. But in the exercise of this power, no government, if it desires extra-territorial recognition of its acts, can violate those rights which are universally esteemed fundamental and essential to society. Thus a judgment by the court of a State against a citizen of such State in his absence and without any notice, express or implied, would, it is presumed, be regarded in every external jurisdiction as absolutely void and unenforceable. Such would certainly be the case if such judgment was so rendered against the citizen of a foreign State."

An appearance, however, by the defendant, or a personal service within the jurisdiction of the trial court renders the judgment valid in personam as well as in rem, and as regards property within the State as well as without. Maxwell v. Stewart, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 71; 22 Wall. (U. S.) 77; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Harris, 97 U. S. 331; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. (U. S.) 404; Barber v. Barber, 21 How. (U. S.) 582.

There was a qualification of this principle in cases of outlawry. 3 Bl. Com. 283-4.

The reasoning of the court in Mason v. Messenger, 17 Iowa 268, where it goes upon the presumption that this single exception constituted the rule at common law, is clearly erroneous.

In the case of Ridley v. Ridley, 24 Miss. 657, the court by Yerger, J., said: "In proceedings in rem, the seizure of the thing itself is deemed in most instances sufficient notice to all parties interested in it to come forward and assert their rights, and is substituted in lieu of actual notice. In this class of cases the legislature sometimes directs a publication of some kind to be made; and, when the law makes such a provision, a judgment rendered without it would be erroneous, and perhaps void. But where no publication is required, a judgment condemning the thing is valid, without any other notice than its seizure according to law."

What Is a Proceeding in Rem.—It is not easy to give an accurate and comprehensive definition of what constitutes a proceeding in rem. The characteristics which belong to such a proceeding are that it is directed against certain property actually or constructively in the possession of the court, and the judgment or decree rendered is valid only so far as it affects such property; that it does not seek to establish any personal obligation. See 1 Greenl. Ev. (4th ed.), §§ 525, 541; Bouv. L. Dict. In Rem; Abb. L. Dict. In Rem; And. L. Dict. Res; The Sabine, 101 U. S. 388; The Propeller Commerce, 1 Black (U. S.) 580; Averill v. Smith, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 95; Day v. Micou, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 162.

Examples of a proceeding in rem might be multiplied. The following are instances of what has been held to constitute such a proceeding:

The condemnation and appropriation by a county of land for drainage purposes. Cupp v. Seneca Co., 19 Ohio St. 173; Miller v. Graham, 17 Ohio St. 1; Pasteur v. Lewis, 39 La. Ann. 5.

The probate of a will. Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 21.

Appropriation of estrays. Campbell v. Evans, 45 N. Y. 356.

A bill to establish a trust in real estate. Porter Land, etc., Co. v. Bas-kin, 43 Fed. Rep. 328.

A proceeding to foreclose a lien or mortgage. Oswald v. Kampmann, 28 Fed. Rep. 36; Martin v. Pond, 36 Fed. Rep. 15.

The adjudication of title to real estate situated within the jurisdiction of the court making the adjudication. Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316 (Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151, distinguished); Venable v. Dutch, 37 Kan. 515; Adams v. Cowles, 95 Mo. 501; 6 Am. St. Rep. 74; Duruty v. Musacchia, 42 La. Ann. 357; Young v. Upshur, 42 La. Ann. 362; Dietrich v. Lang, 11 Kan. 636. See also Lawson v. Moorman, 85 Va. 880; Mason v. Benedict, 43 La. Ann. 397.

Proceedings among heirs for partition. Glover v. Ruffin, 6 Ohio 255; Pillsbury v. Dugan, 9 Ohio 117; 34 Am. Dec. 427; Mason v. Messenger, 17 Iowa 261.

Proceedings by guardians to sell the land of their wards. Stall v. Macalester, 9 Ohio 19.

Suit to cancel conventional sale of land. Robbins v. Martin, 43 La. Ann. 488.

As to a suit to establish title to shares of stock in an incorporated company, see Kilgour v. New Orleans Gas Light Co., 2 Woods (U. S.) 144.

A bill for the specific execution of a contract to convey real estate is not strictly a proceeding in rem in ordinary cases; but where such a procedure is authorized by statute, on publication, without personal service of process, it is substantially of that character. Boswell v. Otis, 9 How. (U. S.) 336. See also Robbins v. Martin (La. Ann. 1891), 9 So. Rep. 108. Where a party to a contract of conventional sale sought its cancellation on the ground that he had been evicted from a portion thereof, it was held to be a proceeding substantially in rem.

Plaintiff and defendant being partners, a proceeding by the former praying for a dissolution, the appointment of a receiver and an accounting, etc., is not a proceeding in rem. Esbach v. Slonaker, 1 Pa. Dist. Rep. 32.

In the case of Cross v. Armstrong, 44 Ohio St. 623, a suit was brought against an insurance company by a widow upon a policy in which she was named as beneficiary. The company, by direction of the court, brought into court a sum of money sufficient to satisfy the amount due on the policy, and obtained an order requiring the administrator to appear and interplead with the widow as to their respective claims under the policy. The court, holding that such a proceeding was not in rem, by Spear, J., said: "'In rem' is understood to be a technical term, taken from the Roman law, and there used to distinguish an action against the thing from one against the person, the terms in rem and in personam, always being the opposite one of the other; an act in personam being one done or directed against a specific person, while an act in rem was one done with reference to no specific person, but against or with reference to a specific thing, and so against whom it might concern, or 'all the world.' A proceeding brought to determine the

in such case is, therefore, of no effect beyond the limits of the status of the thing itself, the particular thing, and which is confined to the subject-matter in specie, is in rem, the judgment being intended to determine the state or condition, and, ipso facto, to render the thing what the judgment declares it to be; while a proceeding which seeks the recovery of a personal judgment, is in personam. In the former, process may be served on the thing itself, and by such service and by making proclamation, the court is authorized to decide upon it without other notice to persons, all the world being parties; while in the latter, in order to give the court power to adjudge, there must be service upon those whose rights are sought to be affected."

Proceeding to Subject Decedent's Estate to Debts—Notice to Heirs.—A proceeding by an administrator to subject the estate of decedent to the payment of debts or legacies is one in rem, and jurisdiction is acquired without actual notice to the heirs or other parties whose interests are to be affected by the decree. Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. (U. S.) 338; McPherson v. Cuneliff, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 422; 14 Am. Dec. 642; Tongue v. Morton, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 21; Adams v. Jeffries, 12 Ohio 253; 40 Am. Dec. 477; Paine v. Moreland, 15 Ohio 442; 45 Am. Dec. 585; Sheldon v. Newton, 3 Ohio St. 500; Benson v. Cilley, 8 Ohio St. 604; Perkins v. Fairfield, 11 Mass. 228; Rice v. Parkman, 16 Mass. 332; Poor v. Boyce, 12 Tex. 449. See also DEBTS OF DECEDENTS, vol. 5, p. 278.

But there are numerous and high authorities to the effect that where a statute exists requiring notice to be given to the heirs or to other parties whose interests are to be affected by the decree sought, such notice must be given as the statute prescribes; and if it does not appear that it has been so given, the judgment or decree is void and of no effect. The case of Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. (U. S.) 338, in so far as it sustains an opposite view, has been much criticised. Sitzman v. Pacquette, 13 Wis. 291; Gibbs v. Shaw, 17 Wis. 201; 84 Am. Dec. 737; Blodgett v. Hitt, 29 Wis. 169; Palmer v. Oakley, 2 Doug. (Mich.) 477; 47 Am. Dec. 41; Gwin v. McCarroll, 1 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 351; Planter's Bank v. Johnson, 7 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 449; Babbitt v. Doe, 4 Ind. 355; Doe v. Anderson, 5 Ind. 33; Doe v. Bowen, 8

Ind. 197; Corwin v. Merritt, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 341; Rigney v. Coles, 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 486 (court of inferior jurisdiction); Sheldon v. Wright, 5 N. Y. 513.

In the case of Sheldon v. Wright, 5 N. Y. 513, the court by Foot, J., said: "A surrogate unquestionably acquires jurisdiction of the subject-matter on the presentation of the petition and account; but before he could grant a valid order of sale, he must also acquire jurisdiction of the person whose rights were to be affected by it, and this is accomplished by the publication of the order. Such publication must, therefore, be made before full jurisdiction is obtained, not because the statute directs it, for the statutory provision is merely directory, but because it is a great and fundamental principle in the administration of justice that no man can be divested of his rights until he has had the opportunity of being heard." Citing Corwin v. Merritt, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 345.

In the case of Doe v. Anderson, 5 Ind. 36, the court by Davison, J., said: "The defendants insisted that as the court had jurisdiction of the cause, its order directing the sale of the land cannot be impeached collaterally. That position is not correct until the heirs are personally served 'with notice of the petition and of the time and place of hearing the same.' The court had no authority to order the sale of the premises. . . . It is true this court has ruled that 'where the record discloses nothing on the point, jurisdiction of the person will be presumed,' but such presumption will not be indulged against the direct admission of the defendant that the heirs had no notice of the suit in which the order of sale was made."

In the case of Good v. Norley, 28 Iowa 188, the question arose, and it was held by two of the judges, that a proceeding by an administrator to subject the decedent's lands to the payment of debts was not a proceeding in rem, but one in its nature adversary, and a sale made thereunder in the absence of any notice to the person whose interests are to be affected was absolutely void. The opinion of Beck, J., contains a lengthy review of the authorities. The other two judges refused to pass upon the question of jurisdiction, and decided the case upon another point.

State in which it was rendered.¹ Where the proceeding is in rem, no service of process other than a seizure in rem is essential to a valid judgment, unless required by statute.² Statutes providing for publication, therefore, have only the effect to add to the requirements imposed upon the plaintiff,—they cannot lower what has been declared by the highest court to be the limit of due process of law.³

c. IN DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS.—An apparent exception to the general rules exist in divorce cases, so that a divorce may be granted to a resident from a non-resident, even though the latter may have had no personal notice of the suit and may not have appeared.⁴

1. See CONFLICT OF LAWS, vol. 3, p. 531, and cases; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, vol. 3, p. 710-713; 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.), [517] 560; Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 484; Hampton v. McConnel, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 234; Mayhew v. Thatcher, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 129; Vorce v. Page, 28 Neb. 294.

It is believed, however, that there is no jurisdiction in which it is not required that notice by publication or a similar method is not required in proceedings in rem in addition to the mere seizure of property. See FOREIGN ATTACHMENT, vol. 8, p. 321.

3. See Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714; 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.), [517] 559. See also supra, this title, Service Upon Non-residents; FOREIGN ATTACHMENTS, vol. 8, pp. 291, 321.

4. In Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 734, the court by Field, J., said: "We do not mean to assert, by anything we have said, that a State may not authorize proceedings to determine the status of one of its citizens toward a non-resident, which would be binding within the State, though made without service of process or personal notice to the non-resident. The jurisdiction which every State possesses, to determine the civil status and capacities of all its inhabitants, involves authority to prescribe the conditions on which proceedings affecting them may be commenced and carried on within its territory. The State, for example, has absolute right to prescribe the conditions upon which the marriage relation between its own citizens shall be created, and the causes for which it may be dissolved. One of the parties guilty of acts for which, by the law of the State, a dissolution may be granted, may have removed to a State where no dissolution is permitted. The complaining party would, therefore, fail if a divorce were sought in the State of the defendant; and if application could not be made to the tribunals of the complainant's domicile in such case, and proceedings be there instituted without personal service of process or personal notice to the offending party, the injured citizen would be without redress." Bish. Marr. & Div., § 156. See also Cooley's Const. Lim. (4th ed.), (405) 507.

The determination of what is and what is not due process in divorce proceedings depends upon the light in which such proceedings are regarded. A divorce suit is properly partly in rem and partly in personam. So far as it affects the status of the parties, it is a proceeding in rem; and a valid decree may be made upon service by publication, it being immaterial whether or not notice was actually brought home to defendant. DIVORCE, vol. 5, p. 751; Cooley's Const. Lim. (4th ed.), (405) 507; Hull v. Hull, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 174; Hubbell v. Hubbell, 3 Wis. 662; 62 Am. Dec. 702; Ditson v. Ditson, 4 R. Div. 24 (valid service made by registered letter); McFarland v. McFarland, 40 Ind. 458; Tolen v. Tolen, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 407; 21 Am. Dec. 742; Hard-

6. Upon Private Persons—Residents.—In case of process against private persons, actual service is made merely by reading the summons or other process to the party, and by leaving with him a copy of the same. This is the simplest and plainest method, about which few difficulties can arise, since there can be no doubt as to whether the defendant was really informed of the proceeding against him.¹

ing v. Alden, 9 Me. 140; 23 Am. Dec. 549; Colvin v. Reed, 55 Pa. St. 375; Cook v. Cook, 56 Wis. 195; 43 Am. Rep. 706; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 734.

It is said by Mr. Cooley that such a service (i. e., by publication alone) may be sufficient also to empower the court to pass upon the question of the custody and control of the children of the marriage, if they are within its jurisdiction at the time, but only so long as they remain there. Cooley's Const. Lim. (4th ed.), (405) 507. See also DIVORCE, vol. 5, p. 752, note 2; Kline v. Kline, 57 Iowa 386; 42 Am. Rep. 47 (a decree rendered in one State upon service by publication is of no effect, in so far as it attempts to fix the custody of the minor children who were then resident in another State); Woodworth v. Spring, 4 Allen (Mass.) 321; Cook v. Cook, 56 Wis. 195; 43 Am. Rep. 206.

In some cases, however, it is maintained that a decree of divorce, rendered without actual service upon the defendant, or without his appearance, is of no effect beyond the jurisdiction of the court rendering it. O'Dea v. O'Dea, 101 N. Y. 23; People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78; 32 Am. Rep. 274; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217; 28 Am. Rep. 129; Platt's Appeal, 80 Pa. St. 501; 22 Am. L. Rev., p. 579.

But in so far as the suit seeks to affect the parties otherwise than as just stated, it is a proceeding in personam, and a valid decree can be rendered only when the defendant has been actually served with process within the jurisdiction of the trial court or when he has actually appeared. DIVORCE, vol. 5, p. 751, and cases cited; Cooley's Const. Lim. (4th ed.), (406) 508; Crossman v. Crossman, 33 Ala. 486; Turner v. Turner, 44 Ala. 437; Parrish v. Parrish, 32 Ga. 653; Harding v. Alden, 9 Me. 140; 23 Am. Dec. 549; Com. v. Blood, 97 Mass. 538; Hood v. Hood, 11 Allen (Mass.) 196; Borden v. Fitch, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 121; 8 Am. Dec. 225; Pawling v. Wilson, 13 Johns.

Compare Beard v. Beard, 21 Ind. 321. It is said that the injured party "must seek redress in the forum of the defendant, unless where the defendant has removed from what was before the common domicile of both." Reel v. Elder, 62 Pa. St. 308. See also Denton v. Denton, 41 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 221; Phelps v. Baker, 41 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 237.

Daizy*, 42 Miss. 501; Gregory v. Harmon, 10 Iowa 445; People v. Applegarth, 64 Cal. 229; Casteel v. Hiday, 13 Ind. 536.

When a defendant refuses to accept a copy of the summons which is decorously offered him, after being informed of what the paper is; or if he runs off while the same is being read to him, the service may be made by depositing the process in some appropriate place in his presence, or where it will be likely to come to his possession. Borden v. Borden, 63 Wis. 374; Van Rensselaer v. Petrie, 2 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 94; Norton v. Meader, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 603; Slaght v. Robbins, 13 N. J. L. 340; People v. Bernal, 43 Cal. 385.

In case of service by a person other than the sheriff, it is in some States required that a copy of the summons be both read to the defendant and left with him. Wilkinson v. Bailey, 71 Wis. 131.

In case of service by leaving a copy, it is not necessary that the copy should be certified, or that it should contain any endorsement put on the summons by the sheriff. Dresser v. Wood, 15 Kan. 344.

Where a party when served with process is too drunk to understand anything of what is done, such service, though properly made, will not be valid. Murphy v. Loos, 104 Ill. 514.

The precise manner of personal service varies according to the practice in different States, some allowing reading alone,¹ some leaving a copy and that alone, some requiring both.² The safest method is, therefore, both to read the process to defendant and also to leave with him a copy.

So, also, service by merely laying the summons on the body of a man too sick to know anything, is invalid. People v. Judge, 38 Mich. 310.

Under a statute in Pennsylvania, which requires service of process against one engaged in business in another county to be made "at the usual place of business or residence, etc.," a mere personal service is insufficient. Lehigh Valley Ins. Co. v. Fuller, 81 Pa. St. 398.

An important case in Illinois, has established it that an arrest on a capias without reading is not a service of process, where the defendant is discharged. But, in such case, if the defendant had been kept in jail until court, he would have been before the court. McNab v. Bennett, 66 Ill. 157.

In Rhode Island, a single attested copy of a writ, containing summons and attachment, left with the defendant, constitutes a sufficient service of the summons under the statute. Greenwich Nat. Bank v. Hall, 11 R. I. 124. See also Sheldon v. Comstock, 3 R. I. 84; Conlon v. Cassidy (R. I. 1891), 23 Atl. Rep. 100.

Article 1220 Rev. Stat. of Texas, requires that where a citation is served outside the county in which the suit is pending, the officer must deliver to defendant in person a certified copy of the petition accompanying the citation. As to a return in this method of service, see Graves v. Drane, 66 Tex. 658.

1. Hickman v. Barnes, 1 Mo. 156; Watts v. White, 12 Iowa 330; Cicero Tp. v. Shirk, 122 Ind. 572; Kirkland v. Hogan, 65 N. Car. 144; Waddingham v. St. Louis, 14 Mo. 190.

Defendant may waive the reading, and service in such case without it is valid. Casteel v. Hiday, 13 Ind. 536; Gregory v. Harmon, 10 Iowa 445.

It has been held under the Ohio statute, providing that summons shall be served by delivering a certified copy to the defendant, or leaving the same at his usual place, a return of service "by reading" showed an entire want of service, and a judgment thereunder, by default, was void. Robbins v. Clemmens, 41 Ohio St. 285.

But to constitute a valid service by reading, the whole of the writ must be read, and not merely the material parts. Crary v. Barber, 1 Colo. 172.

The North Carolina statute does not require a copy of the summons in a civil action before a justice of the peace to be left with defendant. Kirkland v. Hogan, 65 N. Car. 144. See also Ghiradelli v. Greene, 56 Cal. 629.

Where, however, a printed declaration and notice in ejectment were served upon a tenant, who was an illiterate man, by telling him that they were a declaration in ejectment, without further reading or explaining them; but it appeared from other circumstances that he must have understood the nature of the papers served upon him, it was considered to be equivalent to a technical service. Jackson v. Stiles, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 222.

If a defendant refuses to receive a summons offered him by the officer having the writ for service, the officer may return that he delivered the summons or he may return the facts specifically, and they will be held to be a delivery. Fuller v. Kenney, 32 Me. 334. Or in such a case, the officer may deposit the copy in any convenient place in the presence of the party and the service will be good. Norton v. Meader, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 603.

Where the officer is required to deliver a copy of the process to the defendant, the return sufficiently shows that he did so where it avers that a copy was "left with defendant." Buck v. Buck, 60 Ill. 105. Contra, Hall v. Graham, 49 Wis. 553. See also Niles v. Vanderzee, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 547.

2. Case v. Colston, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 145; Hendley v. Baccus, 32 Tex. 328; Noleman v. Weil, 72 Ill. 502; Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Joiner, 72 Ill. 520. See also Brown v. Miner, 21 Ill. App. 60; Greenwich Nat. Bank v. Hall, 11 R. I. 124; Newlove v. Woodward, 9 Neb. 502.

In attachment cases, under the Louisiana practice, service of citation must be made in strict compliance with the law, and must be proved by the sheriff's return. Service cannot be proved as matter in pais, nor aided by presumption. Woolridge v. Monteuse, 27 La. Ann. 79.

When there is no statutory provision as to the mode of service, personal service, it seems, is requisite.¹ A subpoena for witnesses must be served personally.² The great object of service of process should be kept in view and the spirit of the requirements complied with; any trick or subterfuge which deprives defendant of fair notice of the action commenced against him is a fraud, and invalidates the service.³

a. SUBSTITUTED SERVICE.—But it often happens that the officer is unable to make actual personal service, owing to the absence of the defendant or inability to find him, and then it is necessary that constructive or substituted service be made. In cases of substituted service the summons or other process is left with some suitable person, a member of defendant's family, at his last and usual place of residence.⁴ It is important to remember,

1. Romain v. Muscatine Co., Morr. (Iowa) 357; People v. Hurlburt, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 446; Wright v. Douglass, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 554; Sleeper v. Free Baptist Assoc., 58 N. H. 27.

2. Subpoena.—Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 315, and authorities cited. The reason there given for requiring personal service is, that "otherwise he (the witness) cannot be chargeable with a contempt in not appearing upon the summons." See also 1 Starkie's Ev. 77; SUBPOENA. Compare Southern Steam Packet Co. v. Roger, 1 Cheves Eq. (S. Car.) 48.

3. Placing, therefore, in the defendant's possession a summons disguised in such a manner as to conceal from her its nature, just as she is entering on a sea voyage, is not a good service; and a subsequent discovery by the defendant of the contents does not make it good. Bulkley v. Bulkley, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 307. See also, in this connection, Mather v. Parsons, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 338; Mason v. Libby, 1 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 354; People v. Judge, 38 Mich. 310.

Mere manual delivery of the summons and complaint, which the defendant returns without being informed that he was entitled to keep them, or that service was intended, is not a good service. Beekman v. Cutler, 2 Code R. (N. Y.) 51; Niles v. Vanderzie, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 547; Davison v. Baker, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 39.

4. Ames v. Winsor, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 247; Augusta v. Windsor, 19 Me. 317; Orcutt v. Ranney, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 183; Frederick v. Clark, 5 Wis. 191; King's Election Case, 19 Can. Sup. Ct. Rep. 526; Compare Cost v. Rose, 17 Ill. 276.

The provision under most statutes is that when defendant is "not found," service may be made by leaving a copy of the process with any member of the defendant's family over fourteen years of age at his usual or last place of residence, and explaining to such person its purport. And if no member of his family be found or none be willing to receive it, service may be made by posting a copy at defendant's last and usual place of residence. New York Code Civ. Proc., § 436; 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.) 533; Settlemyer v. Sullivan, 97 U. S. 444; Succession of McCalop, 10 La. Ann. 224; Frederick v. Clark, 5 Wis. 191; Spiegelberg v. Sullivan, 1 N. Mex. 575 (service of attachment); Harris v. Hardeman, 14 How. (U. S.) 334.

Where the statute provides for constructive service of legal process, the terms and conditions of such service must be strictly observed. Where only one copy was left for two defendants, separate copies being necessary, the judgment will be reversed on appeal. Stewart v. Stringer, 41 Mo. 400; 97 Am. Dec. 278; Brownfield v. Dyer, 7 Bush. (Ky.) 505.

Wherever a judgment is founded upon a constructive service, the record must show all the facts necessary to authorize such service (i. e. that the defendant was not found after diligent search, etc.), and the regulations concerning that method of service must appear to have been strictly followed. Settlemyer v. Sullivan, 97 U. S. 444; Mullins v. Sparks, 43 Miss. 129; Cole v. Hocha, 21 La. Ann. 613; Noyes v. Hillier, 65 Mich. 636; Sidles v. Reed, 10 Iowa 589; Brownfield v. Dyer, 7 Bush. How Substituted Service Is Made.—Substituted service is service made upon one other than the defendant, when he cannot be found. The term is here used as distinct from the term "constructive service," although it is really nothing more than a particular kind of constructive service. The general rule in regard to substituted service is that it must be made upon some person, a member of the defendant's family, over fourteen years of age, at his (the defendant's) usual place of residence. It seems that a failure in any one of these requisites will invalidate the service. Mullins v. Sparks, 43 Miss. 129; Bustamente v. Bescher, 43 Miss. 172; Cole v. Hocha, 21 La. Ann. 613.

The contents or purport of the writ which is left with a member of defendant's family should be stated and explained to such person. Diltz v. Chambers, 2 Greene (Iowa) 479.

With Whom Copy Must be Left.—In some States it is required that the person with whom a copy of the process is left shall be over fifteen years of age, others over sixteen, and still others require that it shall be a white person. This is immaterial here, however, since it can be found in the code of each State. See Dobbins v. Thompson, 4 Mo. 118; 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.) 533; Diltz v. Chambers, 2 Greene (Iowa) 479; Weber v. Weber, 49 Mo. 45; Phillips v. Evans, 64 Mo. 17.

Such person must be a member of defendant's family, and the return must so state. Mack v. Brown, 73 Ill. 295; Von Roy v. Blackman, 3 Woods (U. S.) 98; infra, this title, Requisites of Return.

The defendant is not bound by the service of a writ upon a person with whom there is no evidence to connect him. Adams v. Town, 3 Cal. 247.

A writ served on a school district by attaching certain personal property of the district and leaving a true and attested copy of the writ, with the officer's return thereon, at the house of the then usual abode of the clerk of said district in the hands of his wife, constitutes a valid service. Dow v. School Dist. No. 12, 46 Vt. 108.

Copy Must be Left at Defendant's Usual or Last Place of Residence.—A copy left with defendant's wife, but not at his usual place of residence, did not constitute a valid service. Hewitt

v. Weatherby, 57 Mo. 276. The same principle in Amault v. St. Julien, 21 La. Ann. 630; Wheeler v. Wilkins, 19 Mich. 78; Castleton v. Weybridge, 46 Vt. 474; Adams v. Abram, 38 Mich. 302.

Leaving a copy of process with defendant's clerk, at his store, is not a valid service, since such clerk is not a member of defendant's family, nor is the copy left at his usual place of abode. Winchester v. Cox, 3 Iowa 575.

The same doctrine was held to apply where a copy of the summons was left at the defendant's workshop with his journeyman or his foreman. Mayer v. Griffin, 7 Wis. 82; McConkey v. McCraney, 71 Wis. 576; and where the copy was left at defendant's place of business. Lambert v. Sample, 25 Ohio St. 336.

Where process was left with a member of defendant's family, at a distance of 120 feet from his dwelling, but in the yard of the dwelling, it was not a sufficient service under a statute prescribing that, in the absence of a defendant, the process should be left with some member of his family "at the dwelling house of such defendant." Kibbe v. Benson, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 624.

In this connection, see Succession of McGalop, 10 La. Ann. 224; Rousseau v. Gayarre, 24 La. Ann. 355. See also Lee v. Macfee, 45 Minn. 33 (defendant's boarding house held to be his last and usual place of abode); Laney v. Garbee, 105 Mo. 355; Thomas v. Richards, 69 Wis. 671; Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. A hotel or boarding house for transient guests where a stranger is stopping for a few days cannot be considered his usual place of abode. White v. Primm, 36 Ill. 416. Compare Lee v. Macfee, 45 Minn. 33.

In a suit to enforce the lien of a mortgage on property in L county, the return of the sheriff showed that the defendant could not be found, and that a copy of the summons was delivered to a "member" of the family, "at his usual place of abode in said (L) county;" on which service the court gave a decree by default for the sale of the property under which the defendants claimed. It was held, that the service was invalid, and the decree of sale thereon null and void, because the return did not show that the substituted service of the summons was made at the defendant's usual place of abode in the State, in whatever county it might be, but only at his usual place of abode in L county. Swift v. Myers, 37 Fed. Rep. 37.

however, that the person upon whom such substituted service is made must be some one other than the plaintiff in the action.¹ The term "usual or last place of residence" means the residence

Where a party leaves his house, being a fugitive from justice, and there are no indications that he intends to return, service cannot be made on him by leaving a copy at his former home, since that is no longer his place of residence. Wolff v. Shenandoah Nat. Bank (Iowa, 1891), 50 N. W. Rep. 561. The same is true where a party leaves the State to reside elsewhere permanently. Schlawig v. De Peyster, (Iowa, 1891), 49 N. W. Rep. 843.

Requisites of Copy.—It is not essential that the copy left with the defendant should have the seal of the original writ copied; nor will a variance as to the title of the court between the copy of the summons and the complaint be sufficient ground for setting aside the service. Hughes v. Osborn, 42 Ind. 450; Glasscock v. Shell, 57 Tex. 215; Dresser v. Wood, 15 Kan. 344. See also State v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 41 N. J. L. 250; Fraser v. Oakdale, etc., Lumber Co., 73 Cal. 187; Collins v. Merriam, 31 Vt. 622; Adams v. Adams, 64 N. H. 224 (original instead of copy left).

The failure of the officer to state that the copy delivered was a "true copy" of the writ, renders the service voidable only. Friend v. Green, 43 Kan. 167. But in Lauderdale v. Ennis Stationery Co., 80 Tex. 496, a failure to state that "certified copies" were left, was held to invalidate the service.

When Allowed.—Substituted service will not be allowed unless it appears that diligent search was made for the defendant until the time allowed for personal service had expired. Brown v. Williams, 39 Mich. 755.

The revised statutes of Montana provide for personal service always, except in certain specified cases. A substituted service on defendant's agent is, therefore, utterly void, unless the case is within the statutory exceptions. Davidson v. Clark, 7 Mont. 100.

Where a defendant leaves his State merely temporarily, no other service is necessary other than the ordinary substituted service. Giles v. Hicks, 45 Ark. 271.

Under § 89 of Code of North Carolina, requiring "personal service or a written admission thereof," leaving copy with defendant's wife at his place of abode is not sufficient, notwithstanding proof of delivery to him by her and his verbal assent thereto. Charlotte Bank v. Wilson, 80 N. Car. 200. But in the case of Dunkle v. Elston, 71 Ind. 585, the words "personally served" as used in the statute were held to have reference to personal service as distinguished from service by publication; and in this sense service by copy left at defendant's residence is personal.

Substituted service by leaving copy at defendant's usual place of abode has been held valid and sufficient to support a judgment, although defendant was absent from home at the time and his wife, with whom the copy had been left, being illiterate, could not read, so that he had no actual notice of the proceeding until after judgment. Lucas v. Wilson, 67 Ga. 356. See also Hurlbut v. Thomas, 55 Conn. 181.

Substituted service is proper when a bill is brought to obtain a new trial of a cause at law in the same court. Oglesby v. Attrill, 14 Fed. Rep. 214.

In the federal courts, on a bill to enjoin a suit at law, if the defendant cannot be found in the district, process may be served on his attorneys in the lawsuit. Bartlett v. Sultan, 19 Fed. Rep. 346.

Where the defendant voluntarily left the county of his residence and remained within the lines of the confederate army, judgments rendered against him based upon constructive process, were held valid. Thomas v. Mahone, 9 Bush (Ky.) 111.

In Federal Courts.—A substituted service under State laws is not allowable in suits in equity in the United States courts. The manner of serving a subpoena is regulated by the acts of Congress and the rules of the supreme court. Hyslop v. Hoppock, 5 Ben. (U. S.) 533. Compare Harris v. Hardeman, 14 How. (U. S.) 334.

1. This is true, no matter if the person who is so served is "a member of defendant's family, and the defendant into which the person, still a resident of the State, has moved, in that State, last before the service of process.¹

In New York, however, when substituted service is necessary to be made, an order of the court is required, which order issues from the court where the action is triable, upon satisfactory proof, either by the affidavit of a person not a party to the action, or by the return of the sheriff of the county where the defendant resides, that proper and diligent effort has been made to serve the process upon the defendant, and that the place of his sojourn cannot be ascertained, or, if he is within the State, that he avoids service so that personal service cannot be made.² The proof must be such as to satisfy the mind of the judge that such a state of facts as entitles him to make the order exists.³ is a minor." Hemmer v. Wolfer (Ill. 1887), 11 N. E. Rep. 885.

This is well explained in Hyslop v. Hoppock, 5 Ben. (U. S.) 447; 6 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 552, where the court declares that a subpoena to appear and answer a bill in equity cannot be served at the last, or last usual, place of abode, but must be left at the existing, present dwelling house, or the existing, present, usual, customary place of abode of the defendant.

Where the defendant resided at his mother's home in New Jersey during the summer, though his own house in New York was open and in charge of his servant, service may be made on him by leaving a copy at the house of his mother before his leaving to reside in New York. Harrison v. Farrington, 35 N. J. Eq. 4.

As to what are the exact limits of a person's usual place of abode it has been held that service made within the inclosures of a plantation on which defendant resides, on a person apparently above the age of fourteen years, shown to have resided at the time on the same plantation but not in the dwelling house with the defendant, is sufficient. The whole plantation is defendant's domicile, and service on a person living on it is good. Succession of McCalop, 10 La. Ann. 224; Rousseau v. Gayarre, 24 La. Ann. 355. Compare Kibbe v. Benson, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 624.

2. New York Code Civ. Proc., §§ 435-7; McCarthy v. McCarthy, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 546; 2 Bouv. L. Dict., Substituted Service.

The provisions of this section apply only to cases in which the defendant cannot be found either in or out of the State, or where, being in the State, he avoids or evades service; plaintiff is not entitled to an order for substituted service where the papers show where the absent defendant may be found. Foot v. Harris, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 454; Collins v. Campbell, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 519; Jones v. Derby, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 458. See also Clare v. Lockard, 21 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 173.

Under this rule an order may be made in a case where defendant being sick and confined to his bed at his residence, the persons in charge of him refused to permit the officer to make service. Two of the judges were of the opinion that in such a case the defendant was "not found" within the meaning of the statute, while another considered that it was a case of avoidance of service by defendant's agents. Carter v. Youngs, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 169.

3. This question of proof is fully discussed in McCarthy v. McCarthy, 55 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 418; 84 N. Y. 671. See also Collins v. Ryan, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 647; Haswell v. Lincks, 87 N. trouble with creditors, was held not sufficient and to give no jurisdiction. Gere v. Gunlach, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 13.

Proof that his wife stated that he had gone to Ohio and that she did not expect him back this summer, except on a visit, was considered not sufficient to authorize the order. Collins v. Campfield, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 519.

1. The copy must be left at defendant's last and usual place of residence, not at his store or office. Lambert v. Sample, 25 Ohio St. 336; Hays v. Bank of U. S., 1 Wright (Ohio) 563. Compare Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Wulf, 9 Biss. (U. S.) 285. Compare, also, Smith v. Parke, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 298; Hyslop v. Hoppock, 5 Ben. (U. S.) 447.

And the term "usual place of abode or residence," means his place of abode at the time of service of the process. Gadsden v. Johnson, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 89; Capehart v. Cunningham, 12 W. Va. 750. A return stating that a copy was left at defendant's last and usual place of abode in C. county does not show proper service, since it failed to show that such abode in C. county was his "last and usual place of abode." Sanborn v. Stickney, 69 Me. 343. Contra, Healey v. Butler, 66 Wis. 9.

A notice posted upon a house seven months after it had been vacated by the defendant and his family, and while they were residing within the confederate lines, was not posted up on his "usual place of abode," and a judgment founded on such defective notice was absolutely void. Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 503.

Where a sheriff by mistake left the copy of a writ against J at the house of J's brother, but met and told J of the fact on the same evening, and J replied that he would get the copy and accept the service, whereupon the sheriff returned the writ "served the within by personal service," it was held that J was estopped from denying the service. Johnson v. Johnson, 52 Ga. 449.

When a defendant resides alternately in two counties or parishes, without having made a declaration of residence, he must be cited where he appears to have his principal establishment or habitual residence. If his residence in each parish seems to be nearly of the same nature, he may be cited in either, as the plaintiff may elect. Evans v. Payne, 30 La. Ann. 498; Taylor v. Bach, 17 La. Ann. 61.

A hotel or boarding house, at which a stranger from another State is sojourning for a few days, cannot be considered as his "usual place of abode." White v. Primm, 36 Ill. 416.

Nor can one's berth in a ship be considered his "usual and last place of residence." Craig v. Gisborne, 13 Gray (Mass.) 270.

If a summons be left at a certain place agreeably to the defendant's directions, he cannot take advantage of its not having been left at his usual place of abode. Taylor v. Cook, 1 N. J. L. 54.

The process when left at the abode of the defendant must be left in a conspicuous place—one where he would be likely to see it; e. g., fastening it to his front door, or leaving it lying on his table, etc. Ramsey v. Barbaro, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 293; Castleton v. Weybridge, 46 Vt. 474; Wistar v. Philadelphia, 86 Pa. St. 215.

Giving a copy of the writ to one of defendant's negro servants on the piazza of his dwelling house is a sufficient compliance with a statute requiring it to be left "at some obvious part of the house." Alston v. Bowers, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 458.

The statutory provision in New York that every notice or other paper required to be served upon a sheriff may be served by leaving the same at his office, is to be construed as referring to papers in respect to which it is the sheriff's duty to provide official care and attention, and which are served on him as sheriff by virtue of his office; not to those which concern him personally. Sherman v. Conner, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 396; 50 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 29.

As to service upon sheriff, see also Dunford v. Weaver, 84 N. Y. 445.

A law of Ohio, authorizing a service of process to be made, where the defendant had absented himself to avoid process, by leaving a true copy at his dwelling house, will not be held invalid in Kentucky, as between two citizens of

The statute allowing substituted or constructive service, being a departure from the common law, must be strictly observed and its requirements carefully complied with.¹

Another mode of constructive service is that by publication of the summons in a newspaper for a certain length of time. The character and effect of this mode of service is set forth elsewhere.²

c. UPON SEVERAL DEFENDANTS.—Where an action is brought against several defendants jointly, and only a portion of the number are served, such service will not sustain a judgment against those who are not served. The mere fact that these latter are joined in an action with the former does not deprive them of their constitutional right to have service of process.³ The common law rule requires that before any proceedings can be had, all

In a case where there were two defendants having the same name, and service was made upon one only, and one had died, and it did not appear upon which one service had been made, the service was held insufficient for any purpose whatever. Grider v. Payne, 9 Dana (Ky.) 188.

In no case can a personal judgment be rendered against a person not actually served with process. If a court attempt to assume jurisdiction over a joint obligor not served with process, the judgment rendered is absolutely void as regards such obligor not served. Word v. Watkinson, 17 Conn. 500; 44 Am. Dec. 570, note; McDoel v. Cook, 2 N. Y. 110; Allen v. Chadsey, 1 Ind. 399; Brockman v. McDonald, 16 Ill. 112; Johnson v. Vaughan, 9 B. Mon. In this last case the effect of a judgment obtained under the Michigan of several joint defendants must have been served, and this rule remains in force, where there is no statutory provision otherwise.¹ In many States it is provided that in an action against several joint contractors, service upon such as can be found within the State will authorize proceedings to be had against those who are so served.²

joint debtor act which provided that "Such judgment should be conclusive evidence of the liabilities of the defendant who was served with process in the suit or who appeared therein; but against every other defendant it shall be evidence only of the extent of the plaintiff's demand after the liability of such defendant shall have been established by other evidence," was considered. The court, by Field, J., said:

"Judgments in cases of this kind against the parties not served with process or who do not appear therein, have no binding force upon them personally. The principle is as old as the law that no one shall be personally bound until he has had his day in court, which means until citation is issued to him and opportunity to be heard is afforded. Nor is the demand against the parties not served merged in the judgment against the party brought into court." See also Baxter v. Grove (Mich. 1892), 52 N. W. Rep. 294; Oakley v. Aspinwall, 4 N. In a joint action on a promissory note against third parties, if the summons is executed on two of the defendants, and return not found as to the third, and in that posture of the case the plaintiff continues the cause as to the defendant not found, and takes a judgment against the other two, the entire case is thereby discontinued. Curtis v. Gaines, 46 Ala. 455.

In the case of McBeath v. Spann, 7 Ala. 201, a writ was issued against three persons, and served upon one, and returned not found as to the other two; thereupon, an alias was issued against all without noticing the partial service and returned executed as to the latter two, and not found as to the one previously served. It was held that the service of the original writ was not vacated by the alias or the proceedings thereon.

Under such statutes a resident defendant cannot have a process quashed because there was no service upon a non-resident co-defendant. Comins v. Jones, 54 Vt. 560.

In Connecticut, there is a statute which provides that "in actions on joint contracts, if all the defendants are not inhabitants of this State, service upon such as are inhabitants shall be sufficient notice to maintain the suit against all the defendants." Under this statute it is said to be not necessary that the defendant on whom service is made should be an inhabitant of the State, but it is sufficient if he is temporarily within the State at the time when service is made upon him; and the judgment rendered under the provisions of this statute against all the defendants is conclusive upon the defendant upon whom service was made, and holds for the purposes of execu-

Proper service is made upon several defendants by actual personal service upon each, or, if service be made by copy, a separate copy must be furnished to each, and one copy for all is not sufficient.¹

In a case where there are two defendants, and upon one personal service has been made, and upon the other substituted service, the plaintiff cannot proceed to judgment until the time allowed after the substituted service has expired, when he must enter judgment against both at the same time.²

d. UPON INFANTS.—The matter of service of process upon infants is one regulated almost exclusively by statute. It is a universal requirement that service shall be made not only upon the infant himself generally, but also upon some person connected with him as guardian. It is sufficient here to state the decisions which have been made upon the subject, the statutory regulations being found in the various codes.³

tion the property of any of the other defendants that may have been attached in the suit. Bishop v. Vose, 27 Conn. 1. See also same principle in Southmayd v. Backus, 3 Conn. 474; Mills v. Bishop, Kirby (Conn.) 4; Bishop v. Bull, 1 Day (Conn.) 141. See also Wood v. Watkinson, 17 Conn. 500; 44 Am. Dec. 562.

A suit was brought by a citizen of Illinois in the southern district of Ohio, upon a joint contract against two defendants, one of whom resided in that district and the other in the State of Indiana. The declaration averred the residence of the defendants, and the return of the marshal showed service on both, but the declaration did not aver that the defendant residing in Indiana was served within the southern district of Ohio. It was held that in such a case it was not necessary to aver on the record that the defendant residing in Indiana was served within the said district, and that by virtue of § 1, act February 28, 1839, jurisdiction was conferred on the court to proceed to the trial and adjudication of such suit as against all parties regularly served with process. McCloskey v. Cobb, 2 Bond (U. S.) 16.

In some of the States, statutes have been passed which permit judgment to be entered in form against all of several joint defendants, but which limit the execution to be issued thereon to the joint property of all the defendants and to the separate property of the defendants actually served with process in the suit. In several of the States, the constitutionality of such statutes has been either impliedly or expressly upheld. See Johnson v. Lough, 22 Minn. 203; Lahey v. Kingon, 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 192; Kidd v. Brown, 2 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 20; Guimond v. Nast, 44 Tex. 114; Whitmore v. Shiverick, 3 Nev. 288.

But even under such statutes, the defendant may show in avoidance of the judgment that he was not a joint contractor, since it is this fact alone which makes the judgment binding. Harper v. Brink, 24 N. J. L. 333.

But in the case of Tay v. Hawley, 39 Cal. 95, such a statute as mentioned above was held unconstitutional in the most express terms. See also Hancock v. Preuss, 40 Cal. 572; Mason v. Denison, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 64; Treat v. McCall, 10 Cal. 511; Bowen v. May, 12 Cal. 349; Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371; 80 Am. Dec. 90. Compare Sacramento Sav. Bank v. Spencer, 53 Cal. 737 (service on one of three defendants held to be sufficient).

3. Thus, Civil Code Kentucky, § 52, as amended January 16, 1883, requires a summons against an infant under fourteen years of age to be served upon his father, then upon his guardian; if there be none, then upon his mother, etc. If it is shown by affidavit that all the persons above named are plaintiffs to the action, the court shall appoint a guardian ad litem, and the summons

c. UPON PERSONS CONFINED.—Where a person is in confinement in the jail or State prison, service upon him may be made by serving a copy of the process upon the keeper of the jail or prison, or in some cases it may be served upon the prisoner himself.¹ In the case of insane persons who are undergoing confine-shall be served on him. See Donaldson v. Stone (Ky. 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 462.

In Missouri, service on infants is to be made precisely as if they were adults. Baumgartner v. Guessfeld, 38 Mo. 36. But acknowledgment in writing, on the writ, of the service of summons can only be made by adults or those capable of acting for themselves. A minor may not do it, nor his guardian for him. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Campbell, 62 Mo. 585.

So also substituted service may be made upon two minors by leaving a copy with their mother as a member of the family of each. Weber v. Weber, 49 Mo. 45.

In Indiana, it is held that process should be served on infant defendants in chancery, in the same manner as if they were adults; and to enable them to plead, answer, or demur, a guardian ad litem for them, should be appointed. Hough v. Canby, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 301; De La Hunt v. Holderbaugh, 58 Ind. 285.

In nearly all the other States, service upon infants, in actions wherein they are defendants, is required to be made in a way different from that upon adults; generally by service upon the infant and upon its parent or guardian. New York Code Civ. Proc., § 426; Moulton v. Moulton, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 606; Hogle v. Hogle, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 313; Tyler v. Jewell (Ky. 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 25; Donaldson v. Stone (Ky. 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 462; Hemmer v. Wolfer, 124 Ill. 435; Sanders v. Godley, 23 Ala. 473; Faust v. Faust, 31 S. Car. 576; Gay v. Grant, 101 N. Car. 206; Richardson v. Loupe, 80 Cal. 490; Stearns v. Wallace, 58 N. H. 228; Dohms v. Mann, 76 Iowa 723. Compare Schwartz' Estate, 14 Pa. St. 42.

In Maine, the creditor of a ward may sue him by serving a notice of such suit upon the guardian. The omission of such notice is a ground for reversal. Homstead v. Loomis, 53 Me. 549.

Civil Code Kentucky, before the amendment of January 16, 1882, required the summons to be served on the father of an infant under fourteen years of age. It has been held, that service on the father of several defendants under that age is good as to an unchristened infant described in the summons, where a guardian ad litem is appointed and defense is made for all, though the father is a party plaintiff, and the sheriff's return mentions the other children, but does not mention such infant. Donaldson v. Stone (Ky. 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 462. Service on the infant herself under this statute is entirely insufficient. Jenkins v. Crofton (Ky. 1888), 9 S. W. Rep. 406.

It Must be Upon Some One Other than the Plaintiff.—The principle that service upon the plaintiff in an action is never sufficient, applies here as well as elsewhere. Thus on a bill in chancery by a stepfather against his stepchildren, to subject their lands to sale, the service of summons by delivery of a copy thereof to the complainant, informing him of its contents, will confer no jurisdiction on the court as to the persons of the defendants, and a decree of sale upon such service will be void as to them. Hemmer v. Wolfer, 124 Ill. 436.

1. Johnson v. Johnson, Walker (Mich.) 309; Dunn's Appeal, 35 Conn. 82; Smith v. McGlasson, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 154; Hix v. Sumner, 50 Me. 290 (service within the prison to be by deputy warden upon the prisoner).

As to service upon defendant personally while in prison, see Davis v. Duffie, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 617; 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 486; State v. Washington, 37 La. Ann. 828; Phelps v. Phelps, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 150; New York Code Civ. Proc., § 429; Bland v. Bland, L. R., 3 P. & D. 233; 12 Moak's Rep. 688; Smith v. McGlasson, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 154.

In one case, the defendant was sentenced to the State prison for four years; during that time his family resided in the dwelling house which he had occupied previously to his sentence. The court held that service in such a case by leaving a copy of the writ of attachment at such dwelling place was a legal service. Grant v. Dalliber, 11 Conn. 234.

ment in a jail or prison, it is usually required that the service be made upon the custodian or committee of such insane person.¹

f. UPON HUSBAND AND WIFE.—It was a rule at common law that in case of service of summons or other process against husband and wife, proper service might be made by service upon the husband alone;² but this rule is so far changed by statute in this country that whenever it is sought by any means to affect the separate property rights of the wife, not only her husband, but she herself, also, must be personally served with process.³

In New York, it is provided for such cases that "a sheriff or jailer, upon whom a paper in an action or special proceeding directed to a prisoner in his custody, is lawfully served, or to whom such a paper is delivered for the prisoner, must within two days thereafter deliver the same to the prisoner with a note therein of the time of the service thereof upon, or receipt thereof by, him." New York Code Civ. Proc., § 131.

It is held that an execution against a person is not a paper within the meaning of this section. In re Johnson, 21 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 172.

1. Cates v. Woodson, 2 Dana (Ky.) 452; New York Code Civ. Proc., § 429; Sacramento Sav. Bank v. Spencer, 53 Cal. 740.

A summons is not properly served on such person by delivering a copy to a relative where she resides. Heller v. Heller, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 194.

See also Sanford v. Sanford, 62 N. Y. 553; In re Heller, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 199; In re Hopper, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 469; Bean v. Haffendorfer, 84 Ky. 685.

Where no guardian was appointed for an insane person, it was held that he must be served personally. Sacramento Sav. Bank v. Spencer, 53 Cal. 740.

But in no case can the service upon the wife be valid as against the husband except when made at his usual place of abode, etc., as prescribed in the regulations concerning substituted service. See infra, this title, Substituted Service. See also Hackettstown Bank v.

Mitchell, 28 N. J. L. 516; Hess v. Cole, 23 N. J. L. 116.

3. Rowland v. Perry, 64 N. Car. 578; Leavitt v. Cruger, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 421; Pigott v. Snell, 59 Ala. 106; Leonard v. Villars, 23 Ill. 322; Covington v. Burleson, 28 Tex. 368; *Jones v. Under this rule it was held in New York that, in an action to foreclose a mortgage given by a husband and wife upon the land of the husband, service of summons upon the husband was sufficient and service upon the wife was unnecessary to bar her dower interest, and that, too, although she was an infant, since it did not relate to her separate estate. Feitner v. Lewis, 119 N. Y. 131; Forte v. Lathrop, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 183; Eckerson v. Vollmer, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 42.

In a suit against J. W. L. and wife, the summons to answer plaintiff's bill was returned "executed and delivered copy of bill to J. W. L." It was held, that only J. W. L. was summoned. Leftwick v. Hamilton, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 310.

In Connecticut, it is held that an acknowledgment of service made by husband and wife, defendants in a suit, on the back of a writ, does not dispense with actual service upon her. Gaylord v. Payne, 3 Conn. 258.

A subpoena in chancery may be served upon a wife by delivery to her husband, a co-defendant, in the manner provided for service by delivery to a person above fifteen years of age, a member of her family, etc. McLane v. Piaggio, 24 Fla. 71; Oglesby v. Sillom, 4 Woods (U. S.) 72.

But when the husband and wife are both sought to be served by leaving an attested copy of the process with them, or at their last and usual place of abode, the process cannot be served by merely leaving one copy for both.

g. UPON AGENTS OR ATTORNEYS.—It is provided in some jurisdictions that proper service upon a defendant may be made by service upon his agent or attorney; but such service is available only when the defendant himself cannot be reached,¹ and in all cases it must clearly appear, either in the petition which accompanies the process or in the officer's return, that the person served was the proper and duly qualified agent of the defendant;² a party cannot be bound by service upon one with whom there is Such copy for both would be service upon neither. Versepuy v. Watson, 12 R. I. 342; Stewart v. Stringer, 41 Mo. 400; 97 Am. Dec. 278; Holliday v. Brown (Neb. 1892), 50 N. W. Rep. 1042; 51 N. W. Rep. 839.

In a foreclosure brought in 1838, the plaintiff's husband was served with subpoenas for himself and plaintiff, who was a minor; it was held that the court acquired jurisdiction to proceed against both, and that she was bound by the decree. Feitner v. Hoeger, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 470; 121 N. Y. 660; Feitner v. Lewis, 119 N. Y. 131; Footte v. Lathrop, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 183; Eckerson v. Vollmer, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 42.

In a foreclosure of a mortgage made by husband and wife on husband's lands to secure husband's debts, service upon husband is good both as to him and to his wife. Nagle v. Taggart, 4 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 144.

In a foreclosure of a purchase-money mortgage, service upon the husband binds the whole estate, except the possibility of the wife surviving him, and even if to this extent it does not fully bind her, the defect will not be a ground for a motion to set aside a judgment. White v. Coulter, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 357.

1. Kamm v. Stark, 1 Sawy. (U. S.) 547; McLamore v. Heffner, 31 Tex. 189; Fisher v. Battaile, 31 Miss. 471; Gilmer v. Bird, 15 Fla. 410; Rossner v. New York Museum Assoc., 20 Hun (N. Y.) 182.

Therefore, a return which states that the officer "being unable to find the defendant at his last and usual place of abode," summoned him by serving his agent, who accepted the summons as agent, does not show a valid service, as the statute permits service on an agent only when there cannot be personal service on the defendant, and when he has no known last and usual place of abode. Fall River v. Riley, 140 Mass. 488.

And where a resident is temporarily absent, leaving an agent, valid service cannot be made upon him by leaving a summons at the last and usual place of the abode of the agent. Holmes v. Fox, 19 Me. 107.

Service made upon one who was duly appointed the agent of non-resident railroad trustees, and recognized by them as such agent, but whose certificate of appointment was not renewed as required by the statute, is a sufficient service to bind such trustees in the same manner as if they had been summoned personally. Hamilton v. Wilder, 31 Vt. 695.

See also Aldige v. Knox, 16 La. Ann. 180; Segee v. Thomas, 3 Blatchf. (U. S.) 11; Frink v. Sly, 4 Wis. 310; Eckert v. Bauert, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 370; Abraham v. North German F. Ins. Co., 37 Fed. Rep. 731 (service on attorney of defendant in reformed bill); Noyes v. Hillier, 65 Mich. 636.

In Iowa, it is held that service upon a defendant's agent is illegal though it was permitted to such agent to appear and consent to judgment. Brown v. Newman, 13 Iowa 546. Such service is not authorized in Arkansas. Smith v. Woolfolk, 115 U. S. 143.

In a proceeding to restrain the prosecution of a suit by a non-resident, service may properly be made upon the attorney of such non-resident. Segee v. Thomas, 3 Blatchf. (U. S.) 11. One named as executrix in a will but over whose appointment a controversy is pending, a special administrator having been appointed, does not so represent the testator as to authorize service upon her of an attachment against the estate. In re Flandrow, 92 N. Y. 256, aff'd 28 Hun (N. Y.) 279.

2. First Municipality v. Christ Church, 3 La. Ann. 453; American Bell Telep. Co. v. Pan Electric Telep. Co., 28 Fed. Rep. 625.

Where the return states that the petition and citation were served on defendants through their agent, A, this no evidence to connect him.¹ It has been held that, in the absence of proof, an attorney will be presumed to have authority to accept service for his client;² but the correctness of this view may be questioned.³

7. Double Service.—It sometimes occurs that the same process is served more than once; in such case it is the general rule that the latter service is of no effect. The rule arises from this: after a summons has been once served, the presumption is that it has performed its functions, and it is thenceforth functus officio, and no subsequent service of it can be valid; and no alias can issue unless the first process has been returned not executed, or not found, etc.⁴

8. Service by Mail.—In some instances service of mesne process may be made by mail. This is statutory and unknown to the

is no evidence of the agency; if the agency is not alleged in the petition, nor proved, plaintiff must be non-suited. Jacobs v. Sartorius, 3 La. Ann. 9; Municipality No. 1 v. Christ Church, 3 La. Ann. 453; Aldige v. Knox, 16 La. Ann. 180; Shampeau v. Connecticut River Lumber Co., 37 Fed. Rep. 771.

For the rule in the United States courts concerning service upon an agent or attorney, see Cortes Co. v. Thannhauser, 9 Fed. Rep. 226; Bartlett v. Sultan of Turkey, 19 Fed. Rep. 346; Lowenstein v. Glidewell, 5 Dill. (U. S.) 325.

Service of summons by leaving copy with defendant's partner with whom he lived before he went abroad on a trading tour, from which he was daily expected to return, and with whom his children were living, was held valid in Bujac v. Morgan, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 258; and in Hamilton v. Wilder, 31 Vt. 695, it is held that service may properly be made on the duly appointed agent of non-resident trustees.

2. Presumption as to Attorney's Authority to Accept Service for Client.—Marling v. Robrecht, 13 W. Va. 440; Goodell v. Ehresnan, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 400. See also Nelson v. Omaley, 6 Me. 218.

An order for defendant to answer or be attached may be served upon his solicitor. Stafford v. Brown, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 360.

3. See First Municipality v. Christ Church, 3 La. Ann. 453; Blake v. Baker, 1 R. I. 285 (service on special attorney held insufficient).

4. Thus, if a party be served with summons out of the district, and afterwards served with summons in the district, for the purpose of shortening the time allowed him to answer, the second service is an absolute nullity. Mayenbaum v. Murphy, 5 Nev. 383. See also, upon the general rule, Stevens v. Thompson, 5 Kan. 305; Dresser v. Wood, 15 Kan. 344. Compare Central, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, 68 Tex. 49; 28 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 50.

This rule is partly borne out by the case of Bogue v. Prentis, where there were two writs of summons simultaneously issued in the same case by different officers. The plaintiff in error, in a record that exhibited them only as allied proceedings in one case, was not allowed to claim that they began two distinct suits, if only one was practically instituted. The court further decided that such defect of procedure was within the statute of amendments. Bogue v. Prentis, 47 Mich. 124.

An injunction and a subpoena may be served upon a defendant at the same time, and such service may be made by the sheriff of a county other than that from which the writs issued. Thebaut v. Canova, 11 Fla. 143.

In Case of Final Process.—Where more than one service is made in case of final process, the rule stated in the text invariably applies. See ATTACHMENT, vol. 1, p. 926; EXECUTION, vol. 7, p. 143-5. See also Averill v. Steamer Hartford, 2 Cal. 308; Dubois v. Harcourt, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 41.

common law, and, as in other cases of departure from the common law, it must be strictly followed. It is used almost entirely to supplement service by publication. Whether such service is allowed in any special State, and the manner and effect of it, can only be determined by a consultation of the statutes.¹ Generally to perfect service by mail, the summons or other process must be inclosed in an envelope,² addressed to the defendant at his proper place of residence,³ and mailed, postage prepaid.⁴

Such service is complete from the time the process to be served is deposited in the post-office at the residence of the party making the service. When thus deposited and properly inclosed, addressed, and posted, the party to whom it is addressed incurs the risk of the failure of the mail.⁵

1. See also 4 Wait's Pr. 619-20; 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.) 839; Bausman v. Tilley, 46 Minn. 66 (service by mail not sufficient); Stacy v. Jefferson Co., 69 Wis. 215; Likens v. McCormick, 39 Wis. 313; Sherry v. Gilmore, 58 Wis. 324; Hog's Back, etc., Min. Co. v. New Basil, etc., Min. Co., 63 Cal. 121; Marcele v. Saltzman, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 205; Steinic v. Bell, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 172 (proof of mailing, etc.); NOTICE, vol. 16, p. 825. Thus, it is held in Mississippi, that courts may direct service of an order, directing a defendant to appear and defend, to be made by mail upon a non-resident defendant—as well as published; and upon such summons, if a decree be entered against such defendant by default, it will not be void as for non-service of summons. Wilson v. Basket, 47 Miss. 637.

Where service is made by mail, it must appear that the conditions exist which authorize such service. Clark v. Adams, 33 Mich. 159; Marcele v. Saltzman, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 205 (service by mail held invalid).

A statute providing that, when service is made by mail, the time shall be double that prescribed in other cases, can be applied only to notices of an act to be done in the future; it has no application to a notice that an act has already been done. It cannot aid service of a notice of appeal, mailed on the evening of the last day allowed for appealing, and not received till some days after the time has expired. Stevens v. Wheeler, 43 Wis. 91.

Service of papers by mail is not vitiated by the fact that the envelope containing them bore a special request—"Return, if not called for in five days, to," etc., unless proof is made that, in consequence of the papers being returned as directed, the person to be served failed to receive them. Gaffney v. Bigelow, 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 311.

3. Foley v. Connelley, 9 Iowa 240; Aldige v. Knox, 16 La. Ann. 180.

4. Unless the postage is prepaid, the party to whom the papers are addressed may refuse to take them from the office, and his omission to do so is the default of the party mailing the papers. 4 Wait's Pr. 619-20; Anonymous, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 87; 1 Hill (N. Y.) 217.

It is held in an English case that sending process by the post in a letter which the defendant refuses to receive is not a good service, although the refusal may have been willful and accompanied with a long avoidance of service. Redpath v. Williams, 3 Bing. 443; 11 Moore 333. Compare, however, Aldred v. Hicks, 5 Taunt. 186.

5. 4 Wait's Pr. 622; Schenck v. McKie, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 246; Radcliff v. Van Benthuyssen, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 67. And it is said that, to constitute proper service by mail, the mailing must always be at the place of residence of the attorney or other party making the service. Van Aernam v. Winslow, 37 Minn. 514.

In one case, however, it is said that the delivery of process sealed up in a letter, in the absence of the person to whom it is addressed, is no service, except from the time when the letter is opened. Arrowsmith v. Ingle, 3 Taunt. 234. For other cases on this subject, see Rhodes v. Innes, 1 D. P.

9. Distinction Between Defective Service and Total Want of Service.—There is a distinction to be observed between a total want of service and an actual service which is defective merely as to the effect on the subsequent proceedings. In the one case the judgment is void, while in the other the defective service may give actual notice, so that the judgment may be valid until set aside in direct proceedings, and valid as against a collateral contract.¹

VI. PRESUMPTION OF PROPER SERVICE.—There is a presumption in favor of the regularity of judicial proceedings,² and this presumption becomes conclusive after the lapse of time without objection being made.³

In Illinois, it has been held repeatedly that a defect of process or service is cured by a recital in the decree of the court that the defendant was duly served;⁴ but it is doubtful whether this view

Thus a service made on Sunday is merely an irregularity which may be pleaded in abatement or set aside on motion, but it does not render a judgment by default either void or reversible. Comer v. Jackson, 50 Ala. 384. So where a return is required to be made under oath, the omission to so make it does not affect its validity unless special objection is made. Forbes v. McHaffie, 32 Neb. 742. Where a service is defective in having been made too near the return day, the proper remedy is by motion to set aside the service and not to dismiss the action. Foster v. Markland, 37 Kan. 32.

2. Sander v. Harris, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 628; Wilson v. Holt, 83 Ala. 528; 3 Am. St. Rep. 768; State v. Still, 11 Mo. App. 283; Dodge v. Butler, 42 N. J. L. 370; Kirby v. Gates, 71 Iowa 100; Murfree on Sheriffs, § 846. See PRESUMPTIONS, vol. 19, p. 38.

3. Thus after the lapse of twenty years, no objection having been made, it will be conclusively presumed that defendant was properly served, although the record fails to show service. Wilson v. Holt, 83 Ala. 528; 3 Am. St. Rep. 768; Clyburn v. Reynolds, 31 S. Car. 91; Best v. Vanhook (Ky. 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 119.

Wolfer, 124 Ill. 435. The same view is taken in Ford v. Delta, etc., Land Co., 43 Fed. Rep. 181. And it is said that where a decree recites that defendants were duly served, but the service, as shown by the record, is insufficient, it will be presumed in favor of such finding that a second summons was issued and served to the subsequent term. Hemmer v. Wolfer, 124 Ill. 435.

A decree of a court below which recites that the defendant was duly served, cures a defect in the summons in not stating the date of service. Rivard v. Gardner, 39 Ill. 125.

Where there is a finding by the court that a defendant had been duly served with process, such finding cannot be impeached by the evidence of such defendant. And if the impeachment is in a collateral proceeding, the finding can only be contradicted by other portions of the record. Russell v. Baptist Theological Union, 73 Ill. 337; Davis v. Dresback, 81 Ill. 393; Botsford v. O'Conner, 57 Ill. 72; Hunter v. Stoneburner, 92 Ill. 75; Freeman v. Carr, 34 Ill. App. 646.

Where a decree recites that publication of notice was duly made, this will be deemed sufficient, in the appellate court, unless something in the record shows that the fact was positively otherwise. Gilchrist v. Cannon, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 581.

An entry by the clerk, of proof of publication of notice, is not conclusive; but a finding by the court, of due service, will, on appeal, raise a presumption of such service, sufficient to give jurisdiction. State v. Elgin, 11 Iowa 216.

Where the record shows a particular is sustained elsewhere, seeing that such a recital is merely a formal part of the decree.¹

VII. PARTIES PRIVILEGED FROM SERVICE OF PROCESS² (see ARREST³)

—1. Ambassadors, Public Ministers, etc.—According to the law of nations, ambassadors and public ministers are exempt from the jurisdiction of the courts of the country to which they are sent, and are, therefore, privileged from service of the process of such courts.⁴ The exception does not extend to consuls, for while it may once have been true that they were exempt, it is not so now.⁵

2. Legislators, Judges, Officers.—Members of Congress and of State legislatures are generally exempt from service of process during the session, and just before and after.⁶ A similar exemption applies sometimes to judges, particularly those of the higher service it will be presumed that no other service was made. Godfrey v. Valentine, 39 Minn. 336.

1. In Coffee v. Gates, 28 Ark. 43, where it is maintained that the mere recital, in the formal part of a judgment or decree, that the defendant was legally served with notice, is not a necessary part thereof; the record made by the official indorsement of return upon the writ is the proper evidence of due service, and, when it appears from such return that no sufficient service has been had, the court acquires no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant. See also Settlemyer v. Sullivan, 97 U. S. 444; Weems v. Raiford (Miss. 1890), 8 So. Rep. 260; Oxford Iron Co. v. Spradley, 42 Ala. 24.

In Norton v. Meader, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 618, it is said that a recital in the record is only prima facie proof of service.

2. Exemption Does Not Apply to Criminal Process.—In all the cases to be mentioned, it must be borne in mind that the exemption extends only to civil process and does not embrace criminal process. See ARREST, vol. 1, p. 724.

The rule has an exception in case of ambassadors; they are free from all process except that of their own country. See AMBASSADORS, vol. 3, pp. 772-75.

3. Arrest, vol. 1, p. 724.

4. Kent's Com. (13th ed.), pp. 39, et seq.; Vattel's Law of Nations, bk. 4; AMBASSADORS, vol. 1, p. 524; CONSULS AND AMBASSADORS, vol. 3, pp. 772, et seq.

5. 1 Kent's Com. (13th ed.) 44-45; CONSULS AND AMBASSADORS, vol. 3, pp. 774, 775, and cases cited. Vattel lays down the doctrine that this immunity is as applicable to consuls as to other ministers of foreign states. Law of Nations, bk. 4, ch. 2. But the authorities just cited sustain another doctrine.

6. U. S. Const., art. 1, § 6; Lyll v. Goodwin, 4 McLean (U. S.) 29 (judge); Tillinghast v. Carr, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 152; King v. Coit, 4 Day (Conn.) 129 (privilege extends to service of writ of error, though the writ is not returnable until after the end of the session); Cook v. Gibbs, 3 Mass. 193; 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.) 826; Sperry v. Willard, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 32 (counselor of court exempt from arrest during term of court); Stimson's Stat. Law, p. 68, § 273; Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 122.

In some States the provisions in this regard are very broad, including all kinds of civil process, mesne as well as final, while in others they are much more narrow. For this, the statutes of each particular State must be consulted. See Stimson's Stat. Law, p. 68, § 273.

In Kentucky, this privilege has been held to extend only to cases where the process is a civil process requiring bail. Catlett v. Morton, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 122; Johnston v. Offutt, 4 Met. (Ky.) 19.

Remedy.—The proper way in which one privileged from service must avail himself of his privilege is by motion to set aside the service. Williams v. McGrade, 13 Minn. 174; Wood v. Kinsman, 5 Vt. 588; and such motion must be made promptly. Pollard v. Union Pac. R. Co., 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 70; Lederer v. Adams, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 603; Bucklin v. Strickler, 32 Neb. 602 (technical objections to service must be clearly stated).

courts,¹ and sometimes to persons in the military service,² and to officers of election.³

3. Persons Under Another Process.—A witness who has been brought into a jurisdiction outside of that of his residence, by a subpoena to testify, is generally exempt from service of process in another proceeding.⁴

1. Judges.—A justice of the supreme court of a State, privileged from arrest, cannot be served with process of summons while engaged in the discharge of his official duties, or while traveling to or from his court; and such writ of summons will be vacated on motion. Such justice may, however, be served with process of summons when not engaged in the discharge of his judicial duties, or actually traveling to or from his court. Lyell v. Goodwin, 4 McLean (U. S.) 44.

The mode of redress when the privilege is infringed is by a motion to the court whence the process issued. Lyell v. Goodwin, 4 McLean (U. S.) 29. See also King v. Coit, 4 Day (Conn.) 129; Harris v. Grantham, 1 N. J. L. 142.

2. Persons in Military Service.—For instances, see Gregg v. Summers, 1 McCord (S. Car.) 461; Williams v. McGrade, 13 Minn. 174; Hickman v. Armstrong, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 177; Greening v. Sheffield, Minor (Ala.) 276; Davidson v. Barclay, 63 Pa. St. 406.

An act staying civil process against those in the military service for a definite particular time is not unconstitutional. Britenbach v. Bush, 44 Pa. St. 313; 84 Am. Dec. 442.

The time, however, must be definite and not unreasonable. Williams' Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 220; Sayres v. Com., 88 Pa. St. 308.

3. Electors.—But the service of a declaration on a defendant in a suit, commenced by the filing and service of a declaration, is not a violation of the statute of New York, forbidding the service of civil process on an elector during the time appointed for the election of State and county officers. Corlies v. Holmes, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 681.

Attorneys.—As to exemption of attorneys, see an isolated case, Secor v. Bell, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 52. Revised Statutes of Illinois, ch. 12, § 8, exempts attorneys from arrest while attending court. It does not extend, however, to exemption from service of summons in a civil suit, even though the attorney be from a foreign State attending court in Illinois. Robbins v. Lincoln, 27 Fed. Rep. 342.

4. Witnesses.—The doctrine is thus stated by Mr. Murfree in his work on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 122a: "Witnesses in giving testimony in a foreign State in good faith are held to be exempt from summons in civil cases in going, while in attendance, and for a reasonable time thereafter, in which to return to the State of their residence." Citing Wilson v. Donaldson, 117 Ind. 356; Atchison v. Morris, 11 Biss. (U. S.) 191; In re Healey, 53 Vt. 694; 38 Am. Rep. 713; Matthews v. Tufts, 87 N. Y. 568. "The immunity does not depend upon statutory provisions, but is necessary for the due administration of justice, the object being to encourage witnesses from abroad to come forward voluntarily and testify, since non-residents cannot be compelled to attend." Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118; Massey v. Colville, 45 N. J. L. 119; 46 Am. Rep. 754; Merrill v. George, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 332; Sanford v. Chase, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 382.

And the doctrine of the text is sustained by many cases. Meekins v. Smith, 1 H. Bl. 636; Atchison v. Morris, 11 Biss. (U. S.) 191; Randall v. Gurney, 3 B. & Ald. 252; 5 E. C. L. 271; Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118; Shaver v. Letherby (Mich. 1889), 41 N. W. Rep. 677; Hollender v. Hall, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 604; Day v. Harris, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 628; Kaufman v. Kennedy, 25 Fed. Rep. 785; Small v. Montgomery, 23 Fed. Rep. 707; Sheehan v. Bradford, etc., R. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 790; Brooks v. Farwell, 2 McCrary (U. S.) 220; Martin v. Ramsey, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 260; Matthews v. Puffer, 20 Blatchf. (U. S.) 233; 1 Greenl. Ev., § 316, note.

The exemption applies, although the witness attends voluntarily and without a subpoena. Dungan ads. Miller, 37 N. J. L. 182; Massey v. Colville, 45 N. J. L. 119; 46 Am. Rep. 754; Wilson

This exemption applies more particularly to witnesses who are non-residents of the State into which they thus come, but is not confined wholly to such witnesses.¹ So the parties to the action are generally exempt from service in the jurisdiction to which they go to attend the trial of the cause.² It has been questioned

v. Donaldson, 117 Ind. 356; Huddeson v. Prizer, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 65; Taylor on Ev., § 1330; 1 Greenl. on Ev., § 316; 1 Tidd's Pr. 195-6; Walpole v. Alexander, 3 Doug. 45; Norris v. Beach, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 294; Dixon v. Ely, 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 557. Compare Christian v. Williams (Mo. 1892), 20 S. W. Rep. 96; Fletcher v. Franko, 15 N. Y. Supp. 674.

In the case of Pope v. Negus (Supreme Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 795, the defendant came into the State to testify in two cases that were on the calendars in two different courts. Upon the call of the calendars, both cases were set for other days, but the witness did not appear to have been notified of the fact. It was held that the defendant by remaining in the State during the day's session of the court did not waive his privilege as witness from service of process.

The exemption applies so far as to exempt one from service in a suit not against himself, but against a corporation of which he is the chief officer or managing agent, etc. Sheehan v. Bradford, etc., R. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 790; FOREIGN CORPORATIONS, vol. 8, p. 384.

The privilege of the witness is not affected by the fact that he is also a party to the suit and has been served with summons in that capacity. Christian v. Williams, 35 Mo. App. 297; reversed 20 S. W. Rep. 96.

But the exemption of a witness or party to a suit from service does not extend to service of a subpoena to testify in the same cause on which he is giving attendance. Norris v. Hassler, 23 Fed. Rep. 581.

Where A, of Minnesota, while in attendance at court in Iowa, telegraphed home to a sheriff to attach B's goods, whereupon B at once sued A in Iowa, it was held that A could not plead the privilege of a witness in attendance at a trial, the suit against him being a natural and necessary consequence of his own act. Nichols v. Horton, 14 Fed. Rep. 327.

Exemption May be Waived.—Exemption is a mere personal privilege which may be waived by the party entitled to it. Gracie v. Palmer, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 699.

Such Service Voidable Only.—In the case of Massey v. Colville, 45 N. J. L. 119; 46 Am. Rep. 754, it is said that service upon the resident of a State while voluntarily attending as a witness, is not void, but the court may set it aside, or change the venue, or grant other appropriate relief. See also Rogers v. Bullock, 2 N. J. L. 516.

1. In many cases it has been held that the privilege is not confined to witnesses who are non-residents of the State, but extends also to non-residents of the county or of the jurisdiction of a particular court. Gregg v. Summer, 21 Ill. App. 110; Larned v. Griffin, 12 Fed. Rep. 590; Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124; 23 Am. Rep. 35; Matthews v. Tufts, 87 N. Y. 568; Thorp v. Adams, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 603; Thompson's Case, 122 Mass. 428; 23 Am. Rep. 370; Jacobson v. Hosmer, 76 Mich. 234; Christian v. Williams, 35 Mo. App. 297.

But in New York, it is held to apply only to non-resident witnesses, and therefore, if a witness is a resident of the State, the fact that the summons was served on him while he was in attendance at the court is not ground for setting aside the service. Jenkins v. Smith, 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 171; Frisbie v. Young, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 474; Sheehan v. Bradford, etc., R. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 790; Hopkins v. Coburn, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 292.

2. Meekins v. Smith, 1 H. Bl. 636; 1 Greenl. Ev., § 316, note. Compare Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 377.

The exemption applies to a non-resident creditor attending proceedings in bankruptcy. Matthews v. Tufts, 87 N. Y. 568; Tribune Assoc. v. Sleeman, 12 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 20; Ex parte List, 2 Ves. & B. 373. Otherwise, as to a resident party. Jenkins v. Smith, 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 171; Frisbie v. Young, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 476.

Thus, it is said: "This privilege is granted in all cases where the attendance of the party or witness is given sometimes whether this exemption applies to both plaintiff and defendant or to the defendant only, but on principle, as well as by the weight of authority, it seems that there is no distinction.¹

And so of those who have been brought into the jurisdiction by a compulsory or criminal process.² The principle is extended in any matter pending before a lawful tribunal, having jurisdiction of the cause." 1 Greenl. on Ev. (14th ed.), § 317.

That the privilege belongs to defendants in an action is unquestioned. Wilson Sewing Mach. Co. v. Wilson, 22 Fed. Rep. 803; 51 Conn. 595; Ellis v. De Garmo (R. I. 1892), 24 Atl. Rep. 579; Wilson v. Donaldson, 117 Ind. 356 (party defendant attending trial to testify in his own case, privileged); Christian v. Williams, 35 Mo. App. 297 (Mo. 1892), 20 S. W. Rep. 96; Andrews v. Lembeck, 46 Ohio St. 38; Parker v. Hotchkiss, 1 Wall Jr. (C. C.) 269; Plimpton v. Winslow, 20 Blatchf. (U. S.) 82; Dungan ads. Miller, 37 N. J. L. 182; Juneau Bank v. McSpedan, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 64.

One who goes into another jurisdiction merely to take depositions is not exempt from service. Greer v. Young, 120 Ill. 184 (reversing 17 Ill. App. 106); 26 Am. Law Reg. (N. S.) 372 note, 377, et seq.; Parker v. Manco, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 519. In Finch v. Gallagher (Supreme Ct.), 12 N. Y. Supp. 487, it is held that such person is exempt, but that he loses his privilege by remaining several days after he has finished his business.

One who is a mere spectator in court is, of course, not entitled to claim the privilege. McIntire v. McIntire, 5 Mackey (D. C.) 344.

1. Extends to Both Parties.—In the case of Halsey v. Stewart, 4 N. J. L. 366, the court, by Southard, J., after holding that the exemption extended in favor of the plaintiff as well as the defendant, went on to say: "Courts of justice ought everywhere to be open, accessible, free from interruption, and to cast a perfect protection around every man who necessarily approaches them. The citizen in every claim of right which he exhibits, and any defense which he is obliged to make, should be permitted to approach them, not only without subjecting himself to evil, but even free from incumbrance or hindrance." And this opinion is upheld in many cases. Shaver v. Letherby (Mich. 1889), 41 N. W. Rep.

677; Huddeson v. Prizer, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 65; Cole v. Hawkins, 2 Stra. 1094; First Nat. Bank v. Ames, 39 Minn. 179. See also Ellis v. Reynolds, 35 Fed. Rep. 394.

This doctrine is also well sustained in the case of Andrews v. Lembeck, 46 Ohio St. 38, the court, by Owen, C. J., holding that a person attending the hearing of an application for an injunction, in a case in which he was interested as a party, in a county other than that of his residence, was privileged from the service of summons while attending and while going to and from the place of hearing. It was there observed: "This question is one which profoundly concerns the free and unhampered administration of justice in the courts. That suitors should feel free and safe at all times to attend within any jurisdiction outside of their own upon judicial proceedings in which they are concerned, and which require their presence, without incurring the liability of being picked up and held to answer to some other adverse judicial proceeding against them, is so far a rule of public policy that it has received almost universal recognition wherever the common law is known and administered." Citing Lyell v. Goodwin, 4 McLean (U. S.) 29; Matthew v. Tufts, 87 N. Y. 568; Seaver v. Robinson, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 622, and other cases. "The contention that the application of this principle should be or is confined to cases where the suitor is served with process while attending upon judicial proceedings without his State, is not supported by sufficient force of reason to justify the distinction. The cases may differ in degree but not in the principle involved." See also Compton v. Wilder, 40 Ohio St. 130 (extradition); Parker v. Hotchkiss, 1 Wall, Jr. (U. S.) 269. Compare, however, Bishop v. Vose, 27 Com. 1; Baldwin v. Emerson, 16 R. I. 304; Capwell v. Sipe (R. I. 1891), 23 Atl. Rep. 14.

2. Parties Under Criminal Process.—Palmer v. Rowan, 21 Neb. 452; 59 Am. Rep. 844; Christian v. Williams (Mo. 1892), 20 S. W. Rep. 96; Byler v.

to property as well as to the person, where the jurisdiction of another court has attached to the property.¹

The examination of the person, witness, or party, exists not only while he is in attendance upon the court on whose process he comes, but also for a reasonable time before and after; that is, eundo, morando, et redeundo.² The exemption embraces not only freedom from arrest, but also from all kinds of civil process.³

4. Parties Decoyed.—Where a party has been decoyed into another jurisdiction in order that he may be served with process, it

Jones, 79 Mo. 261; 22 Mo. App. 623; Jacobson v. Hosmer, 76 Mich. 234; Murphy v. Sweezy (Supreme Ct.), 2 N. Y. Supp. 241; Benninghoff v. Os- well, 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 235.

And in this case, "criminal process" includes extradition and requisition. Compton v. Wilder, 40 Ohio St. 130; Moleter v. Sinnen, 76 Wis. 308.

In Illinois, it has been held how- ever, that although a person cannot be brought by force into the jurisdiction of a court on a criminal charge, and be amenable to its process in a civil suit; yet a creditor who had nothing to do with such forcible bringing in may have service of process in his civil action against the debtor. Nich- ols v. Goodheart, 5 Ill. App. 574.

A citizen of Massachusetts was in- dicted in the federal court in Wiscon- sin, and under an arrangement with the United States attorney that he might within a prescribed time appear without arrest and plead to the in- dictment and give bail, he came to Wisconsin for that purpose. It was held that his appearance in court was compulsory, and that during that time he was exempt from liability to civil process. U. S. v. Bridgman, 9 Biss. (U. S.) 221.

But a person for whom requisition has been made to attend court in an- other State, but who has never been in the custody of any officer of the State, must be supposed to be in it voluntarily, and therefore amenable to suit. King v. Phillips, 70 Ga. 409.

It is held in New York, that a de- fendant, in order to establish the ob- jection that he was brought by criminal proceedings and against his will within the civil jurisdiction of the courts of this State, must establish two things, viz.: that the criminal pro- ceedings were instigated by the cred- itor or person who attempts to subject him to the civil jurisdiction, and that such creditor or person was guilty of a wrongful act in the instigation of the criminal proceedings. Martin v. Wood- hall, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. 439.

1. Property Under Process of Another Court.—It is a well settled principle that property in possession in one court is not liable to seizure under process of any other court. Tua v. Carriere, 117 U. S. 201; Heidritter v. Elizabeth Oil Cloth Co., 112 U. S. 294; Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176; Freeman v. Howe, 24 How. (U. S.) 450; Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. (U. S.) 583; Pulliam v. Osborne, 17 How. (U. S.) 471; Peck v. Jenness, 7 How. (U. S.) 612; Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. (U. S.) 4; Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 400.

2. Duration of the Exemption.—The time during which the exemption ap- plies is that required for his attendance at the court, together with a reasonable time before and after. Exactly what is a reasonable time depends, of course, upon the peculiar circumstances of each individual case. 1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 316; Gregg v. Sumner, 21 Ill. App. 110; Muller v. Higgins, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 297; Bolgians v. Gilbert Lock Co., 73 Md. 132 (pro- vided he be guilty of no unreasonable delay); Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118; Palmer v. Rowan, 21 Neb. 452; 59 Am. Rep. 844; Moleter v. Sin- nen, 76 Wis. 308; Jacobson v. Hosmer, 76 Mich. 234; Andrews v. Lemback, 46 Ohio St. 38; People v. Judge, 40 Mich. 729. An unreasonable time oc- curred in Randall v. Gurney, 3 B. & Ald. 252; 5 E. C. L. 271; Marks v. La Société, 19 N. Y. Supp. 410.

3. What Process the Exemption In- cludes.—There is some difference of opinion as to whether the privilege of witnesses and parties to the action ex- empts them from service of all kinds of process, summons as well as arrest. In 1 Greenl. Ev., § 316, it is said that "It is deemed a contempt to serve pro- cess upon a witness even by summons, if it be done in the immediate and con-is universally held that service under such circumstances is in the nature of a fraud, and therefore invalid and of no effect.¹ The structive presence of the court upon which he is attending, though any service elsewhere without personal restraint, it seems, is good." And the same view is taken in the case of Pollard v. Union Pacific R. Co., 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 70.

But the more correct view seems to be that the exemption includes all process, as is held in the case of Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 541, where the court, by Cooley, C. J., observes: "Public policy, the due administration of justice and protection to parties and witnesses alike demand it (i. e., the exemption). There would be no question about it if the suit had been commenced by arrest; for the reasons for exemption are applicable, though with much less force, in other cases also." This view is sustained in Matthews v. Tufts, 87 N. Y. 568; Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124; 23 Am. Rep. 35; Van Liew v. Johnson, 6 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 648; Dungan ads. Miller, 37 N. J. L. 182; Halsey v. Stewart, 4 N. J. L. 182; First Nat. Bank v. Ames, 39 Minn. 179; Shaver v. Letherby (Mich. 1889), 41 N. W. Rep. 677; Christian v. Williams, 35 Mo. App. 297; Martin v. Ramsey, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 260 (subpoena in chancery); Gregg v. Sumner, 21 Ill. App. 110; Larned v. Griffin, 12 Fed. Rep. 590.

Does Not Protect from Criminal Process.—The exemption certainly does not extend so far as to exempt any party from arrest on criminal process. ARREST, vol. 1, p. 724, and cases cited.

1. Blair v. Turtle, 1 McCrary (U. S.) 372; Wood v. Wood, 78 Ky. 624; Wyckoff v. Packard, 20 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 420; Hevener v. Heist, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 274; Nichols v. Goodheart, 5 Ill. App. 574; Nason v. Esten, 2 R. I. 337; Baker v. Wales, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 331; Williams v. Reed, 29 N. J. L. 385; Metcalf v. Clark, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 45.

To serve process upon one who has thus been decoyed by false representations into a jurisdiction is an abuse of judicial process. Chubbuck v. Cleveland, 37 Minn. 466; Van Horn v. Great Western Mfg. Co., 37 Kan. 523. And this is true, although the design of the representations was to obtain his arrest upon a criminal charge, and the institution of the civil action was an afterthought. Townsend v. Smith, 47 Wis. 623; 32 Am. Rep. 793.

The doctrine is thus stated in New York: "Where the evidence is sufficient to show that deceit has been used for the purpose of bringing a person within the jurisdiction of the court, that he may be served with a summons and thus subjected to an action, the service of the summons will be set aside and vacated as irregular." Baker v. Wales, 45 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 137; 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 331; Wyckoff v. Packard, 20 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 420; Allen v. Wharton, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 622. See also Lagrange's Case, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 333, note. Dunham v. Cressy, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 641. Consult, also, Steiger v. Bonn, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 496 (forged telegram case).

The doctrine of the Indiana courts is the same. Duringer v. Moschino, 93 Ind. 495.

But where one has legitimately and voluntarily come within the jurisdiction, the fact that service is obtained upon him afterwards by fraud, trick or device, is not ground for holding such service invalid. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 377. Compare Dunham v. Cressy, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 641.

An inventor having assigned his invention to third parties, invited the defendant, who had infringed the patented invention, into the jurisdiction where the assignees resided. The purpose of the visit was for the settlement of the difficulty arising out of the infringement. The assignees were ignorant of the intended visit, until called upon by the inventor and defendant. At the close of the interview the defendant was served with process for infringement of the patent, by the assignees; but there was no collusion between the latter and the inventor. The process was issued under section 11 of the Judiciary Act of 1789, providing that a party defendant found in the district where the process is issued, although not a resident thereof, may lawfully be served with process. It was held that in such a case there was not sufficient evidence to dismiss the action on the ground that the defendant, through deceit, was enticed into the jurisdic-same principles apply to a case of replevin where property is fraudulently decoyed into another jurisdiction.¹

VIII. WAIVER OF IRREGULARITIES OR OF SERVICE—1. In General.—The whole object of mesne process being to inform the defendant of the action to be commenced against him, in order to prevent his being taken by surprise, or being proceeded against without having been heard, it is manifest that whatever irregularities may occur, either in the form of the process or in the manner of service, may be waived by the defendant's appearance; indeed, service itself may be entirely waived.² For similar reasons, all irregularities or defects in the manner of service, of whatever nature, can be waived by a written acknowledgment of service.³

tion where the plaintiffs lived. Union Sugar Refinery v. Mathiesson, 2 Cliff. (U. S.) 304.

There are a few cases, however, which hold that service of process regular on its face is not void merely because the defendant was induced to come within the jurisdiction of the court by a letter inviting him there for another purpose, where no injury is occasioned thereby. Hanna v. Pearl, 129 Pa. St. 588; Duringer v. Moschino, 93 Ind. 495; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Davidson, 18 Oregon 57. Compare Greer v. Young, 120 Ill. 184.

1. Moynahan v. Wilson, 2 Flip. (U. S.) 130.

2. This principle is beyond controversy, having been settled by many cases in every jurisdiction. Penrice v. Wallis, 37 Miss. 172; Bustamente v. Bescher, 43 Miss. 172; State v. Clark, 44 Vt. 636; Cropsey v. Wiggenhorn, 3 Neb. 108; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Stover, 57 Ind. 559; New York Code Civ. Proc., § 424; Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 453; *Edwards v. Exceptions.—It is held, however, that an appearance after a default on the service of a void summons, and making an unsuccessful motion to set aside the default, and contesting the damages, will not waive the error in the invalidity of the summons. Briggs v. Sneghan, 45 Ind. 14. And it is held that a voluntary appearance or acknowledgment of service made by defendant after judgment against him is not equivalent to a personal service as required by Code of South Carolina, § 162. State v. Cohen, 13 S. Car. 198.

The distinction between a general and special appearance is to be made, for an appearance by defendant in an action will not be held to waive defects in service of process unless a general appearance is entered, or some act amounting to an appearance is done, not referring to the particular right or remedy to be saved by a special appearance. Muller v. Higgins, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 297.

3. This doctrine is also well established, though it has more complexities. Earbee v. Ware, 9 Port. (Ala.) 291; Cheney v. Harding, 21 Neb. 68; Lewis v. State Bank, 4 Ark. 443; Hendrix v. Cawthorn, 71 Ga. 742; Battle

2. By Appearance.—That the defendant's appearance in court waives all irregularities of process is undoubted. The difficulty lies in defining what is an "appearance," such as is sufficient to constitute a waiver of process. Properly, it is any pleading to the merits of the cause, or any proceeding for a purpose other than to take advantage of the defective process.¹ If defendant appears in order to take advantage of a defective process or

Instances of Appearance.—Following are cases in which it has been determined what proceedings constitute an appearance.

Application for Continuance.—In Thayer v. Dove, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 567, the defendant moved for a dismissal of the suit, on the ground that the service of the summons was insufficient. This motion being overruled, the defendant moved for and obtained a continuance. The cause, on the day to which it was continued, was tried, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff. The defendant appealed to the circuit court, and there moved for a dismissal of the suit, on the same ground on which his motion to dismiss before the justice was made. It was held that the defendant, by moving for and obtaining the continuance, waived the objection as to the service of the summons. The same principle was upheld in Peters v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 59 Mo. 406; Ard v. State, 114 Ind. 542; Harvey v. Skipwith, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 410; State v. McCullough, 3 Nev. 202. Compare Bell v. Good, 19 N. Y. Supp. 693.

And filing an affidavit for continuance is such an appearance as waives defects in process. Stockdale v. Buckingham, 11 Iowa 45; Southern Bank v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank, 27 Ga. 252.

But a mere entry in the record that a cause was continued by consent of the parties does not constitute a waiver of service, and will not give the court jurisdiction if the process is defective. Snow v. Grace, 25 Ark. 570. Compare Womack v. Shelton, 31 Tex. 592.

Putting in a Demurrer.—After filing a demurrer the defendant cannot object that the process or service was defective. Beard v. Smith, 9 Iowa 50; Hust v. Conn, 12 Ind. 257; Williams v. Miller, 1 Wash. 88; Large v. Bristol Steam Tow Boat Co., 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 394. Compare State Ins. Co. v. Granger, 62 Iowa 272.

And also a motion to dismiss in the nature of a demurrer waives defects of service. Townsend v. Stoddard, 26 Ga. 430.

Filing a Plea.—The filing of a plea by the defendant is a waiver of defect or irregularity in the service of process. Davis v. Patty, 42 Miss. 509; Bowin v. Sutherlin, 44 Ala. 278; Smith v. Gibson, 83 Ala. 284; Fitzgerald, etc., Const. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 137 U. S. 98.

It may be a plea to the merits or otherwise. Sears v. Starbird, 78 Cal. 225; O'Halloran v. Sullivan, 1 Greene (Iowa) 75; Whitaker v. Patton, 1 Port. (Ala.) 9; Briggs v. Humphrey, 1 Allen (Mass.) 371; Gilson v. Powers, 16 Ill. 355; Gay v. Hanger, 3 Ark. 436.

An entry of record, "Came the parties by their attorneys, and defendant waives all service of writ, pleading, etc.," estops the defendant to object to the want of a writ, pleading, or want of authority in attorney of record. Walker v. King, 1 How. (Miss.) 17.

Likewise where a non-resident defendant is proceeded against as the statute directs by advertisement, and he afterwards appears and is allowed to plead, his appearance and answer constitute a waiver of objection to any irregularity of the previous proceedings. Stone v. Welling, 14 Mich. 514.

In McGuire v. Church, 49 Conn.

248, a factorizing process, with the officer's return of service on the garnishee, was signed with the officer's name by his clerk, and left by the officer with defendant. It was held by the court: 1. That the signature was invalid, rendering the service defective and the attachment void; 2. That defendant's appearing in court and pleading to the merits was a waiver of service upon himself personally, but did not validate the attachment.

If, however, a party have not legal notice of the suit, his appearance for the purpose of taking an exception, by plea in abatement, or otherwise, is not a waiver of the ground of exception. Tingley v. Bateman, 10 Mass. 343; Gardner v. Barker, 12 Mass. 36; Bernard v. Brewer, 2 Wash. (Va.) 76; Wheeler v. Lampman, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 481; Malcom v. Rogers, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 1.

Putting in an Answer.—Sprague v. Sprague, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 331; State v. Bacon Club, 44 Mo. App. 86; Com. v. Helms, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 410 (quo warranto case). Compare Christian v. Williams, 35 Mo. App. 297 (Mo. 1892), 20 S. W. Rep. 96.

And if defendants answer without indicating wherein the service of summons upon them was defective, any objection on the ground of such defect is waived. Randall v. Meredith (Tex. 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 170; Ahner v. New York, etc., R. Co., 14 N. Y. Supp. 365.

Entering Into a Recognizance.—Where a defendant is arrested and brought into court, and at his own suggestion enters into a recognizance for his appearance at a subsequent time, he waives all defects and irregularities of the warrant and arrest. Junction City v. Keefe, 40 Kan. 275; Ard v. State, 114 Ind. 542.

Securing a Change of Venue.—Radcliff v. Noyes, 43 Ill. 318; Craig v. Smith, 10 Colo. 220. This is true whether the venue be changed by agreement of parties or by order of court.

Making a motion and giving the bond for the removal of a case is an appearance. Atchison v. Morris, 11 Fed. Rep. 582. Compare, however, Sayles v. Northwestern Ins. Co., 2 Curt. (U. S.) 212; and this latter case is said to state the better doctrine. Porter Land, etc., Co. v. Baskin, 43 Fed. Rep. 327.

Submitting to a Trial Upon the Merits.

—Even though a motion to dismiss the suit for the irregularities had been previously made and wrongly overruled. Heeron v. Beckwith, 1 Wis. 17; Seymour v. Bradfield, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 49; Moss v. Raynor, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 110; Johnson v. MacCoy, 32 W. Va. 552; White v. Rankin, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 78.

Other Cases.—A defendant was absent in the military service, and therefore was privileged from service of process during that time; a subpoena in chancery was served by leaving a copy at his residence; but he afterwards conferred with the plaintiff upon a foreclosure sale made in pursuance of a decree obtained on such service, and became a purchaser thereof. By such action any right to question the regularity of the service was waived. Meng v. Houser, 13 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 210.

To appear merely to ask for an adjournment is a waiver of objection to proof of service. Utica City Bank v. Buell, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 385; Com. v. Helms, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 410; Palmer v. Sanders, 51 N. J. L. 408.

The prosecution of a writ of error will operate to cure a defective service or return of process. Bustamente v. Bescher, 43 Miss. 172.

An error in a citation to an executor, to account, is waived by an appearance of the executor and his submitting to account. Sankey v. Sankey, 6 Ala. 607; Davis v. Davis, 6 Ala. 611.

See also, in this connection, Womack v. Shelton, 31 Tex. 592; State v. Clark, 44 Vt. 636; Dugan v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 70 Md. 1; Low v. Mills, 61 Mich. 35 (waiver implied from failure to make objection).

Irregularities in a summons are also considered as waived by appealing after default, though defendant appear specially in the appellate court to move to dismiss the action. Gage v. Maryatt, 9 Mont. 265.

In Texas, it is a statutory rule that if a defendant appears and moves to quash the service or citation, he is deemed to enter an appearance to the merits for the next term of court, whether his motion is sustained or not. Central, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, 68 Tex. 49; 28 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 50. See also Feibleman v. Edmunds, 69 Tex. 334.

Instances of Non-appearance.—In order to take advantage of a defect in service, and his motion to dismiss the suit on that ground is overruled, he cannot even then proceed to trial without making a virtual waiver of his original objections. If he desires to insist upon the defective process for the defense, he must rely upon the appellate court to sustain his original motion.¹

process it is evident that the defendant must appear in court; but an appearance for this purpose alone is not such an appearance as waives the want of proper process or service.

Motion to Dismiss the Suit.—Thus where the defendant appeared by his attorneys and moved the court to set aside the summons, and to dismiss the action, because the service was made on the return day of the summons; and the appearance was made expressly for the purposes of such motion only, and the motion was signed by the attorneys as attorneys for the purposes of the motion only; and no other appearance was made by the defendant in the case, it was held that such an appearance did not have the effect to waive service, or to cure the irregular service already made. Senicock v. First Nat. Bank, 14 Kan. 529; Lyman v. Milton, 44 Cal. 635.

In a somewhat similar case it was held that a special appearance by a defendant for the sole purpose of moving to set aside the service of the summons, is not a waiver of the defect objected to, and if the court, on overruling such motion, adds a provision to the order giving the defendant ten days' time to answer, and staying judgment in the meantime, it not appearing that such provision was asked for by the defendant, such provision does not give any additional effect to the special appearance, nor justify the conclusion that the defendant waived his objection. Upper Mississippi Transp. Co. v. Whittaker, 16 Wis. 220. If such provision, however, was incorporated in the order overruling the motion to dismiss on application of the defendant, it was a waiver of previous defects in the service of the process, and an appearance in the cause. Upper Mississippi Transp. Co. v. Whittaker, 16 Wis. 220.

Again, on the return-day of the writ, defendant moved to quash it, as not having been served a sufficient number of days before the return day; the magistrate took time to consider the motion, the complainant then agreed to submit the motion without argument if the defendant would plead to the complaint, whereupon defendant pleaded not guilty, and it was continued. It was held that the defendant had not waived his motion, and that the plea was provisional merely; and since the decision on the motion was rightly for defendant, that the magistrate did not acquire jurisdiction. Sal-lee v. Ireland, 9 Mich. 154.

This main principle has been decided in many other cases. A motion to set aside a judgment by default, or to quash the writ, or to dismiss the suit, is not an appearance waiving process. Gray v. Hawes, 8 Cal. 562; Schoonhoven v. Gott, 20 Ill. 46; 71 Am. Dec. 247; ACTIONS, vol. 1, p. 183.

In Deidesheimer v. Brown, 8 Cal. 339, this principle was carried so far as to induce the court to hold that proceeding to trial after first appearing with a motion to dismiss for defect in the summons, which is overruled, is no waiver of the irregularity. But this carries the doctrine to an extreme, and cannot be considered as stating the law correctly, being opposed by numerous cases, including those just cited.

An omission to serve petition and citation is not cured by service of a writ of arrest; nor can defendant's appearance, by counsel, on motion to set aside the arrest, be considered a waiver of service, nor as authorizing the presumption of its acknowledgment. Jacobs v. Sartorius, 3 La. Ann. 9.

Taking Depositions.—If a defendant, pending his motion to quash the plaintiff's writ, take depositions to be used in the cause, he does not thereby waive his motion. Briggs v. Davis, 34 Me. 158. See also ACTIONS, vol. 1, p. 183.

Asking for Removal.—An appearance merely to ask for a removal of the cause to the federal court is not a waiver of service. Reifsnider v. American Imp. Pub. Co., 45 Fed. Rep. 433.

1. Briggs v. Sneghan, 45 Ind. 14; Ard v. State, 114 Ind. 542; Muller v. Higgins, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 297; Sweeney v. Schultes, 19 Nev. 53; Peters v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 59 Mo. 406; Harvey v. Skipnith, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 410.

The fact that the process was void and that the defendant was ignorant of it at the time, does not prevent his appearance being a waiver of all defects.¹

3. By Acceptance or Acknowledgment.—Defects or irregularities in the service or return of process may also be waived by admission or acceptance of service, generally indorsed upon the writ;² and when such an admission is made, the party is considered to

1. Pixley v. Winchell, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 366; 17 Am. Dec. 525. Compare, however, Voorhies v. Scofield, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 51, where it is said that an appearance only waives such defects as appear upon the face of the summons. Nor is the legal effect of a general appearance changed by the fact that the defendant appeared because his right to attach was imperiled by the proceedings. Olcott v. MacLean, 73 N. Y. 223.

2. Carter v. Penn, 79 Ga. 747; New York Code Civ. Proc., § 434; Metz v. Bremond, 13 Tex. 394; Jewett v. Miller, 19 Tex. 290; Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 307; Earbee v. Ware, 9 Port. (Ala.) 291; Woodward v. Clegge, 8 Ala. 317; Cheney v. Harding, 21 Neb. 65; Ayres v. Hill, 82 Ala. 401; Young v. South Tredegar Iron Co., 85 Tenn. 189. Compare Garner v. Gantt, 7 Port. (Ala.) 452.

The genuineness of the acknowledgment of service must be shown by a return of the officer, and it is not sufficient to show that the writ has been in his hands. And a written acknowledgment of service of a subpoena, without proof of its genuineness, is not sufficient service to authorize a decree. Jackson v. Speed, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 56; Gatewood v. Rucker, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 21; Norwood v. Riddle, 9 Port. (Ala.) 425; Ex parte Gibson, 10 Ark. 572; Segars v. Segars, 76 Me. 96.

A paper reading as follows was found in the record with no file-mark: "B, administrator, having instituted suit on a note given by N, R and W for $950, due 1st of March, 1860; now I, said N, hereby acknowledge service of said suit, and waive all process, this 8th of April, 1860. (Signed) A N." Such a paper could not be taken as a waiver of process in a suit two days after its date, on two notes of nearly double $950. Neill v. Baker, 28 Tex. 345.

In Clary v. Morehouse, 3 Ark. 261, this indorsement appeared upon a declaration in debt. "We, D, C and A W, the within defendants, do hereby acknowledge service of the within declaration and waive the necessity of any process issuing thereon. Given under our hands this 23d day of March, 1838." The declaration was entitled of the term of the court to be held on the first Monday after the fourth Monday in April, 1838. No writ was issued in the case, nor was any appearance to the action ever entered by C and W or either of them; but they being called and not appearing, final judgment was given against them by default. The court held, however, that such indorsement was a mere simple agreement entered into by the parties, which could not dispense with a service of process, and could not authorize a judgment by default. It is doubted whether the doctrine of this case can be sustained, since it seems contrary both to principle and the doctrine of many cases. The object of process, as before stated, is merely to give the defendant notice; and if he agrees to appear without being served, it would seem that he cannot claim the defense of no service made. See in addition to the foregoing cases, Ex parte Gibson, 10 Ark. 572; Humphreys v. Humphreys, Morr. (Iowa) 359. See also Alderson v. Bell, 9 Cal. 315, where it is held that the recital in the decree of foreclosure that the defendants had been regularly served with process or had waived service by their acknowledgment, was sufficient evidence that the requisite proof was produced to establish the genuineness of the signatures of the defendants to the admission; and even if there were no such recitals in the decree, and there was an entire absence of evidence in the record on the point, that still the presumption would be in favor of the jurisdiction of the court and of the regularity of its proceedings. Maples v. Mackey, 15 Hun (N. Y.) 533; Cook v. Darling, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 393; Crane v. Brannon, 3 Cal. 192; Woodward v. Clegge, 8 Ala. 317.

have notice of, and to be bound by all proceedings under the process served;¹ but an admission of service is not to be confounded with an express waiver of service of process. Where the acknowledgment is properly made—that is in writing and by the defendant himself—there is little question as to its effect;² but where the acknowledgment is made by some one other than defendant—for example, by his attorney or agent—its effect depends upon the character of the agency, and whether the agent or attorney is one authorized to make an acknowledgment of service.³ If it is made by anyone other than the defendant, or his attorney of record, or specially authorized agent, it is of no effect. A husband cannot acknowledge service for his wife,⁴ nor will an admission of service by one of two defendants dispense with the necessity of proper service on the other.⁵

2. Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 307; Segars v. Segars, 76 Me. 96; Carter v. Penn. 79 Ga. 747; Battle v. Eddy, 31 Tex. 368; Jewett v. Miller, 19 Tex. 290; Boyman v. Brower, 6 How. (Miss.) 43 (acknowledgment written on process must be proved); Johnson v. Dilbridge, 35 Mich. 436.

Compare Chapman v. Allen, Morr. (Iowa) 23, which holds that where service of process is required to be by copy, it may be waived by the defendant by parol.

Under the Texas statute, a defendant's acceptance of service and waiver of process, indorsed on the petition in the suit against him, before it was filed, will not support a judgment by default. McAnelly v. Ward, 72 Tex. 342. And in Johnson v. Delbridge, 35 Mich. 436, it was held that an acknowledgment of service would not support a judgment by default in the absence of proof of the authenticity of such indorsement. Bozman v. Brower, 6 How. (Miss.) 43.

3. The attorney must be an attorney of record. Segars v. Segars, 76 Me. 96. Indeed, it is said that an attorney in order to accept service for his client, must be specially authorized to do so. Whitly v. Barker, 1 Root (Conn.) 406. See also Clark v. Morrison, 85 Ga. 229.

In the absence of any showing to the contrary, an attorney acknowledging service on the back of a summons, will be presumed to have had authority for so doing. Marling v. Robrecht, 13 W. Va. 440; Ingram v. Richardson, 2 La. Ann. 839.

A judgment in personam has been held to be based upon sufficient service where the acknowledgment of service was made by defendant's attorney. Hendrix v. Cawthorn, 71 Ga. 742.

4. Gaylord v. Payne, 3 Conn. 258; Clark v. Morrison, 85 Ga. 229. A written acknowledgment, however, by a curator ad hoc, of service of petition and citation addressed to him as such, brings the defendant into court and interrupts prescription. Bartlett v. Wheeler, 31 La. Ann. 540; Ingram v. Richardson, 2 La. Ann. 839.

A letter authorizing a person to acknowledge service of the declaration on behalf of a defendant, invests him with no authority to waive process. Clark v. Morrison, 85 Ga. 229.

"Legal service" of summons issued against a defendant was accepted by his son, who was not a member of his family, and who had no authority to accept service of process for him; neither was defendant informed of nor did he consent to said acceptance. Under such circumstances it was very properly held that there was no legal service on defendant, and the judgment had thereon was void. Finney v. Clark, 86 Va. 344.

Gen. Laws Texas 1885, art. 1347a, provide that the acceptance of service and waiver of process shall not in any action be authorized by an instrument sued on or executed prior to the institution of such suit, nor shall it be made until after suit brought. Under this the defendant's acceptance of service and waiver of process indorsed on the petition in the suit against him, before it was filed, will not support a judgment by default. McAnelly v. Ward, 72 Tex. 342.

5. Hendrix v. Fuller, 7 Kan. 331; supra, this title, Upon Several Defendants.

It is not essential that the admission or acceptance of service should be in writing, unless the statute requires it to be so;¹ nor that the written acceptance indorsed on the process should state the time and place of service.²

An acceptance of service induced by fraud or imposition is not binding, unless by failure to object, the right to object is waived.³

a. EFFECT OF ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF SERVICE.—A mere acknowledgment of service cures defects in the manner of service only, or in the officer's return; it does not cure a defect or irregularity in the process itself; so that an acceptance of service of a summons which gave no notice of the time of appearance is no waiver of such a defect.⁴ An acknowledgment of service made by a defendant is conclusive against him, and he is estopped to deny it, though, if he improperly makes an admission in order to benefit one of the plaintiffs to the injury of another, the court will correct it.⁵ This principle has been carried so far as to

1. Chapman v. Allen, 1 Morr. (Iowa). 23 (parol waiver held sufficient); Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 307; Godwin v. Monds, 106 N. Car. 448 (verbal acknowledgment insufficient); Wade v. Wisenand, 86 Ga. 482.

In Godwin v. Monds, 106 N. Car. 448, the sheriff served a summons on the defendants while they were out of his jurisdiction. He informed them of the fact and said that he would send it to the proper sheriff to serve. They then told him not to do that but to mark it "served" and that they would accept service in that way. It was held that this was not a sufficient compliance with the statute which required a "written" admission of service. Compare Johnson v. Johnson, 52 Ga. 449; where a similar admission was held to estop the defendant to deny service.

2. Nicholson v. Cox, 83 N. Car. 44; 35 Am. Rep. 556; Alderson v. Bell, 9 Cal. 315.

A failure to waive process in the acceptance of service may be cured by amendment. Scudder v. Massengill, 88 Ga. 245.

3. Acceptance Induced by Fraud—Vold.—Pfiffner v. Krapfel, 28 Iowa 27 (evidence of fraud); Trolan v. Fagan, 48 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 240 (acceptance antedated).

4. Falkner v. Guild, 10 Wis. 563; Donlevy v. Cooper, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 548; Aycock v. Leitner, 29 Ga. 197; New York Code Civ. Proc., § 434.

The Code of Civil Procedure of Nebraska declares an acknowledgment of service endorsed upon the back of a summons to be equivalent to a service. Under this statutory rule it is held that such an acknowledgment is equivalent to an actual legal service of the summons by the sheriff to whom it is directed; and is not merely equivalent to a substituted or constructive service. Cheney v. Harding, 21 Neb. 65.

Where the sheriff, as defendant in an action for wrongful seizure, acknowledges service in writing, and waives service of a copy of the summons and complaint, he thereby waives any irregularity in the form of the summons—e. g., that he being sheriff and defendant, the summons ought to have been addressed to the coroner. Ayres v. Hill, 82 Ala. 401.

Where the defendant acknowledges service of the complaint and waives a summons, the cause will stand in court as if it had been commenced by a summons issued on the day when the service of the complaint was acknowledged and the summons waived. Tuscaloosa, etc., Co. v. Tuscaloosa, 38 Ala. 514.

5. For example, where an admission of personal service of a summons and complaint is antedated by the defendant, for the purpose of giving the plaintiff preference over another judgment creditor of the defendant, in an entry of judgment by default, although the defendant might be estopped from questioning the date of the admission, not so with the subsequent judgment creditor, who is authorized to have the first judgment set aside on his motion, as against his judgment. Trolan v. Fagan, 48 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 240.

render an acceptance of service valid as against a defendant, even though made outside of the State from whence the process issued.¹

IX. RETURN OF PROCESS.²—No valid judgment can be based upon any service of process unless it appears that a proper return has been made.³ This return is virtually an indorsement in writing on the back of the writ, or on a schedule attached to it,⁴ made by the sheriff or other officer serving the writ,⁵ stating the manner of service. The indorsement does not assume the character

Where the defendant, in an action to recover lands bought under execution, was a purchaser from the judgment debtor, and had accepted service as attorney in fact for the debtor, of the original process in the suit in which the execution was issued, he could not, in defense of the suit for possession, set up an insufficient service of process on the judgment debtor. Adicks v. Lowry, 12 S. Car. 97.

1. Thus, although a subpoena to answer cannot be served upon a defendant out of the State, yet if he accepts the service as regular, he cannot afterwards object to the regularity of the subsequent proceedings, on account of such service. Dun v. Dun, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 425; Cheney v. Harding, 21 Neb. 65; Talman v. Barnes, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 227.

The principle is, however, by no means universally recognized. It is held in Wisconsin that in a suit for a divorce, service of the summons upon the defendant in another State is void. And a written admission of service, in such a case, signed by the defendant in another State, with an agreement to "waive any other service," was held not sufficient to give the court here jurisdiction, but that it could be given only by an appearance. Weatherbee v. Weatherbee, 20 Wis. 499. This case is strongly upheld in Litchfield v. Burwell, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 341. See also Hulbert v. Hope Mut. Ins. Co., 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 275.

2. Meaning of "Process."—The term "process" in this connection is intended to include only original and mesne process, unless otherwise stated. For the character of a return on final process, see EXECUTIONS, vol. 7, p. 155; REPLEVIN; SHERIFFS.

As to the character of the return on various particular writs see HABEAS CORPUS, vol. 9, pp. 184-195; MANDAMUS, vol. 14, pp. 230-238; CERTIORARI, vol. 3, p. 61; ATTACHMENT, vol. 1, p. 921; FOREIGN ATTACHMENT, vol. 8, p. 323. See also DUE, vol. 6, p. 42, note; FILE, vol. 7, p. 963.

3. Necessity of Return.—A court has no jurisdiction over a cause, where the writ served therein has not been returned to court. Dunn v. Ball, 2 R. I. 450; Bradley v. Lamb, Hard. (Ky.) 536. This principle is undoubtedly true of mesne process; but in case of final process, the writ takes effect from the time of the levy or of its delivery to the officer, so that the process begins to operate before the return is made.

"An execution executed is the end of the law." See ATTACHMENT, vol. 1, p. 921; EXECUTION, vol. 7, p. 155; 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.), p. 839. Thus, in a California case it is held that the lien of an attachment takes effect immediately upon the levy and the record thereof, and is not divested by a failure of the sheriff to make the proper return; the facts can be established by other evidence. The deposit of the writ, etc., is what operates as a notice to the world. Ritter v. Scannell, 11 Cal. 238; 70 Am. Dec. 775. Compare Offterdinger v. Ford (Va. 1890), 12 S. E. Rep. 1.

4. Dickson v. Peppers, 7 Ired. (N. Car.) 429. And if made on a schedule attached, a reference to it should appear in the writ. Watson on Sheriffs 68. An indorsement of the return of attachment upon the petition annexed to the writ instead of the writ itself is only an irregularity of form which will not avoid the jurisdiction of the court. Johnson v. Gilkeson, 81 Mo. 55; Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 836a.

5. Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), §§ 835-6; 3 Bl. Com. 275; Watson on Sheriffs 68; State v. Melton, 8 Mo. 417. In this case it was defined thus: "The statement by the officer, upon a writ, of the manner in which it has been executed, and filing it in the clerk's office, constitute the 'return' in law."

The statutes almost invariably require the return of the officer upon a of a return, however, until the writ is actually returned into the office out of which it issued.¹

In the United States it is generally the duty of the sheriff or other officer to make a return upon process served by him officially. At common law, however, if either the plaintiff or defendant desired a return, the sheriff must be ruled to make one.²

The return is made by the officer serving the process, but it seems to be a usual requirement that the name of the sheriff shall be signed in all cases where no one other than the sheriff or his deputized officer is authorized to execute the process.³ The officer need not state in his return the county of which he is an officer, or where the writ was served, since it will be presumed that he has acted within his jurisdiction.⁴ A marshal's return, writ to be in writing, and where this is the case the whole must be in writing. Parol evidence is not admitted to contradict or explain it. Purington v. Loring, 7 Mass. 388; Wilson v. Loring, 7 Mass. 392; Wellington v. Gale, 13 Mass. 483.

1. Nelson v. Cook, 19 Ill. 440; State v. Melton, 8 Mo. 417; Welsh v. Jay, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 482; Garlick v. Sangster, 9 Bing. 46; 23 E. C. L. 259.

2. Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 853; U. S. v. Scroggins, 3 Woods (U. S.) 529; Frances v. Clarkson, 2 Dowl. P. C. 532; Lewis v. State Bank, 4 Ark. 447; Edmunds v. Watson, 7 Taunt. 5; 2 E. C. L. 5; Richardson v. Trundle, 8 C. B. N. S. 474; 98 E. C. L. 474. See also SHERIFFS.

3. Return Where Service Is Made by Deputy.—Gray v. Wolf, 77 Iowa 630; Thomas v. Colorado Nat. Bank, 11 Colo. 611; Reinhart v. Lugo, 86 Cal. 395; Martin v. Gray, 142 U. S. 236. If the process is served by a deputy it should be signed with the sheriff's name, with the deputy's added. Glencoe v. People, 78 Ill. 382; Briggs v. Greenlee, Minor (Ala.) 123; Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 836; Sheppard v. Hill, 5 Ark. 308; Rowley v. Howard, 23 Cal. 401; Reinhart v. Lugo, 86 Cal. 395; Johnson v. Johnson, 23 Fla. 413; Dennison v. Story, 1 Oregon 272; Emley v. Drum, 36 Pa. St. 123.

In Barber v. Goodell, 56 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 364, the deputy had died before making proof of service of summons and other papers served by him. On affidavits showing statements made by him during his illness as to the time and place of service, the sheriff was directed to make a return of service in accordance with the facts stated in the affidavits.

In the four States of Michigan, Tex- as, South Carolina and Vermont, the rule is different from that of the text. Calendar v. Olcott, 1 Mich. 344; Towns v. Harris, 13 Tex. 507; De Villiers v. Ford, 2 McCord (S. Car.) 144; Eastman v. Curtis, 4 Vt. 616. So in the federal courts, Hill v. Gordon, 45 Fed. Rep. 276.

Thus where a sheriff authorized, by indorsement on a writ, another to execute it, and the writ was returned served, and the return signed by the person authorized as "deputy sheriff," it was held that the return should have been in the name of the sheriff. Bolard v. Mason, 66 Pa. St. 138. See also Bennethum v. Bowers, 133 Pa. St. 332. Compare Nelson v. Nye, 43 Miss. 124. But in Illinois it is held that in such a case the return need not be in the name of the sheriff. The reason, however, for not requiring it was, that the return by such person must be under oath. Glencoe v. People, 78 Ill. 382. A sheriff's return needs no proof of his signature in the court of which he is an officer. McDonald v. Carson, 94 N. Car. 497.

An averment that a sheriff's return was signed is unnecessary; this will be presumed. Rives v. Kumler, 27 Ill. 291.

In Thomas v. Goodman, 25 Tex. Supp. 446, it is said that the omission of the signature is a fatal defect, which cannot be cured by a subsequent affidavit of the officer. Simmes v. Simmes (Tex. 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 665. But it seems that if the return is correct in other particulars a failure by the deputy to affix his principal's name is a mere irregularity which may be amended. Hill v. Gordon, 45 Fed. Rep. 276.

4. Whiting v. Hagerty, 5 La. Ann. 686; Gilbert v. Brown, 9 Neb. 90;

however, must show that it was executed within his district.¹ In case of process issuing from a justice's court, the constable, being the ministerial officer of the court whose duty it is to serve process, should sign the return.²

In some States, notably New York and others, where a new system of practice has been introduced, the return on process is substituted by the sheriff's certificate, which he is required to attach to whatever process he serves. Its character and effect is virtually that of the old return. In case of service made by a private person, the return is replaced by such person's affidavit of service. The rules, however, which apply to returns generally will also apply to such certificates or affidavits.³

Calderwood v. Brooks, 28 Cal. 151; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Brant (Ind. 1892), 31 N. E. Rep. 464; Knowles v. Logansport Gaslight, etc., Co., 19 Wall. (U. S.) 59; Davis v. Burt, 7 Iowa 56; Crane v. Brannan, 3 Cal. 192; Henry v. Ward, 4 Ark. 150; Crowley v. Wallace, 12 Mo. 143; Richardson v. Smith, 1 Allen (Mass.) 541; Bushey v. Rathes, 45 Mich. 181; McAbee v. Parker, 78 Ala. 573; Davis v. Richmond, 35 Vt. 419. Consult, also, Zwickey v. Haney, 63 Wis. 464, and Higgins v. Bullock, 66 Ill. 37, where it is said that a court will always take judicial notice of the counties of the State. But in Gully v. Sanders, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 424, a return by a deputy sheriff that defendant is "no inhabitant of my bailiwick," is not equivalent to a return that he is no inhabitant of the county.

The service of a decree nisi, or other paper by a sheriff, which is not directed to him in his official capacity, should be authenticated by affidavit. Anonymous, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 206.

1. Allen v. Blunt, 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 480; 8 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 105.

2. The statutory requirement, that the return of process to a justice's court shall be signed by the constable serving the same, is satisfied, for the purpose of supporting a judgment attacked collaterally, by a return made out in the presence of the constable, by the justice. Reno v. Pinder, 20 N. Y. 298, reversing 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 423.

The constable's certificate of service of a paper is no evidence of such service unless it was his duty to make such service. Pool v. Wedemeyer, 56 Tex. 287.

3. New York Code Civ. Proc., § 434; Litchfield v. Burwell, 5 How. Pr. (N.

Y.) 341; Morrell v. Kimball, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 352; Sayles v. Davis, 20 Wis. 302; Wostenholm v. State, 71 Ga. 669 (service of bill of exceptions by attorney).

Certificate of Service.—This certificate is made in like manner and form, and has the same requisites as an ordinary return. Larned v. Wilcox, 4 Mich. 333. See also, as to sufficiency of such certificates, Clark v. Lichtenberg, 33 Mich. 307; Elliot v. Preston, 44 Mich. 189; Taylor v. Taylor, 64 Ind. 356; McMullen v. Mackey, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 638; Friend v. Green, 43 Kan. 167; Norton v. Meader, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 618; Pool v. Wedemeyer, 56 Tex. 287 (effect of constable's certificate); Robinson v. McManus, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 380 (same, oral proof of service); Roberts v. Burris, 12 Iowa 394 (proof of service by mail cannot be shown merely from certificate of the clerk of the court).

A sheriff's certificate of service does not lose its force by lapse of time or by being used upon the entry of a judgment afterwards vacated. It may be used upon a second application for judgment. Brien v. Casey, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 416.

A sheriff's certificate is not proof of service of an order in supplementary proceeding; such order is not process, and the statute does not authorize its service to be proved by certificate. Utica City Bank v. Buell, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 385; 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 498. Nor is the official certificate of a sheriff of another State evidence in New York of service of papers from the courts of the latter; his affidavit should be presented. Thurston v. King, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 126; Morrell v. Kimball, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 352.

It has been held in New York that "the defendant's affidavit as to the time of service upon him is conclusive against a deputy sheriff's certificate. In such a case the sheriff is put to his affidavit." Campbell v. Self, 2 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 35. Compare Sargent v. Meade (Supreme Ct.), 1 N. Y. Supp. 589.

Affidavit of Service.—This is of purely statutory origin, service by any one other than the sheriff being unknown at common law. It is usually required that the affidavit of service should state the time, place, and manner of service, no distinction appearing to be made between the affidavit in case of personal service and that in constructive service. And, where a summons is served by any person other than the sheriff, and the affidavit of such person fails to show at what place it was served, and in case of personal service that he knew the person served to be the person mentioned in the summons, there being no appearance by defendant before judgment, there is nothing to show that the court acquired jurisdiction of his person. Sayles v. Davis, 20 Wis. 302; Lewis v. Hartel, 24 Wis. 504; Grantier v. Rosecrance, 27 Wis. 488; German Mut., etc., F. Ins. Co. v. Decker, 74 Wis. 556; Murdock v. Hilmyer, 45 Mo. App. 287; Forbes v. Bringe, 32 Neb. 757; Lyles v. Haskell, 35 S. Car. 391; National Exchange Bank v. Stelling, 31 S. Car. 360; Doty v. Berea College (Ky. 1891), 15 S. W. Rep. 1063; Hog's Back, etc., Min. Co. v. New Basil, etc., Min. Co., 63 Cal. 121 (sufficiency of affidavit of service by mail); Howard v. Galloway, 60 Cal. 10; Weil v. Bent, 60 Cal. 603. So that an affidavit of service by one who was not an officer of the court is not sufficient which merely states that "A B, being first duly sworn on oath, says that on the 3d day of May, 1864, he served a copy of the within summons and complaint on C D, who is personally known to this affiant, by giving and leaving with him a copy thereof," etc. Sayles v. Davis, 20 Wis. 302. See also Etna L. Ins. Co. v. McCormick, 20 Wis. 265; Romain v. Muscatine Co., Morr. (Iowa) 357; Coffee v. Gates, 28 Ark. 43; Reed v. Catlin, 49 Wis. 686.

In California it is held that the affidavit must allege that the person serving the writ is over eighteen years of age, and if it fails to do so a judgment by default cannot be sustained. Barney

v. Vigoureux, 75 Cal. 376; Horton v. Gallardo, 88 Cal. 581; Maynard v. MacCrellish, 57 Cal. 355; Doerfler v. Schmidt, 64 Cal. 265. But in another case it was held that such a mistake was a mere irregularity, and that a judgment in the case by default could not be attacked collaterally on the ground of it. Peck v. Strauss, 33 Cal. 678. A statement that person making service was "a white male citizen of the United States" is not equivalent to saying that he was over eighteen years old, and is therefore insufficient. Lyons v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 42. See also Williamson v. Cummings Rock Drill Co., 95 Cal. 652. It is sufficient to state the county in which service was made, as it will be presumed, nothing appearing to the contrary, that he resided in the county in which service was made. Calderwood v. Brooks, 28 Cal. 151. See also, in this general connection, Dimick v. Campbell, 31 Cal. 238; Moulton v. De MaCarty, 6 Robt. (N. Y.) 470; Dellisser v. New York, etc., R. Co., 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. 233; Robinson v. McManus, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 380; Steinle v. Bell, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 172; Pellier v. Gillespie, 67 Cal. 582; Gale v. Townsend, 45 Minn. 357; McCall v. Towers, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 42; Edmonds v. Buel, 23 Conn. 242 (service of attachment by indifferent person need not be authenticated by affidavit of service); Barnett v. Montgomery, 6 Mon. (Ky.) 527 (affidavit of private person of delivery of subpoena, insufficient evidence of service).

Where a private individual certified upon oath, on the back of a copy of a bill in chancery, duly attested by the clerk, that he had given a true and attested copy thereof to the defendant, residing out of the State; and also made a like certificate upon the subpoena, it was considered sufficient evidence of proper service. Stone v. Anderson, 25 N. H. 221.

An affidavit of service is not conclusive upon the defendant. The supreme court has power on motion to inquire into the fact of alleged service of its own process. Van Rensselaer v. Chadwick, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 297; Wallis v. Lott, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 567.

A statute requiring the return of service of summons, when made by a special deputy, to be verified by oath is complied with if the return is verified by the affidavit of the person making the service. The matter may be reduced to the form of an affidavit,

1. Requisites of Return.—The return is the means by which the court is to be informed of the fact or legality of service; it must, therefore, affirmatively show everything necessary to constitute a valid service,¹ and must respond to the mandate of the writ.² Its contents vary according to the character of the service, whether actual personal service or constructive.

It should always follow the words prescribed in the statute, but a substantial compliance, it seems, is sufficient, and a refusal to give it effect on merely technical grounds, would be a denial of justice.³ A return merely that the writ had been "legally served" or "duly executed" is not sufficient; returning officers are ministerial, and are therefore not competent to judge of the legality of a service, or of any other similar act of their own.⁴

a. IN CASE OF PERSONAL SERVICE.—Where actual personal service is made, the return usually need state only the fact and signed and sworn to by the person or officer making it. Edwards v. McKay, 73 Ill. 570. Nor in such a case is proof of service by a notary's seal sufficient. Yolo Co. v. Knight, 70 Cal. 431.

1. Williams v. Downes, 30 Tex. 51; Ex parte Cross, 7 Ark. 44; Hakes v. Shupe, 27 Iowa 465; Rickards v. Ladd, 6 Sawy. (U. S.) 42; Hammond v. Olive, 44 Miss. 543; O'Leary v. Durant, 70 Tex. 409; Rankin v. Dulaney, 43 Miss. 197; Moore v. Coats, 43 Miss. 225; Botsford v. O'Conner, 57 Ill. 72; Johnson v. Aylesworth, 3 Pittsb. (Pa.) 237; Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), §§ 835, et seq. See also Greenman v. Harvey, 53 Ill. 386, as to the general requisites of return on summons in chancery; People v. Fox, 39 Cal. 621.

Briefly stated the rule is that a return must not depend upon extraneous facts to make it intelligible, but must be so when taken only in connection with the writ upon which it is indorsed. Thompson v. Griffith, 19 Tex. 115; Harmon v. See, 6 Iowa 171.

But that which is necessarily implied need not be expressed in the return. Select v. Olmstead, 1 Root (Conn.) 497.

A return which fails to show proper service cannot be cured by an affidavit showing a good service. Gardner v. Small, 17 N. J. L. 162.

Double Return.—If the officer makes two returns to a writ, the second one apparently intended to make the first one more specific, and, although the first one taken alone would be good, the two taken together do not show a good service; the service is bad. Pillow v. Sentelle, 39 Ark. 61. See also Norton v. Meader, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 603.

2. Shannon v. McMullin, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 218. Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 861.

3. Collins v. Walling, 6 La. Ann. 702; Graves v. Drane, 66 Tex. 658; Presley v. Anderson, 42 Miss. 274; Clark v. Wilcox, 31 Tex. 322.

In Texas it is usually required, however, that the officer in the service of process and in his return shall comply strictly with statutory requirements. Roberts v. Stockslager, 4 Tex. 307; Graves v. Robinson, 22 Tex. 130. It must therefore show that service was made by the sheriff. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Wave, 74 Tex. 47.

4. In Perry v. Dover, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 206, the court by Morton, J., said: "All returning officers are ministerial, and are bound to set forth in their returns all the acts done by them in order that the proper tribunal may judge of their sufficiency. They are not competent to judge of the legality of a notice or service, and a return that a precept has been legally served, or that the duty enjoined by a warrant had been duly performed, would most clearly be insufficient." See also Davis v. Maynard, 9 Mass. 242; Wellington v. Gale, 13 Mass. 483; Harmon v. See, 6 Iowa 171; Charles v. Marney, 1 Mo. 537; Moore v. Miller, 16 N. J. L. 233. Compare Burrus v. Burrus, 56 Miss. 92.

Therefore the service is wholly insufficient where the return states that it was made "conformable to the statute." The facts should be set forth. Crisman v. Swisher, 28 N. J. L. 149. Nor is an affidavit by the sheriff, that to the best of his belief he made service on defendant, any proof of service. Pearson v. Pierce, 40 Ohio St. 231.

time of service, and have the officer's name attached.¹ The usual return in such cases, unless the statute prescribes otherwise, is simply the word "executed" or "served," with the date and officer's name following.² If the return is correct in all other respects, it is immaterial that the defendant is not mentioned, either by name or otherwise.³ But where there are several Winkler*, 15 Tex. 515; Shaw v. Moser, 3 Mich. 71; Jones v. Relfe, 3 Mo. 388; Gilmore v. Lidden, 23 Ga. 14.

Where the return is not dated, the presumption is that service was perfected within the time prescribed by law. Reid v. Jordan, 56 Ga. 282; Cosby v. Bustard, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 137; Fears v. Thompson, 82 Ala. 294. And, generally speaking, the return of an officer should receive every reasonable construction, and where it is susceptible of more than one meaning the one most conformable to his legal duty should be adopted, upon the well-known principle "ut res valeat magisquam pereat," and "omnia præsuntur esse rite ac solemniter acta." Murfree on Sheriffs, § 846; State v. Still, 11 Mo. App. 283; Davis v. Burt, 7 Iowa 56; Whittlesey v. Starr, 8 Conn. 134; Betts v. Boyd, 31 Neb. 815; Lodge v. Butler, 42 N. J. L. 370; Foster v. Berry, 14 R. I. 601; Kirby v. Gates, 71 Iowa 100; Brown v. Miner, 21 Ill. App. 60.

Time of Service—Date of Return.—While it is usual to state the time of service it seems that an omission to do so is only an irregularity which is amendable, and which will not render the judgment liable to collateral attack. Wilson v. Call, 49 Iowa 463; Rees v. Rees, 7 Oregon 78; Wilson v. King, Morr. (Iowa) 106. And an amendment substituting the real for the apparent date of a writ may be allowed in the discretion of the court. Gardiner v. Gardiner, 71 Me. 266; Snyder v. Schram, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 404.

If the return bears an earlier date than the process itself it is no evidence of service. Keaton v. Moore, 59 Ga. 553.

If a discrepancy occurs between the date of the return of an execution into court as made by the officer, and the date as made by the clerk upon filing, the former must control. Gilson v. Parkhurst, 53 Vt. 384.

The Wisconsin statute requiring the date of service to be indorsed on the writ is held to be mandatory and the service is ineffectual if such indorsement is not made. Wendel v. Durbin, 26 Wis. 390.

Other Matters.—A return of a summons issued against Harrison Johnson, as follows: duly served "on the within named H. Johnson," is sufficient, notwithstanding there are other persons in the same town named H. Johnson. Johnson v. Jones, 2 Neb. 126.

Where process was required to be served by delivering a copy to the defendant, and by the return it appeared a copy of the summons was "left with" the defendant, the two forms of expression are equivalent. Buck v. Buck, 60 Ill. 105. See also Hedges v. Mace, 72 Ill. 472; Keithley v. Borum, 2 How. (Miss.) 683 ("Executed by copy" understood to mean delivery of copy to defendant personally).

2. 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.), p. 545; Bridges v. Ridgley, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 396; Smith v. Bradley, 6 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 485; Com. v. Murray, 2 Va. Cas. 504; Thomas v. State, 62 Miss. 184; Strayhorn v. Blalock, 92 N. Car. 292; McDonald v. Carson, 94 N. Car. 497; Snelgrove v. Branch Bank, 5 Ala. 295 ("Executed on S" sufficient).

The return "Executed" shows a legal service, but not necessarily a personal one. Therefore, in a case where personal service is required, such a return is insufficient. Hermann v. Stricklin, 60 Miss. 234. But if, besides the word "executed," there are words which indicate that the writ was not properly executed, the court must not consider it served. Burrus v. Burrus, 56 Miss. 93. Compare Berlin Iron Bridge Co. v. Norton (N. J. 1889), 17 Atl. Rep. 1079.

3. Cardwell v. Sabichi, 59 Cal. 490; Robison v. Miller, 57 Miss. 237.

defendants, the return must clearly show upon which of them service has been made.¹

In some jurisdictions the character of the return is fixed by statute, and is required to contain a statement of the exact manner of service; in such cases a failure to observe the statutory requirement invalidates the service.²

Miller, 11 Ind. 382. But it is held in Iowa that a return on an original notice, "Served the within by reading" on a day named, is insufficient, as not showing to whom it was read. Boker v. Chapline, 12 Iowa 204; Bain v. Gal-year, 10 Iowa 585.

1. Service Upon Several Defendants.—Tappan v. Bruen, 5 Mass. 193; Parker v. Danforth, 16 Mass. 299; Fulton v. State, 14 Tex. App. 32; Rape v. Heaton, 9 Wis. 328; 76 Am. Dec. 269 (a return, "I have served this writ on defendant P and W by leaving a certified copy with his family in their residence"). Such a return cannot be dispensed with unless all the defendants appear. Stults v. Outcalt, 6 N. J. L. 130.

In an action against two, where there is a return of service on one only, which is silent as to the other, the legal conclusion is that there was no service on the latter. Granberry v. Wellborn, 4 Ala. 118; Gamble v. Warner, 16 Ohio 371; Blinn v. Chessemann (Minn. 1892), 51 N. W. Rep. 666.

A sheriff's return that he cannot find the defendants is equivalent to a return that he can find neither of them. Hitchcock v. Hahn, 60 Mich. 459.

Where a writ against several defendants is returned "Executed," the court will imply that it was executed on all the defendants. Cantley v. Moody, 7 Port. (Ala.) 443; and if the return is equivocal as to which of two defendants was served the justice may determine whether or not the service as to one was personal and sufficient. Fleming v. Nunn, 61 Miss. 603.

A legal service is sufficiently shown where the return showed that one of the defendants had been "Served," and that the others were "Not found," etc. Colerick v. Hooper, 3 Ind. 316; 56 Am. Dec. 505.

Where writs are issued in duplicate, running to different counties, the general return of "Executed" applies only to such of the defendants as reside within the county to which the writ issued. Bozman v. Brower, 6 How. (Miss.) 43.

Where a return recites the service of the writ upon persons—naming three defendants—and fees are charged for service of three copies, it sufficiently appears that each of the defendants was served with a copy of the writ. Martin v. Hargardine, 46 Ill. 322.

In the case of Thompson v. Griffis, 19 Tex. 115, there were three citations against A, B and C, each directing the sheriff to summon all three defendants, each of the citations being indorsed with the date of issue and the name of the particular defendant on whom it was to be served, and the sheriff returned on the citation, indorsed for C, "Executed on — Nov. 11th, by delivering a true copy of writ and petition, 1854." It was held that it showed no service. And so where the statute required a citation to be served by delivering a copy to each defendant, a return of service of the citation on the "Within named defendants, in person, a true copy," was insufficient. King v. Goodson, 42 Tex. 152; Schramm v. Gentry, 64 Tex. 143; Rutherford v. Davenport (Tex. 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 110.

2. Faison v. Wolf, 63 Miss. 24; York v. Crawford, 42 Miss. 508; Continental Ins. Co. v. Milliken, 64 Tex. 46; Graves v. Robertson, 22 Tex. 131; Gilbough v. Keller, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 364; Charless v. Marney, 1 Mo. 537; Faison v. Wolfe, 63 Miss. 24 (no presumption to support the service where return does not comply with statutory requirements).

Therefore, if service is required to be made by delivery of a certified copy, a return of service "by reading" is insufficient. Robbins v. Clemmens, 41 Ohio St. 285; Thomas v. State, 62 Miss. 184.

An example of a proper return under such statutes is this: "I executed the within by reading to the within-named A B at his residence in — county, on the — day of March, 18—." Gatton v. Walker, 9 Ark. 199; Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 840.

b. IN CASE OF SUBSTITUTED OR CONSTRUCTIVE SERVICE.—The return in this case must show on its face all the circumstances which authorize this manner of service¹—e. g., that the defendant was not found after diligent search,² etc.; and it must also show that all the requirements of the statute as to manner of service were fully complied with.³

1. The leading case upon this point is that of Settlemier v. Sullivan, 97 U. S. 444. A statute of Oregon provides that service in actions in personam may be made by the sheriff's delivering a copy of the notice to the defendant personally; or, if he cannot be found, to some white person of his family above the age of fourteen years, at his dwelling house or usual place of abode. In an action in which A was defendant, the sheriff's return showed that service was made by delivering a copy of the complaint and notice to the wife of the defendant, a white woman over fourteen years of age, at the defendant's usual place of abode, but contained no statement that A could not be found. Judgment was rendered against A, and there was a recital in the record "that the defendant, although duly served with the process, came not, but made default." Under these circumstances the court held: First, That the court by such service acquired no jurisdiction over the person of A, and that its judgment was therefore void. Second, That such substituted service, if ever sufficient for the purposes of jurisdiction, can only be made where the conditions upon which it is permissible are shown to exist. Third, That the inability of the sheriff to find A was not to be inferred, but must be affirmatively stated in his return. Fourth, That the recital in the record of the judgment was not evidence of due service, but must be read in connection with that part of the record which sets forth, as prescribed by statute, the proof of service. Fifth, That such proof must prevail over the recital, as the latter, in the absence of an averment to the contrary (the record being complete), can only be considered as referring to the form. Settlemier v. Sullivan, 97 U. S. 444. See also Hammond v. Olive, 44 Miss. 543; Grant v. Harlow, 11 Iowa 429; Oakey v. Drummond, 4 La. Ann. 363; Corcoran v. Riddell, 7 La. Ann. 268; *Chittenden v. 2. Matteson v. Smith, 37 Wis. 333; Phillips v. Winne (Supreme Ct.), 20 N. Y. Supp. 49. Where the statute allows service to be made upon the secretary of a company only in the absence of the president, or other chief officer, from the county, a return of service upon the secretary should set forth that the president or other chief officer was absent from the county and could not be found. Palmetto Town Co. v. Rucker, McCahon (U. S.) 146; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Gage, 63 Tex. 568. But it was added in the first case cited that such defect was not fatal, but might be amended. The rule is otherwise in Arkansas by statute. Ex parte St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 40 Ark. 141; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 547. See also infra, this title, Upon Corporations; Livar v. State, 26 Tex. App. 115.

What diligence was used by the officer is not necessary to be stated. Suerterlee v. Sir, 25 Wis. 357.

Wood*, 9 R. I. 241.

A leading case in this connection is that of Hammond v. Olive, 44 Miss. 543. The court, by Simrall, J., said: "The

This procedure is a departure from the common law, and the statute must be strictly followed. Unless it appears from the record that the return was in these particulars duly made, a judgment by default is void.¹ The return must show, therefore, that a proper copy was left at the defendant's last and usual place of abode, that the person with whom the copy was left was of the requisite age and a member of the family of the defendant, or, if no such person could be found, that a copy of the writ was posted on a conspicuous part of the premises; the omission of any one of these particulars renders the return invalid.²

Where no service is made, a simple statement of the fact is sufficient—e. g., "Non est inventus," "Nihil est," or "Not executed;"³ and when an officer returns that a defendant is not return must show that every condition has been complied with. First. It must declare that the defendant could not be found. Second. That the copy was left with the wife or some free white person above sixteen years of age. Third. If there be no free white person willing to receive the same, then the copy must be left at some public place at the dwelling house. The statute regards the three modes of service, in the order named, as gradations. The second cannot be used if the first can be made, nor the last until both the others have failed." See also Davis v. Patty, 42 Miss. 509. What these statutory requirements are has already been set forth. See supra, this title, Manner of Service; Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 850.

Everything may be inferred against the officer's return which its departure from the requirements of the statute will warrant. Madison Co. Bank v. Suman, 79 Mo. 527; Blanton v. Jamison, 3 Mo. 52; Stewart v. Stringer, 41 Mo. 400; 97 Am. Dec. 278; Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 508; U. S. v. American Bell Teleph. Co., 29 Fed. Rep. 17.

The only safe course for an officer in doubt is to make a special return according to the facts. Johnson v. Aylesworth, 2 Pittsb. (Pa.) 237.

2. Every Particular Must Be Stated.—Wilkinson v. Bayley, 71 Wis. 131; McConkey v. McCraney, 71 Wis. 576; Laney v. Garbee, 105 Mo. 355; 24 Am. St. Rep. 391; Laney v. Sweeney, 105 Mo. 360; Swift v. Meyers, 37 Fed. Rep.

37; Cole v. Hocha, 21 La. Ann. 613; Arnault v. St. Julien, 21 La. Ann. 630; Wheeler v. Wilkins, 19 Mich. 78; Mullins v. Sparks, 43 Miss. 129; Bustamente v. Bescher, 43 Miss. 172; Robison v. Miller, 57 Miss. 237 (name of party with whom copy was left need not be stated); Morehead v. Chaffe, 52 Miss. 161 (same); O'Hara v. Independence, Lumber, etc., Co., 42 La. Ann. 226.

3. Sherer v. Easton Bank, 33 Pa. St. 134; Clarke v. Redman, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 31. Compare Neyland v. State, 13 Tex. App. 536; Chase v. People, 2 Colo. 528 (return on scire facias—"Not found"); Chicago Dock, etc., Co. v. Kinzie, 93 Ill. 415 (same).

It is said in Sherer v. Easton Bank, 33 Pa. St. 139, that the return "Non est inventus" is applicable only to a capias.

In assumpsit against A, B, C and D, the sheriff returned the writ served as to A and B, "Not found" as to C and D, but stated in his return that he did not go to the house of D by order of plaintiff's attorney. It was held that there was no legal return of "not found" as to D. Lodge v. State Bank, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 557.

A return on an attachment for a witness in a criminal case that she "could not be found," is insufficient. The officer should state what inquiry and search he made, especially if in another parish. State v. Boitreaux, 31 La. Ann. 188.

The return must state something capable of being understood without the aid of evidence aliunde. It is said in one case that for this reason a return "n. e. i.," was of no effect whatever. Parker v. Grayson, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 171.

Where a return of "Not found" is found in his county, due diligence is presumed to have been used.¹ It has been said that "Nihil est" is the proper return upon the non-service of process, it being tantamount to an averment that the defendant has nothing in the bailiwick—no dwelling house, no family, no personal presence.²

c. WHERE SERVICE IS MADE ON CORPORATION.—In case of service upon a corporation the sheriff's return should show clearly upon what officer or agent service was made and the character of the office or agency;³ it is not essential that the full name of such officer or agent should be given.⁴ The time, place and manner of service must also be clearly stated;⁵ and if the return fails to show made by the sheriff upon an original notice it will be construed as meaning not found within the county, and a service by copy left at defendant's residence will prima facie be good. Macklot v. Hart, 12 Iowa 428.

A sheriff cannot make a return of non est inventus, if the defendant is a known inhabitant of another State or county. Kibbe v. Deering, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 24. Nor will such a return made before return day authorize service by publication. Palmer v. Cowdrey, 2 Colo. 1.

In one case it is said that it is not sufficient excuse for not serving a summons merely to state that defendant is out of the county; the return should state that he could not be found in the county so as to be served with process. Moore v. Miller, 16 N. J. L. 233.

1. Livar v. State, 26 Tex. App. 115; Neally v. Redman, 5 Iowa 387. Compare Matthews v. Miller, 47 N. J. L. 413. And see Dickison v. Dickison, 124 Ill. 483; Carlisle v. Cowan, 85 Tenn. 165 (construction of § 3466 of Code of Tennessee).

2. Sherer v. Easton Bank, 33 Pa. St. 139; Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed), § 841.

Where the sheriff knows the defendant is dead the return should be mortuus est, not nihil habet. An amendment, however, is permissible after execution, no rights having intervened. Burr v. Dougherty, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 6; Warder v. Tainter, 4 Watts (Pa.) 273.

3. Must State Name of Officer or Agent Served and Character of Agency.—Union Pac. R. Co. v. Pillsbury, 29 Kan. 652; Dickinson v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 43 Kan. 703; 44 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 465; Chicago Planing Mill Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 86 Ill. 587; Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Holbrook, 92 Ill. 297; Jones v. Hartford Ins. Co., 88 N.

Car. 499; Powder Co. v. Oakdale Coal, etc., Co., 14 Phila. (Pa.) 166; O'Brien v. Shaw's Flat, etc., Canal Co., 10 Cal. 343; Blodgett v. Schaffer, 94 Mo. 652. Compare Merriden v. Trussell, 52 Miss. 711. See also Boyle v. Whitney, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 501.

Therefore a return which omits the name of the agent with whom the copy was left and the statement that such person was an agent of the corporation, is bad. Truax v. Sterling, 74 Mich. 160; Grand Taver Min., etc., Co. v. Schirmer, 64 Ill. 106. Compare Talbot v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 82 Mich. 66.

In Oxford Iron Co. v. Spradley, 42 Ala. 24, a return showing service on "G. R., managing agent for defendant corporation" was held void.

Where the sheriff's return of service of process against a city was "Summoned Geo. P. Kane, Sheriff," "Service, of the within admitted, Albert Ritchie, City Solicitor," it was held that the defect in the return in failing to show what officer was served, was waived by the subsequent appearance of the defendants. Dugan v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 70 Md. 1.

4. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. McDougall, 108 Ind. 179. It is not essential that his name should be given at all where he is properly described, e. g., as on the "general agent." Goodwin v. Colorado Mortgage, etc., Co., 110 U. S. 1.

5. Kinfeke v. Merchants' Tr. Co., 3 McCrary (U. S.) 547.

Where a natural person is also defendant, a return "served each of the defendants personally with a copy of the within summons" is invalid, in that it fails to state sufficiently the manner of service on the corporation. Hayden v. Atlanta Sav. Bank, 66 Ga. 150.

that service was made upon the identical agent provided by the statute¹ or at the place provided,² it is insufficient.

Where service is made upon a subordinate officer or agent the return must show that service upon the superior officers was not practicable.³

2. The Several Returns.—There is no exact language in which a return must invariably be worded; any expressions which will show that the statutory requirements have been complied with will suffice. This may best be shown by examples.⁴

1. Must Show Service Upon Agent Provided by Statute.—Thus where the statute provides for service of process upon the "nearest station or freight agent" of a railroad company, a return of service "on the nearest agent" is not sufficient. Haley v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 80 Mo. 112; Norvell v. Porter, 62 Mo. 309; Dunn v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 45 Mo. App. 29. So where the statute authorizes service on "a regular ticket or freight agent," the return is insufficient if it fails to state that the ticket agent served was a "regular" one. Tallman v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 45 Fed. Rep. 156.

A return upon a summons against a railroad company, that it was served by delivering a copy thereof, with the indorsements thereon duly certified, "to Mr. Fish, agent of the within railroad company," is considered not sufficient evidence of service, as it fails to show that he is of that class of agents on whom service may be made under the laws of Kansas, ch. 80. Dickerson v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 43 Kan. 702; 44 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 465.

In a suit against a bank, if the writ of summons commands the sheriff to summon the president, a return of service "on A, the within-named defendant," does not show such service upon the bank of which A is president, as to confer jurisdiction. Blodgett v. Schaffer, 94 Mo. 652; Harrell v. Mexican Cattle Co., 73 Tex. 612.

A return showing service "on Charles C. Comstock as president of the Grand Rapids Chair Company, and who is the owner of such goods," is sufficient to show service on the company. Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104.

2. Place of Service.—Kinfeke v. Merchants' Dispatch Transp. Co., 3 McCrary (U. S.) 547.

A return of service on an agent of a corporation "at its only office" in the county is equivalent to a return of service at its "business" office. Hill v. St. Louis Ore. etc., Co., 90 Mo. 103.

3. Hoen v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 64 Mo. 561; Miller v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 431; supra, this title, Upon Domestic Corporations, where numerous other cases are collected.

4. Sufficient Returns.—The following returns have been held sufficient in case of personal service: Under a statute requiring sheriff to make return that defendant could not be found within his county: "I hereby certify and return that after diligent search and inquiry I am unable to find the within-named defendant within my bailiwick, and cannot have his body as I am within commanded." Lichfelt v. Kopp, 38 Mich. 312. See also Wood v. Thomas, 38 Mich. 686; Hammon v. Baker, 39 Mich. 472. The return upon a citation, "Executed thirty-first March, 1859, by delivering to the defendant a true copy of this writ, together with the accompanying certified copy of petition." Hill v. Grant, 33 Tex. 132. Barbour v. Newkirk, 83 Ky. 529; Graves v. Drane, 66 Tex. 658. A return upon summons, "Executed personally, with original and copy, defendant claiming such," conforms to a statute requiring that return state exact manner of service. Presley v. Anderson, 42 Miss. 274; Pendexter v. Cole (N. H. 1890), 20 Atl. Rep. 331. So of a sheriff's indorsement upon summons "Executed on the within named J J M, this Oct. 12, 1870, by personal service, copy waived." Milan v. Strickland, 45 Miss. 721. See also Smith v. Pattison, 45 Miss. 619. So also of a sheriff's indorsement on the process, "Executed on, etc., by delivering in person to A H a certified copy," etc., and duly signed. Clark v. Wilcox, 31 Tex. 322. Also a return, "Executed by leaving with F, the defendant, a copy," etc., is sufficient, it being tantamount to saying "Executed by delivering to the defendant in person a copy." Fitz- hugh v. Hall, 28 Tex. 558; Sanders v. City Nat. Bank (Tex. 1889), 12 S. W. Rep. 110. A return on a subpoena in chancery, directed to all defendants to the bill by name, "Executed on the parties, this Oct. 1, 1870, with copy." Florence v. Paschal, 50 Ala. 28. The words "Received in office, August 22, 1870," and "Executed August 22, 1870," followed by sheriff's name and title, and copied into the transcript immediately after the summons and complaint, are sufficient, after judgment by default, to show a regular service of the summons and complaint. Lenoir v. Broadhead, 50 Ala. 58. A return, "Served on defendant by reading and copy," is sufficient. Wilson v. Hayes, 18 Pa. St. 354; Marlowe v. Kuhlbeck, 2 Colo. 602. So of a return by sheriff that, on, etc., he served a summons on —, "who attempted to avoid service by concealing himself, and running from me at the time I read this process to him at the place I last saw him," is sufficient. Ornedorff v. Stanberry, 20 Ill. 89; Story v. Ware, 35 Miss. 399; 72 Am. Dec. 125. "Executed the within by reading the same to the within-named A, J, I, and M, and by delivering to each a true copy thereof on the 10th," etc. Bozarth v. Largent, 128 Ill. 98. "Personally served by reading in the hearing of the defendant and leaving a true copy with him." Grosvenor v. Henry, 27 Iowa 269. A statement by the officer that he served the defendant with a true copy of the summons is equivalent to saying that he delivered to him such a copy. Hedges v. Mace, 72 Ill. 472; Turner v. Jenkins, 79 Ill. 228. A return "Feb. 19, 1874, I have duly executed the within by reading the same to the within-named J," sufficiently states the date of service. Marlow v. Kuhlbeck, 2 Colo. 602. So a return, "Executed the 6th.—A.D., 1840," etc., on A B and C D, "the 28th day of July, 1840," shows with sufficient certainty that the service on A B was made the 6th of July, 1840. Thompson v. State Bank, 5 Ark. 245. A return, "Executed in person" and signed by the deputy sheriff in behalf of the sheriff, shows that the summons was actually served; and, if defective, can only be taken advantage of by plea in abatement. Barksdale v. Neal, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 314. Where the summons was against A B, Sr., and the return was "served on the within-named A B, Jr.," it was presumed that the sheriff had done his duty and served the summons on A B, Sr. Dawson v. State Bank, 3 Ark. 505.

The following are instances of proper returns in case of constructive service: "Served the within-named," A B, etc., "by leaving a true copy thereof for each of them," being followed by another averment, "Served the within by reading the same to the within-named" C D, etc. Brown v. Miner, 21 Ill. App. 60. Under a statute requiring service by leaving a copy "at the usual place of abode of defendant, with some free white person, a member of his family, and informing such person of the contents thereof," a return of delivery of copy at defendant's "residence to A, a white person, . . . and a member of his family, and explaining the contents of the same," shows a good service, although defendant had been absent from the State for several years. Du Val v. Johnson, 39 Ark. 182. See also Pigg v. Pigg, 43 Ind. 117; Phillips v. Evans, 64 Mo. 17. Under similar statutes, where the officer uses the word "residence" in his return, it will be presumed to be synonymous with "usual place of abode," and that the daughter found there, by the officer, was a member of the family. Smithson v. Briggs, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 180; Sexton v. Rock Island, etc., Lumber Co. (Kan. 1892), 30 Pac. Rep. 164. A return showing service on A, by leaving a copy with B, who, in the officer's presence, is said to have delivered it to A, sufficiently shows a service on A. Palmer v. Belcher, 21 Neb. 58.

Insufficient Returns.—The following have been held to be insufficient returns in case of personal service: "Executed by leaving a copy at J. F. Reynolds." Melvin v. Clark, 45 Ala. 285. Where a capias can be served only by reading to the defendant or delivering him a copy, a return that defendant was arrested and gave bond for his appearance, does not show service. Fulcher v. Lyon, 4 Ark. 449. A return to chancery summons, "Served, by reading to, and leaving a copy with, the within-named J H, on this 8th day of May, 1872," is too indefinite and uncertain, it failing to show what the officer read, or of what he served a copy, and does not show that he served a true copy. Hochlander v. Hochlander, 73 Ill. 618. A return by special deputy that he served the writ by reading it to defendant, is insufficient under a statute requiring service by reading and delivering copy. Noleman v. Weil, 72 Ill. 502; Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Joiner, 72 Ill. 520. A return that notice was served by reading "in presence and hearing of" defendant, is insufficient. The reading must be to the defendant. Hynek v. Englest, 11 Iowa 210. Compare McPherson v. State Bank, 4 Ark. 558. A return "by reading the same in his presence," is insufficient in not showing in whose presence it was read. Spencer v. Medder, 5 Mo. 458. A return on subpoena, "Executed on all in my bailiwick but R. S." Hackwith v. Damron, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 235. A constable's return to an attachment that he had "personally attempted to serve it on defendant by reading the same and offering a copy to him at the house of A, but he ran away. I could not deliver a copy to him." Holden v. Ranney, 45 Mich. 399. Compare Story v. Ware, 35 Miss. 399; 72 Am. Dec. 125. Under a statute requiring officer to return the facts as to the execution of the writ, a return upon chancery summons in the words, "Executed Oct. 21, 1859." Robertson v. Johnson, 40 Miss. 500; Merritt v. White, 37 Miss. 438; Naron v. Gwin, 43 Miss. 346. So of a return, "Executed by delivering a true copy, July 25, 1868," because it fails to show upon whom service was made. Woodliffe v. Connor, 45 Miss. 552; York v. Crawford, 42 Miss. 508. Compare Benson v. Holloway, 59 Miss. 358. Under a statute requiring the delivery of copy, a return of service "by reading to him a true and certified copy," etc. Newlove v. Woodward, 9 Neb. 502; Thomas v. State, 62 Miss. 184; Ross v. Ward, 16 N. J. L. 23. Return on a writ against two debtors, stating 'service upon one of them and saying nothing as to the other. Cook v. McDoel, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 317. "Served summons and complaint on defendant at W by delivering to him a true copy thereof." McMullin v. Mackey (Supreme Ct.), 6 N. Y. Supp. 885 (under New York statute). But return must not only state that copies were delivered to defendant, they must have been left with him. Syracuse Moulding Co. v. Squires, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 48. A return, "Executed by serving the defendant with true copy," is insufficient under Texas statute as not showing manner of service, or that copy was delivered to defendant in person. Graves v. Robertson, 22 Tex. 130; Willie v.

Thomas, 22 Tex. 175; Tullis v. Scott, 38 Tex. 537. So a return of a subpoena, "Served by reading in hearing of" the witness, is insufficient under statute requiring return to show that service was "by being read to the witness". Tooney v. State, 5 Tex. App. 163. The return to each of several citations was as follows: "Came to hand on the 13th day of April, 1883; executed on the same day by delivering to the defendant . . . in person, by and through H. B. Andrews, the vice-president thereof, a true copy of this citation." It was fatally defective, as it indicated that Andrews and not the sheriff served the copies. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Wave, 74 Tex. 47. See also King v. Goodson, 42 Tex. 152, where return was considered insufficient in not showing clearly service of both the citation and copy of the petition. Philadelphia v. Catheart, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 103.

The following have been held insufficient returns in case of substituted or constructive service: A return that copy was left at defendant's place of residence, with "a" person over fifteen years of age, is insufficient, in not stating the person to be a member of defendant's family. Dawson v. State Bank, 3 Ark. 505; Von Roy v. Blackman, 2 Woods (U. S.) 98; Mack v. Brown, 73 Ill. 295; Parks v. Weems, 9 Ark. 439; Ex parte Cross, 7 Ark. 44. The substitution of the word "house" for "usual place of abode" is a fatal defect in a return. Matthews v. Gordy, 2 Houst. (Del.) 573. A return, served on "L P W by copy left with A W, a clerk in the store of said W, he being over the age of fourteen years, no copy of petition demanded." Hendreys v. Wells, 10 Iowa 587. A return on chancery summons stated that the officer served the writ on defendant by leaving a copy at his place of abode, with a person named, "a member of his family, and a white person, of the age of ten years and upward," is insufficient in omitting to state that the officer informed the person with whom he left the copy of the contents thereof, as required by statute. Tompkins v. Wiltberger, 56 Ill. 385; Mack v. Brown, 73 Ill. 295. A return "Served by leaving copy of this notice with Mrs. A T, the mother of J W T, at his usual place of abode, said J W T not being found in my county," is deficient in not showing that A T was a member of the family of J W T,

3. Return Days.—Every process is made returnable at a certain return day fixed by law for the return of all process issued since the preceding return day.¹ The day fixed upon is usually the first day of the next term of the court whose process is to be re-or of the family where he had his residence. Lyon v. Thompson, 12 Iowa 183. A return, "Served the within notice by reading to and leaving a copy of the same with the mother of the within-named, she being a member of the family and over fourteen years of age (at her residence), the within-named defendants not being found," is insufficient in not showing that notice was left at the "usual place of residence" of the defendant, and in not giving the name of the person with whom copy was left. Tavenor v. Reed, 10 Iowa 416. An omission of the Christian name of such person, however, is not fatal. Morehead v. Chaffee, 52 Miss. 161; Robinson v. Miller, 57 Miss. 237. A return that defendant was cited by service "on Miss B. B. Simms, a white person about the age of fourteen, residing in defendant's house." McCracken v. Simms, 19 La. Ann. 33. Where the defendant is described as of D, but then commorant in B, and the officer returns a summons left at his last and usual place of abode known to him in B, there is a defect apparent on the record. Ames v. Winsor, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 247. A return of service "by leaving a copy at his residence on a table in the porch, he not being at home." Tomlinson v. Hoyt, 1 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 515; Eskridge v. Jones, 1 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 595. A return on chancery process, "Executed on H by leaving a true copy of the original at his residence, in the hands of his wife," is insufficient in not showing that the defendant could not be found. Foster v. Simmons, 40 Miss. 585. A return, "Executed by leaving a copy at defendant's house." Fatheree v. Long, 5 How. (Miss.) 661. A return upon a writ that it was served upon the wife of the defendant is insufficient in not stating that it was at his usual place of abode. Smith v. Rollins, 25 Mo. 408; Vaughan v. Brown, 9 Ark. 20; 47 Am. Dec. 730; Piggott v. Snell, 59 Ill. 106. A return of service by leaving, etc., "at the usual place of abode when in the city of Cape Girardeau, of the within-named," etc., "with a person of the family over the age of fifteen years," etc. Brown v. Langlois, 70 Mo.

226. See also Allen v. Singer Mfg. Co., 72 Mo. 326. A return of an officer that he left a summons at the house of the defendant with his housekeeper, informing her of the contents. Despreaux v. Barber, 3 N. J. L. 1041. A return "served by reading the contents of the within to the families of the defendants at their place of abode." Ballinger v. Sherron, 14 N. J. L. 144. In West Virginia a return of service is fatally defective unless it shows that the person to whom the notice was delivered was found at the defendant's "usual place of abode" or received "information of its purport." Vandiver v. Roberts, 4 W. Va. 493; Lewis v. Botkin, 4 W. Va. 533. In Wistar v. Philadelphia, 86 Pa. St. 215, a return of scire facias on a municipal claim was held fatally defective in not showing that a copy was posted on a "conspicuous part of premises for two weeks before the return day."

In Case of Service on Partners.—In an action against two partners, an official return by the sheriff that he had served the defendants, J. B. & Co., in person with a true copy of the declaration was sufficient. Peel v. Bryson, 72 Ga. 331; Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 876a. See also 2 Bates, Law of Partnership, §§ 1062, 85. A return on garnishment which merely states service on the firm of "N. & Bro." is insufficient, in that it fails to show who composed the firm. Mitchell v. Greenwald, 43 Miss. 167.

1. Where the return day is fixed by statute, no discretion is left to the district clerk or court, and if one be made returnable at any other time, there is no jurisdiction over the defendant. Crowell v. Galloway, 3 Neb. 215. Consult here Patout v. Rawls, 4 La. Ann. 485; State v. Republican Val., etc., R. Co., 27 Neb. 852; Craighead v. Martin, 25 Minn. 41. If a writ is made returnable on a legal holiday, it may be properly returned on the first succeeding judicial day. Ostertag v. Galbraith, 23 Neb. 730. See also, in this connection, People v. Kent, 41 Mich. 722; Hercules Iron Works v. Elgin, etc., R. Co. (Ill. 1892), 30 N. E. Rep. 1050; Lindsay v. Tansley, 63 Hun (N. Y.) 635.

turned.¹ No process can be made returnable to such a day that a term of the court will intervene between the day of issue and the return day.²

1. This is a manner so exclusively regulated by statute in each State that it is impossible to state any settled rule that will apply to all cases. See, however, for the rule stated above, Graves v. Cole, 2 Greene (Iowa) 467; Caskey v. Nitcher, 8 Ala. 622; Watson v. Miller, 55 Tex. 289; Briggs v. Sneghan, 45 Ind. 14; People v. Judge, 38 Mich. 308; Garner v. Johnson, 22 Ala. 494; Story v. Ware, 35 Miss. 399; 72 Am. Dec. 125; Territory v. Ashenfelter, 4 N. Mex. 85; Holliday v. Cooper, 3 Mo. 286; Starbird v. Brown, 84 Me. 238.

Where, however, a writ was made returnable to the next term generally, instead of the first day of the term, as the statutes required, but was, nevertheless, executed before the term, and returned the first day, a motion to quash the writ and all the subsequent proceedings, made at the ensuing term, was overruled. Hare v. Niblo, 4 Leigh (Va.) 359.

After the time for the service of a writ for the return term has expired, and no service has been made, the return day may be changed to the next succeeding term. Gardiner v. Gardiner, 71 Me. 266.

In some States the return day is fixed by statute; in others it is stated in the process itself or in the memorandum to the clerk which asks for the process. 4 Minor's Inst. (2nd ed.), pp. 528, et seq.; State v. Republican Val., etc., R. Co., 27 Neb. 852.

A writ made returnable on the first day of the next term, to be holden, etc., without specifying the time, is valid when the time is fixed by law. Rogers v. Miller, 5 Ill. 333.

In Virginia and West Virginia all writs are required to be returnable within ninety days from their issuance; and this term "all writs" includes a scire facias. Lavell v. McCurdy, 77 Va. 763; 4 Minor's Inst. (2nd ed.) 545; Gas Co. v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 22.

By the reformed practice of North Carolina, the summons in all civil actions in the supreme court is returnable before the judge in term time; the summons in special proceedings is returnable before the clerk, in his office, at any time. Tate v. Powe, 64 N. Car.

644; Woodley v. Gilliam, 64 N. Car. 649.

2. No Term of Court Should Intervene Between Return Day and Day of Issuance.—Kelly v. Gilman, 29 N. H. 385; 61 Am. Dec. 648; Briggs v. Sneghan, 45 Ind. 14; Shirley v. Hagar, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 225; McAlpine v. Smith, 68 Me. 423. This was the rule at common law for the reason that otherwise great injustice might have been done by keeping the defendant in prison an unnecessary length of time; and while the same reason does not now hold, the rule is continued with us from other and equally sufficient reasons. Will v. Whitney, 15 Ind. 194; Parsons v. Loyd, 3 Wils. 341; Atkinson v. Taylor, 2 Wils. 117; Burk v. Barnard, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 309; Bunn v. Thomas, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 190.

This rule applies in Illinois, provided the suit in which the process issues is commenced more than ten days before the first day of the term. If less than ten days are to intervene between the issuing of the summons and the beginning of the term of court it must be made returnable to the next term thereafter, thus allowing one term to intervene. But not more than one term can intervene; nor is even that permitted save under the proviso mentioned. Hocklander v. Hocklander, 73 Ill. 618; Miller v. Handy, 40 Ill. 448; Elee v. Wait, 28 Ill. 70; Calhoun v. Webster, 3 Ill. 221; Mechanics' Sav. Inst. v. Givens, 82 Ill. 157.

A similar doctrine prevails in Mississippi. See Hurst v. Strong, 1 How. (Miss.) 123.

In New Hampshire the doctrine is somewhat confused, the court there holding that a writ of mesne process commanding the arrest of the defendant, returnable after an intervening term, is void; but other writs, in such cases, are generally amendable. Kelly v. Gilman, 29 N. H. 385; 61 Am. Dec. 648.

In Alabama it has been uniformly held, however, that the evident intent is that the return day in the case mentioned above is the fourth Monday immediately after the date of the writ. Lore v. McRae, 12 Ala. 444; Gibson v. Laughlin, Minor (Ala.) 182; Findley v. Ritchie, 8 Port. (Ala.) 452.

If the time of return is fixed by law, a writ made returnable at any other time is irregular and may be quashed on motion.¹ So, also, if the return day be misstated,² or if the writ is made returnable to an impossible term of the court, or to a term unknown to the law.³ So where the day of the return of the writ is dies non.⁴

But in Illinois such writs are held void. Miller v. Handy, 40 Ill. 448; Hildreth v. Hough, 20 Ill. 331; Culyer v. Phelps, 130 Ill. 217. Compare Murphy v. Williams, 1 Ark. 376; Phillip v. Lemoyne, 4 Ark. 144; Winston v. Miller, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 550.

A writ returnable on a certain day of a month subsequent to its issue, although without the word next or any express statement of the year of the return, is returnable in the month named of the current year. Nash v. Mallory, 17 Mich. 232; Vinton v. Mead, 17 Mich. 388.

1. Sanders v. Rains, 10 Mo. 770 (writ made returnable at an earlier day after its date than allowed by law); Dyott v. Pennock, 2 Miles (Pa.) 213; Watson v. Miller, 55 Tex. 289; Thomas v. Womack, 64 N. Car. 657; Williams v. Rogers, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 163. Compare Fisher v. Collins, 25 Ark. 97 (writ may be amended so as to be made returnable at proper time).

This principle was sustained in Rattan v. Stone, 4 Ill. 540, and the court added that if, upon quashing the writ, the action was continued, with an order for an alias writ to issue, the alias might be considered as the commencement of the action, and the words "as you have been heretofore commanded" stricken out as surplusage.

And a writ made returnable at a wrong time may be abated, even though the law, which had been passed, making a change in the time of returning such writ may not have been published. Thompson v. McHenry, 18 Ark. 537. Compare Fisher v. Collins, 25 Ark. 97.

2. Bell v. Austin, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 90; Craighead v. Martin, 25 Minn. 41.

A writ which the clerk was directed to issue returnable to one date, but issued returnable to another is a nullity. Bolling v. Anderson, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 550.

This principle is not undoubted, however; thus, where original service was properly made, but the copy left with the defendant May 2, as the return day, while the original notice named May 24, which was, in fact, the first day of the term, the service was held to be simply defective, and did not avoid a judgment rendered thereon for want of jurisdiction. Irions v. Keystone Mfg. Co., 61 Iowa 406. Likewise a capias returnable "on the seventh day of October, A. D. 1879, that being the first day of the next succeeding term," was held fatally defective, although the first day of the term was the sixth day of October. People v. Judge, 41 Mich. 722. And in another case it was held that the court may permit an amendment of a summons which has been drawn up returnable at a time other than that fixed by law. Fisher v. Collins, 25 Ark. 97. Compare Thomas v. Womack, 64 N. Car. 657; Waltson v. Bryan, 64 N. Car. 764.

A writ purporting to bear date Oct. 23, 1863, returnable in July next, issued between June 20 and 25, 1863, is likely to delude the defendant by the confusion of dates, and should, therefore, be quashed. Gorman v. Steed, 1 W. Va. 1.

3. Such process is utterly void, and being void is not amendable. Lowrey v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 83 Ga. 504; Brown v. Simpson, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 331; Holliday v. Cooper, 3 Mo. 286. See also Darby v. McConnell, 13 Ill. 352 (process may be returnable to a special term whether issued before or after such term was appointed).

A capias returnable in vacation is void, and will be quashed on motion made at the earliest opportunity, notwithstanding that, from excess of caution, defendant may have given bail to the sheriff, filed bail to the action, and pleaded to the declaration. Leigh v. Alpaugh, 24 N. J. L. 629.

But a summons will not, according to Indiana code, be set aside, merely because it was returnable in vacation. Ross v. Glass, 70 Ind. 391.

4. See SUNDAY. See also DAY, vol. 5, p. 85.

Thus, a subpoena made returnable on Sunday is irregular, and will not warrant the issuing of an attachment for disobedience thereof, as no court can be held on that day for any purpose. Gould v. Spencer, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 541.

If a writ is made returnable on no day whatever and judgment is entered by default, such judgment is irregular for want of notice.¹

Process should properly be returned on the return day; if however, it has been served, there can be no objection to its being returned before the regular day, since no possible injury can occur from it.² But if the return is to be "Not found after diligent search," or "Not executed," or of similar character, showing a non-execution, it must not be made before the regular return day.³ In no case can a return be made after the return day.⁴

As to the exact hour of the day at which the writ must be returned, there is no settled rule. It seems that it may be returned at any reasonable hour, and if an hour is fixed by law, the return must be made accordingly.⁵ A legislative act changing the time of holding the court, without requiring writs already issued to be returned for correction, makes them returnable by force of law to the substituted terms of the court.⁶

An irregularity like this is generally avoided by having the writ returnable to "the next term of court," or to "the first Monday after a certain date," etc. If, however, the date is fixed by the calendar—e. g. the 31st of May, and such day happens to be dies non, it seems that the writ will not be void, but that the return day will be the first judicial day thereafter. Ostertag v. Galbraith, 23 Neb. 730; Kinney v. Emery, 37 N. J. Eq. 339. This rule is by no means certain, it being held in some cases that a writ returnable to a dies non is returnable to a time when it is impossible for a court to be held, and is therefore void and incapable of amendment. Kenworthy v. Peppiat, 4 B. & A. 288, and cases cited. See also Bell v. Austin, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 90; Sanders v. Rains, 10 Mo. 772.

1. Bobb v. Graham, 4 Mo. 222.

2. Walker v. Birdwell, 21 Tex. 92.

3. Glover v. Rawson, 3 Chand. (Wis.) 249; Palmer v. Cowdrey, 2 Colo. 1.

But if the sheriff makes a non est inventus return within a day or two after he receives it and long before the return day, the court is bound to receive it, and is justified in proceeding to judgment; and, if the defendant is injured thereby, his remedy is against the sheriff and not by writ of error. Glover v. Rawson, 3 Chand. (Wis.) 249. Compare Palmer v. Cowdrey, 2 Colo. 1.

In Hitchcock v. Hahn, 60 Mich. 459, a sheriff's return on attachment certified to a seizure on a certain day, and that he was unable to find defendant. The writ was returned on the return day. It was held that the recital of inability to find defendant related to the return day, and that, therefore, the return was not premature.

4. Where the writ is not served until after the return day, though subsequently returned, the proceedings are irregular upon their face, and not to be cured by intendment, nor is a motion to dismiss the process for this irregularity a waiver thereof. Blodgett v. Brattleboro, 28 Vt. 695.

5. Hour of Return.—In Rhode Island, writs from a justice's court are required to state the hour of holding the court and of return of process. The universal practice, however, is to allow one hour after the expiration of the time specified. Thus an original writ, returnable at ten o'clock, must be returned not later than eleven to give the court jurisdiction over the defendant; and neither a previous agreement of defendant's counsel to waive the time, nor a custom to enter delayed writs and continue them, can give the court jurisdiction if the writ is not returned within the time stated. Brown v. Carroll, 16 R. I. 604. Compare Dyer v. Smith, 12 Conn. 384; Blanchard v. Walker, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 455.

A similar doctrine prevails in Nebraska, and unless it is specified that standard time is relied on it will be presumed that common time was intended to be meant. Searles v. Averhoff, 28 Neb. 668.

6. Freeman v. Thompson, 53 Mo. 183; Woodward v. Peabody, 39 N. H.

4. Where Returnable.—The nature of the word "return" indicates that a writ must be returned to the court from whence it issued.¹ Some authorities maintain, however, that the mistake of returning a writ to the wrong clerk's office is not so fatal as to invalidate proceedings based upon the return, it being considered that the statute designating the office is merely directory.²

5. Effect of Return—In General.—The general rule is that the sheriff's return is conclusive proof of service and of the other facts which it recites, and that it is beyond contradiction in a collateral proceeding.³

a. AS AGAINST THE OFFICER.—As against the officer himself⁴

189; Thompson v. McHenry, 18 Ark. 537.

Where a citation issued, returnable on a different date from that prescribed by law, in anticipation of the adoption of a new constitution, it was without authority of law, since the new judiciary system could only take effect after the ratification of the new constitution had been officially made known. Watson v. Miller, 55 Tex. 289.

1. Wright v. Marvin, 59 Vt. 457. In this case the return was made to the plaintiff's attorney. See also Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 883; Wills v. Whittier, 45 Me. 544; Cutler v. Rathbone, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 204.

In People v. Vermillion Co., 40 Ill. 125, an application for an alternative mandamus was made to the supreme court at Mount Vernon to be made returnable to the term to be held in Springfield. It was held by the court that such a writ could not be awarded in one grand division of the State and made returnable in another. In such a case the jurisdiction of the court is exclusive in each grand division.

Where a writ was made returnable at "a court to be held at," etc., and the circuit court had exclusive jurisdiction of such suit, it was held that the writ was returnable to the circuit court at that place. Wharton v. Conger, 9 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 510.

In an action of trespass on the freehold, before a justice of the peace, the writ must be made returnable in the town where one of the parties resides, if both parties are citizens of the State; and the writ will abate, if made returnable in the town where the land lies, if neither of the parties resides in that town. June v. Conant, 17 Vt. 656.

See also, in this connection, Richardson v. Stevens, 41 Vt. 120. If the justice has, before the return of process, been removed, a return made to an officer designated by statute to take his place is a sufficient return. Hampton v. Boylan, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 151.

2. Cutler v. Rathbone, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 204; Garlock v. Ontario Bank, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 288; Lee v. Lake, 13 Mich. 220. These cases, however, all depend upon the construction of a statute and can hardly be said to establish a universal rule.

3. For it becomes a part of the record. This is undoubtedly the rule in England, and is followed in almost every State of the Union. Stewart v. Stewart, 27 W. Va. 167, where the authorities are reviewed. See also Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 868; Barrows v. National Rubber Co., 13 R. I. 48; Higgs v. Huson, 8 Ga. 317; Davant v. Carlton, 57 Ga. 489; State v. Kenniston, 67 Me. 558; Elder v. Cozart, 59 Ga. 199; Hunter v. Stoneburner, 92 Ill. 75; Leitch v. Colson, 8 Ill. App. 458; Ryan v. Lander, 89 Ill. 554; Gatlin v. Dibrell, 74 Tex. 36; Hunt v. Weiner, 39 Ark. 70; Chapline v. Robertson, 44 Ark. 202; Baker v. Jamison, 73 Iowa 698; Cully v. Shirk (Ind. 1892), 30 N. E. Rep. 882; Clark v. Shaw, 79 Ind. 164; Putnam v. Man, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 202; 20 Am. Dec. 686; Allen v. Martin, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 300; 25 Am. Dec. 564; Green v. Kindy, 43 Mich. 279; Stinson v. Snow, 10 Me. 263; Stewart v. Griswold, 134 Mass. 391; Elder v. Cozart, 59 Ga. 199. Compare Watson v. Watson, 6 Conn. 334.

It is said in one case that a sheriff's return of service of the writ is conclusive, and if it is defective on its face, the defendant should rule the sheriff to amend, and cannot take the objection on the trial. Zion Church v. St. Peter's Church, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 215.

4. This principle is well established. See Blue v. Com., 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 26; Murrell v. Smith, 3 Dana (Ky.) 462; and his legal representatives,¹ his return is conclusive, and he cannot be allowed to contradict it. He may, however, in some cases, obtain leave of the court to amend it,² and this is always the proper course. It is also prima facie evidence in his favor.³

b. AS AGAINST PARTIES.—The rule here is that, as against parties and privies in the action in which the process issued,⁴ the sheriff's official return, being a part of the record,⁵ is conclusive

Hustick v. Allen, 1 N. J. L. 168; Duncan v. Gardine, 59 Miss. 550; Benjamin v. Hathaway, 3 Conn. 528; Stone v. Montgomery, 35 Miss. 83; Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 858; Winnebago Co. v. Brones, 68 Iowa 682; Mendleson v. Paschen, 71 Wis. 591; Hensley v. Rose, 76 Ala. 373. Compare Decker v. Armstrong, 87 Mo. 316. This rule applies, of course, to all officers making returns. See cases just cited.

Where a constable has, without objection, given evidence in apparent contradiction to his return, he may be questioned further for the purpose of explaining such contradiction. State v. Caldwell, 115 Ind. 6. But a sheriff's entry in his writ book, accompanied by his personal recollection, will rebut the presumption from his return that the summons was personally served. Genobles v. West, 23 S. Car. 154. And his testimony in explanation of what was meant by his return is competent, and properly admitted when it does not contradict such return. Leonard v. O'Neal, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 158; Liston v. Central Iowa R. Co., 70 Iowa 714; 26 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 593.

Entries made by the sheriff on separate slips of paper and attached to an execution, are part of the record—as much so as if indorsed on the execution—and hence admissible in evidence with the execution. Hammett v. Farmer, 26 S. Car. 566.

And it is also held that a sheriff may be called to prove that a recital in his return was made by mistake or inadvertence, but not to vary the return, in the absence of fraud or mistake. King v. Russell, 40 Tex. 124.

The return of an officer, where he himself is a party, is prima facie evidence only. Nichols v. Patton, 18 Me. 238; 36 Am. Dec. 713; Sias v. Badger, 6 N. H. 393.

Likewise in a Missouri case it is said, that in action by an execution debtor against a sheriff for the value of property exempt from execution, levied upon and sold by the sheriff, the latter may contradict his return by showing that the property so levied upon and sold was that of the plaintiff and was levied upon by mistake. Decker v. Armstrong, 87 Mo. 316.

In Weidman v. Weitzel, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 96, where the return was made two years after the proper time, it was held not conclusive.

1. State v. Penner, 27 Minn. 269; Clarke v. Gary, 11 Ala. 98.

A sheriff's administrator cannot insist that the sheriff's return was conclusive evidence of payment of the money due under the execution sale. Winnebago Co. v. Brones, 68 Iowa 682.

2. Henry v. Stone, 2 Rand. (Va.) 455; Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 868; Walters v. Moore, 90 N. Car. 41.

3. Hensley v. Rose, 76 Ala. 373; Gyfford v. Woodgate, 11 East 297; Rex v. Elkins, 2 Burr. 2129. Compare Browning v. Hanford, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 586; Hessong v. Pressley, 86 Ind. 555; Stanton v. Hodges, 6 Vt. 64. But is not evidence in his favor to excuse a neglect of duty. Holderman v. Brasfield, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 271.

4. Decker v. Armstrong, 87 Mo. 316; Sawyer v. Harmon, 136 Mass. 414; Baker v. Baker, 125 Mass. 7; Lowery v. Caldwell, 139 Mass. 88; Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 65; Davis v. Baker, 72 Cal. 494; Wilson v. Hurst, Pet. (C. C.) 441; Bennethum v. Bowers, 133 Pa. St. 332; Stinson v. Snow, 10 Me. 263. Col. Ins. Co. v. Force, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 353; Rowell v. Klein, 44 Ind. 290; 15 Am. Rep. 235; Phillips v. Evans, 64 Mo. 17; Fitzgerald v. Kimball, 86 Ill. 396. Compare Burton v. Schenck, 40 Minn. 52; Meyer v. Whitehead, 62 Miss. 387 (special statutory provision).

As to those not parties or privies the return is not conclusive. Bott v. Burnell, 11 Mass. 163; Lawrence v. Pond, 17 Mass. 433; Whitaker v. Sumner, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 551; 19 Am. Dec. 298; Diller v. Roberts, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 60; 15 Am. Dec. 578; Straub v. Wooten, 45 Ark. 112.

evidence of the facts stated therein, and cannot be impeached in a collateral proceeding.¹ This is undoubtedly the rule in England,² and in most of the States.³ In some jurisdictions, however, it is considered as merely prima facie evidence, which may be rebutted.⁴

This rule applies to the return made by a sheriff or marshal on every kind of process which he is authorized to execute,⁵ and also

In Kentucky it is only prima facie evidence before judgment. Barbour v. Newkirk, 83 Ky. 529. But after judgment it is conclusive. Stewart v. Stewart, 27 W. Va. 162; Hobart v. Bennett, 77 Me. 401.

Michigan Rule.—In Michigan the rule is stated to be that a return showing regular service of declaration and rule to plead as the beginning of a suit, cannot be contradicted for the purpose of invalidating the proceedings founded thereon; but it may be contradicted to show excuse for default. Zimmerman v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 1 Mich. N. P. 14.

5. Rule Applies to Every Process.—On attachment. Morse v. Smith, 47 N. H. 474; Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 65; Sams v. Armstrong, 8 Mo. App. 573; Wilder v. Holden, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 8; Wade on Attachments, § 156. On execution. Trigg v. Lewis, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 129; Stewart v. Stewart, 27 W. Va. 167; Crocker on Sheriffs, 190 et seq. But it is said that a sheriff's return on an execution is not evidence in his favor of the fact of payment. First v. Miller, 4 Bibb. (Ky.) 311; Cator v. Stokes, 1 M. & S. 599. On replevin. Green v. Kindy, 43 Mich. 279; Parker v. Simonds, 8 Met. (Mass.) 205; Stephens v. Frazier, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 250; Phillips v. Hyde, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 439. On summons. Genobles v. West, 23 S. Car. 154, and other cases previously cited.

In a replevin suit, defendant had judgment for a return or, if that could not be had, for the value of the property. Execution issued and a levy was made, the sheriff stating in his published notice of sale that a return of the property replevied could not be had. It was held that this statement was equivalent to a return on the execution and could not be contradicted on the motion to recall the execution and to have the judgment declared satisfied. Irvin v. Smith, 66 Wis. 113.

Exception—Return on Chancery Process.—In Lesterick v. Hamilton, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 312, an exception to the general rule is made in case of process issuing out of chancery.

But as a general rule there is no distinction either in the effect or character of returns between process from chancery and that from other courts. Crombie v. Little, 47 Minn. 581.

to an amended return.¹ A return may only be impeached by a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose,² and there are many authorities which maintain that a return is conclusive upon the parties to a suit, and that the only remedy for a false or incorrect return lies in an action against the officer.³ But there seems to be no reason why a return may not be impeached by a direct proceeding just as any other portion of the record may be; that is, either by motion to set aside,⁴ or by application to the court

1. The amended return takes the place of the original one in every particular. Rickards v. Ladd, 6 Sawy. (U. S.) 40; Hill v. Cunningham, 25 Tex. 25.

2. Return May be Impeached Only in a Direct Proceeding.—Harrison v. Hart, 21 Ill. App. 348; Devant v. Carlton, 57 Ga. 489; Flaniken v. Neal, 67 Tex. 629; Loughridge v. Bowland, 52 Miss. 546; Phillips v. Evans, 64 Mo. 17; Brown v. Brown, 10 Neb. 349; Schneitman v. Noble, 75 Iowa 120; 9 Am. St. Rep. 467; Ketchum v. White, 72 Iowa 193; Levan v. Millholland, 114 Pa. St. 49; Michels v. Stork, 52 Mich. 260; Harris v. Lester, 80 Ill. 307; Hunter v. Stoneburner, 92 Ill. 75; Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 866a; Mueller v. Bates, 2 Disney (Ohio) 318. Compare Holmes v. Buckner, 67 Tex. 107; Von Roy v. Blackman, 3 Woods (U. S.) 98; Johnson v. Gregory (Wash. 1892), 29 Pac. Rep. 831; Crane v. McCoy, 1 Bond (U. S.) 429. As to the Georgia doctrine, see O'Bryan v. Calhoun, 68 Ga. 215.

Therefore, a suit in equity will not lie to set aside a judgment founded on a regular return of service, upon the allegation that the process was not, in truth, served. This is impeaching the return collaterally. Johnson v. Jones, 2 Neb. 126.

In order to contradict a sheriff's return that he had complied with the formalities of law as to seizure, etc., in a judicial sale, its errors must be specially set forth and shown. Fortier v. Zimple, 6 La. Ann. 54.

3. Action Against Officer for False Return.—Garlock v. Ontario Bank, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 288; Stinson v. Snow, 10 Me. 263; Jensen v. Crevier, 33 Minn. 372; Hawks v. Baldwin, 1 Brayt. Stuart*, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 105; Stone v. Richardson, 76 Ga. 97.

The case of Nichols v. Nichols, 96 Ind. 433, is an extreme one; there the defendant, Geo. D. Nichols, instituted a proceeding to set aside a default for the reason that he was not served with process. The sheriff's return showed service upon Geo. D. Nichols, but the defendant claimed that the service was upon one Geo. D. Nicholas. He was not allowed to prove his claim, the court insisting that his only remedy lay in an action against the sheriff, since the officer's return imported absolute verity. But this case has been limited by a more recent one. Nietert v. Trentman, 104 Ind. 392. Compare Gary v. State, 11 Tex. App. 527; Putnam v. Man, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 202; 20 Am. Dec. 686.

In an action against a sheriff for refusing to levy an execution, his return of a prior attachment is not conclusive, but may be contradicted. Smith v. Burnham, 58 N. H. 205.

In an action upon a constable's bond for breach of duty, his return on a writ is not conclusive. Waymire v. State, 80 Ind. 67; Craven v. Higginbotham, 83 Ala. 429 (parol evidence admitted).

4. Grady v. Gosline, 48 Ohio St. 665. In Nietert v. Trentman, 104 Ind. 390, the defendant was allowed to show, in a complaint to set aside the return, that he had not been served with process, although the return stated that he had. See also Zimmerman v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 1 Mich. N. P. 14; Godwin v. Monds, 106 N. Car. 448.

direct,¹ or by plea in abatement verified by affidavit and interposed at the earliest opportunity,² or by original or cross-bill in equity.³ A party cannot, however, raise an objection to its sufficiency or truth for the first time in an appellate court.⁴

The evidence required to impeach or falsify a return must be sufficient to rebut the very strong presumption which the law allows in favor of the truth of the statement of its officer, and must, therefore, be very clear and decisive.⁵ It is not like an

So in Loughridge v. Bowland, 52 Miss. 548, it is said that a return on attachment, if irregular, may be set aside on motion. See also Jensen v. Crevier, 33 Minn. 372; Crosby v. Farmer, 39 Minn. 305, in which last case it is said that the return of an officer of the service of a summons is not conclusive on defendant, but may be impeached by affidavit, on motion or other direct proceedings in an action to set aside the judgment on default. See also Burton v. Schenck, 40 Minn. 52.

In New York a motion to vacate the return on an execution and to compel a true return affords the appropriate remedy when the execution has been satisfied and the sheriff returns it unsatisfied. In re Dawson, 20 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 188.

1. Stewart v. Camden, etc., R. Co., 33 N. J. L. 115; Gary v. State, 11 Tex. App. 527. Compare Primrose v. Browning, 59 Ga. 69.

In Crosby v. Farmer, 39 Minn. 305, the court states that "the general tendency, especially in States having the code practice, is to allow the return to be impeached by affidavit on motion, or other direct proceeding to vacate." 3. Randall v. Collins, 58 Tex. 231. In O'Conner v. Wilson, 57 Ill. 226, it is said that in a proper case equity will always relieve one against the effects of a false return when an action against an officer is inadequate and an amendment is not permissible. See also Owens v. Ranstead, 22 Ill. 161.

4. In Cunningham v. Mitchell, 4 Rand. (Va.) 189, the doctrine is thus stated: A sheriff's return may be contradicted by evidence aliunde, in which case the sheriff himself is a competent witness to prove its truth. After judgment by default, however, a party cannot object in an appellate court to the truth of the return. See also Dasher v. Dasher, 47 Ga. 320.

An instruction in substance giving the same legal effect to the negative presumption arising from the failure of a sheriff's fee-book to show a charge for service of citation, as to the affirmative return on the citation itself, that it had been served, is error. Randall v. Collins, 52 Tex. 435.

In Davant v. Carlton, 53 Ga. 491, the defendant entered a motion to set aside a judgment on the ground that he had never been served with process, and had not appeared or acknowledged service. It appeared in evidence, on the trial of an issue formed in the matter, that there was a due return by the sheriff of personal service, and it was held error in the court to refuse to charge that under the law it required the strongest evidence to overcome the effect of the sheriff's entry, and to charge in lieu thereof that the sheriff's entry was prima facie evidence, but like other ordinary issue of fact, to be determined by a mere preponderance of testimony.¹ Being the statement of a sworn officer who is disinterested, it seems that the testimony of more than one witness is required to prove it false,² and parol testimony can no more be admitted to falsify it than to impeach any other part of the record,³ though it may be admitted to explain a return,⁴ or to presumptions it might be rebutted by proof. Starkweather v. Morgan, 15 Kan. 274.

And it is said that a plea contradicting an officer's return will not be received or tolerated without a verification on oath, and it is not erroneous to strike from the files a plea that is not so verified. Ryan v. Lander, 89 Ill. 554.

The rule applies, although the sheriff has no recollection of making the service. Tatum v. Curtis, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 360.

An affidavit, on a motion to set aside a default on the ground of a defect on the face of the citation, and an annexed citation showing such defect, and alleging to be the citation which was served, are insufficient to overthrow the return of the sheriff showing that no such defect existed. *Wood v. In an action for a malicious attachment, the official return of the attachment is not conclusive, but may be contradicted by parol. Mott v. Smith, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 33.

It has been held, however, that in an action on a foreign judgment, the record return of an officer showing service of process, by which the court claimed to obtain jurisdiction, may be contradicted by parol evidence. Webster v. Hunter, 50 Iowa 215.

In a proceeding original or by cross-bill to set aside a judgment obtained upon default in favor of a party who fraudulently procured the record to show service, parol evidence contradicting the officer's return will be heard; but the evidence impeaching the verity of the return must be clear and satisfactory. Whether such evidence is admissible when the judgment plaintiff was innocent of conniving at or procuring the false return, quære. Randall v. Collins, 58 Tex. 231; Flaniken v. Neal, 67 Tex. 629.

In a proceeding by a surety to quash an execution upon the ground that a former execution had been levied on sufficient property of the principal to satisfy the judgment, it was allowed to introduce parol evidence on the part of the surety to contradict the officer's return on the execution thus levied: "Held up by order and consent of all parties." Hutton v. Campbell, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 170; Shannon v. McMullin, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 211. See also Phillips v. Elwell, 14 Ohio St. 244; 84 Am. Dec. 373.

Parol evidence has been admitted to contradict an indorsement upon a warrant to the effect that the same had been served by a deputy sheriff rather than by a constable who had been murdered while making the arrest. Com. v. Moran, 107 Mass. 239.

and, if improper, set aside.¹ The rule applies only to the officer and to parties and privies, not to third parties;² it does not apply in case of the return of any officer other than the sheriff,³ or the marshal,⁴ or their deputies.

6. Amendment of Return.—Under proper circumstances, amendments to an officer's return are always allowable, the discretion vested in the courts being usually liberal in this regard.⁵ Before the return has been filed, the sheriff may amend it as he chooses, but after filing, amendments can only be made with leave of the return is no evidence, and need not be traversed; and, though the sheriff be dead, the defendant may testify that he was not served. Keaton v. Moore, 59 Ga. 553.

2. And such parties may introduce parol evidence to impeach the return. Bates v. Fuller, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 644; Mitchell v. Lipe, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 179; 29 Am. Dec. 116; Loyd v. Anglui, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 428; Fife v. Bohlen, 22 Fed. Rep. 878.

The case of American Bank v. Doolittle, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 123, is in point, holding that an officer's return in a trustee suit, which stated that the person named in the writ as trustee was not to be found, but made no mention of any service on the assignee as trustee, is not conclusive, and parol evidence is admissible, on the part of a plaintiff who was not party or privy to the trustee suit, to prove that the trustee writ had been properly served.

Where the sheriff is a party it is prima facie evidence only. Nichols v. Patten, 18 Me. 238; 36 Am. Dec. 713; Bruce v. Holden, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 187.

3. The reason seems to be that a sheriff is the officer of a court of record and his return is, therefore, made a part of the record; while the same is not true of inferior officers. Thus, the constable's return on an execution is only prima facie evidence of a levy. Joyner v. Miller, 55 Miss. 208; Harvey v. Rickett, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 87. Compare Baker v. Jamison, 73 Iowa 698.

A return of service to a warrant by a police officer is no part of the record, and an error in the date does not affect the jurisdiction of the court, and is not ground for arrest of judgment. Com. v. Russell, 147 Mass. 545. A return of service by a private person is not conclusive. Detroit Free Press Co. v. Bagg, 78 Mich. 50.

There is no legal objection to proof that a constable's return bears a wrong date. Welch v. Butler, 24 Ga. 445.

Where the defendant appeared at the return day and moved to dismiss, offering proof that he had not been served with process, it was error to reject the evidence on the ground that the constable's return, showing personal service, was conclusive. Wheeler, etc., Co. v. McLaughlin, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 639; State v. Caldwell (Ind. 1888), 17 N. E. Rep. 185. See also Fitch v. Devlin, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 47.

4. Wilson v. Hurst, Pet. (C. C.) 441; U. S. v. Lotridge, 1 McLean (U. S.) 246.

A marshal's return is equally conclusive with that of the sheriff. Sindall v. Thacker, 56 Ga. 51.

Consult here Dobyns v. U. S., 3 Cranch (U. S.) 241, from which it seems there should be something in the record by which to amend the return.

Courts are, however, extremely cautious in permitting amendments where the title to property is to be affected thereby. Hobart v. Bennett, 77 Me. 401.

court.¹ The allowance of amendments is a matter of judicial discretion.²

a. WHEN ALLOWABLE.—There is scarcely any limitation as to the time during which amendments are allowed; in some cases, many years after judgment was rendered,³ and even though the

Dec. 309; in which latter case it is said that it is the right and duty of a sheriff to correct his return, so as to make it conform to the truth of the fact, whatever that may be, and give it legal effect and operation.

2. Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 878a; Howard v. Priestly, 58 Miss. 21; Jeffries v. Rudloff, 73 Iowa 60; Sawyer v. Harmon, 136 Mass. 414.

In O'Conner v. Wilson, 57 Ill. 226, it is stated that the true rule of practice is, that the court should grant leave to a sheriff to amend his return to process as a matter of course, and without notice to the party to be affected by it, only during the term at which the cause is determined.

3. Return Amended Years After Being Made.—Mere lapse of time, where the rights of third persons are not injuriously affected, will not bar an amendment. Gilman v. Stetson, 16 Me. 124, in which case twenty years was held to be not too long. Scruggs v. Scruggs, 46 Mo. 271; McClure v. Wells, 46 Mo. 311; Jarboe v. Hall, 37 Md. 345; Slicer v. Bank of Pittsburg, 16 How. (U. S.) 571; Peck v. Whitaker, 103 Pa. St. 297; Kirkwood v. Reedy, 10 Kan. 453; Hackett v. Lathrop, 36 Kan. 661; Mills v. Howland (N. Dak. 1891), 49 N. W. Rep. 413; National Ins. Co. v. Chamber of Commerce, 69 Ill. 22; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Butler, 53 Ill. 323; Jeffries v. Rudloff, 73 Iowa 60. In this last case it was allowed, although fifteen months had elapsed since judgment rendered in the attachment case, and an action was pending against the officer, based on the return. In the case of O'Brien v. Gaslin, 20 Neb. 347, it was allowed eight years after judgment. In Shenandoah Val. R. Co. v. Ashby, 86 Va. 232, although thirteen years had elapsed since judgment by default, an amendment was allowed so as to show that the county in which service was had on the defendant corporation was the county in which it resided, and the judgment was validated by such amendment.

A sheriff has been allowed to amend his return even after the lapse of sixteen years, a proper case being shown, and rights of third parties not having intervened. Spellmyer v. Gaff, 112 Ill. 29; 13 Ill. App. 294.

But where a declaration was filed and process issued against a corporation, and a regular return made by the sheriff that the defendant was not to be found, and that the president of the corporation was dead; the plaintiff was not entitled, after the lapse of five terms of the court, without having taken any further action, or showing sufficient legal reason for the delay, to amend the process so as to make it returnable to the then ensuing term. Branch v. Mechanics' Bank, 20 Ga. 413.

Courts are very slow to allow such amendments, however. Thus, in Thatcher v. Miller, 13 Mass. 271, it was held that a return by a deputy sheriff cannot be amended by him after a period of six years from the date of the return. The court, by Parker, C. J., said: "More than six years have elapsed since the return was made, and the deputy sheriff now offers to insert an essential fact, the omission of which may render him liable to an action for damages. It would be unsafe to expose officers to such a temptation. For an officer to undertake, six years after a defective return, to know with certainty the performance of a particular duty, when he is daily and hourly performing similar duties upon different persons, is more than can be expected of men, however strong their memories." Likewise, in Coughran v. Gutcheus, 18 Ill. 390, on an application to amend a record four years after judgment, it was said that the motion was out of time, particularly where there was nothing to amend by in the record. Also in O'Conner v. Wilson, 57 Ill. 226, it was considered that an application to amend, made twelve years after the date of the return, was made too late, and reason seems rather to uphold the doctrine of these cases. 1 Wade on Attachment, § 151; Dorsey v. Peirce, 5 How. (Miss.) 173; Hughes v. Lapice, officer's term had expired,¹ and even after the hearing of a motion to reverse the judgment for a deficiency in the return,² or pending proceedings against the officer for a false return;³ an amendment has also been allowed after a default and sale under the judgment.⁴ Indeed, the return on an attachment has been amended, although subsequently to the attachment the defendant had made a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors.⁵ But it seems that after an appeal has been taken and the judgment superseded, the return is beyond amendment.⁶

b. TO WHAT EXTENT.—Within certain limits,⁷ any return may be amended so as to make it conform to the facts; for example, where the date of service or return is omitted, or is incorrectly stated,⁸ or where the officer serving the process has failed to attach

5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 451; in which two cases it was held that, after the term at which judgment was rendered, it was too late for an amendment to a return on mesne process. See also Williams v. Oppelt, 1 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 559; Branch v. Mechanics' Bank, 50 Ga. 413; Perdue v. Davis, 31 Tex. 488.

After sheriff's death. A return made by a sheriff cannot, after his death, be amended so as to affect his representatives, unless they have due notice to appear. Jefferson Co. Sav. Bank v. McDermott (Ala. 1891), 10 So. Rep. 154.

In Thomas v. Browder, 33 Tex. 783, it was held that the fact that an amendment was made by the sheriff, after a motion made to amerce him, only affects the credibility of the return, not its competency. This doctrine is opposed by two cases in Tennessee, which maintain that a sheriff cannot amend his return so as to avoid a motion pending against him, neither can his deputy. Mullins v. Johnson, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 396; Howard v. Union Bank, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 26. Similarly in Virginia. Carr v. Mead, 77 Va. 142. So also in Pennsylvania. McElrath v. Knitting, 5 Pa. St. 336; Peck v. Whitaker, 103 Pa. St. 297. The rule of the text seems rather harsh, and the exceptions appear more consonant with reason; but it must be remembered, as a general principle in amendments, that the rights of no third party shall be unduly prejudiced thereby. See infra, this title, Limitations; Glidden v. Philbrick, 56 Me. 222.

6. The defendant being no longer in the trial court. Jenkins v. Crofton (Ky. 1888), 9 S. W. Rep. 406. But in Colorado an amendment was allowed in the district court after the record had been removed into the supreme court by a writ of error. Anderson v. Sloan, 1 Colo. 484; Lowland v. Sears, 1 Colo. 433; citing Moore v. Purple, 8 Ill. 149; People v. Needles, 3 Ill. 361; Morris v. Trustees, etc., 15 Ill. 269.

8. Amendment of Dates.—Kidd v. Dougherty, 59 Mich. 240; Fisher v. Collins, 25 Ark. 97. Especially where there is a memorandum of the officer's by which to amend. Haven v. Snow, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 28; Williams v. Weaver, 101 N. Car. 1; Ware v. Bucksport, etc., R. Co., 69 Me. 97. Compare Thomas v. Womack, 64 N. Car. 657; Walston v. Bryan, 64 N. Car. 764. Where, on a writ dated and issued Nov. 4, 1833, the officer, by mis-his signature,¹ or a mistake has been made in the name of a party,² or for other similar error.³

c. HOW EFFECTED.—Amendment is usually to be made by the sheriff,⁴ yet, inasmuch as the return can only be amended according to the facts,⁵ the amendment should be made by the officer who served the writ and who is acquainted with the facts;⁶ though in such case, it may be made by the sheriff himself from a memorandum made by the deputy at the time he served the writ, and which clearly states the facts omitted in the return.⁷ Where the sheriff is incompetent from interest to make service of a writ, he is also incompetent to amend, and the duty in such case devolves upon his deputy.⁸

It is said that the consent of the sheriff or officer is not necessary to an amendment, and that the court may compel him to take, returned an attachment as made Nov. 4, 1834, but the action was entered in 1833, and judgment rendered in June, 1834, he was allowed to substitute 1833 for 1834, so as to defeat an intermediate purchaser. Johnson v. Day, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 106. Likewise, were a justice certified that he issued and delivered a summons to a constable on the 23d day of January, and the constable in his return certified that he served it on the "3d" day of January, on affidavits that the constable inadvertently omitted the figure "2," it was held that the mistake was not fatal to the judgment; the justice could amend the return, before or after judgment, and the appellate court could also allow it to be made. Snyder v. Schram, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 404. The rule applies to mistakes as well as to omissions. Chase v. Williams, 71 Me. 196; Bessey v. Vose, 73 Me. 217.

3. Other Instances.—Thus, the granting of permission to an officer to amend his return so as to show what actually occurred in relation to the execution of the writ, is within the discretion of the court, provided no intervening rights have accrued. Howard v. Priestly, 58 Miss. 21. See, in this connection, Smith v. Clinton Bridge Co., 13 Ill. App. 572.

A sheriff may amend his return by inserting the words, "and by reading this summons to him." Golden Paper Co. v. Clark, 3 Colo. 321. Also by stating that he left a copy of the order with the occupant, or posted the same. Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 28 Kan. 825.

A sheriff's return, insufficient in showing service by copy, etc., without averring that the defendant was not found, after motion by the defendant to set aside, may, on plaintiff's motion, be amended so as to show due service. Northrup v. Shephard, 23 Wis. 513; Allison v. Thomas, 72 Cal. 562.

The recital, in a sheriff's return, served upon a "member of the family," etc., of defendant, instead of upon a "person, a member of the family," etc., or its insertion of the initial letter of a middle name, when he has none, are immaterial and may be amended. Phillips v. Evans, 64 Mo. 17.

4. O'Conner v. Wilson, 57 Ill. 226; Smith v. Gaines, 93 U. S. 343; Washington Mill Co. v. Kinnear, 1 Wash. Ter. 116; 1 Wade on Attachment, § 151; Cole v. Dugger, 41 Miss. 557. In this last case the court draws the conclusion that therefore a sheriff whose term has expired, being not an officer, and not speaking on oath, cannot amend his return.

After a return has been filed, it can be amended only by leave of the court upon good cause being shown. Edwards v. Tipton, 77 N. Car. 22.

perfect his return,¹ but this may well be doubted. It is certain, however, that he cannot be compelled to amend a return regular on its face,² nor may the court dictate what the return should be.³ It can only require that it be appropriate in form and sufficient in law.⁴

d. EFFECT OF AMENDMENT.—After an amendment has been made, the amended return relates back and takes the place of,⁵ and operates from the time of, the original return.⁶ Therefore, if the sheriff's amended return is false, he is liable to an action by the party injured.⁷

e. LIMITATIONS AS TO AMENDMENT.—Although the allowance of amendments is purely a matter of judicial discretion, which is to be exercised under rules of law,⁸ the rights of third parties are not to be prejudiced by its exercise;⁹ and wherever it is proposed to affect such rights, notice must be given to those whose interests are to be affected.¹⁰ A new and material fact cannot be inserted

1. Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 878a. Mr. Murfree is contradicted by several authorities. Wilcox v. Moudy, 89 Ind. 232, where it is distinctly stated that the court has no such power; and this case is supported elsewhere. Bacon's Abr., Execution; 4 Minor's Insts. (2d ed.) 840. The reason, as stated in this last authority, is a strong one, "a return being the sworn statement by the officer," how can he be compelled to make a return of facts other than what he believes correct?

In the case of Stetson v. Freeman, 35 Kan. 523, however, motion to amend a return was allowed, although the sheriff opposed the motion.

8. Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 878. In Moler v. Marks, 39 La. Ann.

575, it is said that a return on a citation cannot be amended or corrected after judgment so as to cure nullities resulting from a defective citation. See also DISCRETION, vol. 5, p. 681.

9. Briggs v. Hodgdon, 78 Me. 514; Chase v. Williams, 71 Me. 190, where it is further said that a plaintiff's attorney, who becomes the purchaser, cannot deny the validity of the attachment and levy that he was called upon to make; nor can subsequent purchasers from him, the record disclosing his relation to the matter. See also Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 878a; Main v. Lynch, 54 Md. 658; Cole v. Dugger, 41 Miss. 557; Peaks v. Gifford, 78 Me. 362. Thus it is stated in Glidden v. Philbrick, 56 Me. 222, that no amendment of an officer's return should be permitted, when such amendment would destroy or lessen the rights of third persons acquired bona fide and without notice by the record or otherwise. But if the return contains sufficient to indicate that all the requirements of the statute have been complied with, an amendment may be made, notwithstanding any intervening interest of a subsequent purchaser or creditor.

The sheriff may amend his return of service upon the defendant by leave of by amendment without proof of its truth,¹ and when an amendment is allowed it must show the whole truth.²

The court from which a cause has been removed by a change of venue has no jurisdiction to permit the sheriff to amend his return on the original process.³ Nor can a court amend a return upon process issued from another tribunal in a suit which has been finally disposed of there.⁴

X. PROCESS IN THE FEDERAL COURTS—1. Form and Character.—
Process in the United States circuit and district courts usually the court after the term at which judgment or decree is rendered, upon notice to the party to be affected by it; and, if the record shows that such other party is present in court at the time of granting such leave, this will dispense with the necessity of a notice. National Ins. Co. v. Chamber of Commerce, 69 Ill. 22.

The officer's return of an attachment of real estate or of a levy upon it cannot be amended to affect the title of an intervening purchaser for full value, unless there is sufficient appearing by the return to give third parties notice that all the requirements of law have probably been complied with. Bessey v. Vose, 73 Me. 217.

It has been held in Kansas that notice is unnecessary where the application is made at the return term of the writ, prior to the confirmation of an execution sale. Stetson v. Freeman, 35 Kan. 523. Also where defendant could not be found, but his attorney appeared in order to object to the jurisdiction, an amendment without notice was allowed. Kidd v. Dougherty, 59 Mich. 240. See also Bushey v. Raths, 45 Mich. 181.

Where property is to be affected by amendments, courts are extremely cautious in allowing them. Hobart v. Bennett, 77 Me. 401.

1. Bayley, Petitioner, 132 Mass. 457, where it is held that a court of record has no authority to allow an amendment to a return of an execution issued by it, by inserting a new and material fact without proof of the truth of that fact; and that the truth of an amendment that the officer, "having made diligent search for" the debtor, "but not finding him in my precinct could make no personal service upon him," is not sustained by proof that the officer, upon hearing, at the debtor's residence, that he was probably not in, left for him a written notice of the time and place of sale under the execution, and made no further inquiry or search.

So also a sheriff's return on execution cannot be amended by incorporating in it subsequent facts with which the sheriff had no connection, such as the payment of the purchase-money by the purchaser, at the sale, to the plaintiff in the writ, after the return day. Bibb v. Collins, 51 Ala. 450; Carr v. Mead, 77 Va. 142.

2. In Woolcott v. Ely, 2 Allen (Mass.) 338, it was held that it was not competent for a court to allow one amendment to a return necessary to make the levy valid, where there was another error in the return which, if corrected, would show that the levy was invalid. The court, by Hoar, J., said: "But we do not think it within the proper limits of judicial discretion to allow an officer to amend a former defect in his return when facts are untruly stated in another part of the return, and when, if the whole return were amended so as to conform to the truth, the amendment would be ineffectual and useless. If any amendment is allowed it must show the whole truth." See also Hovey v. Wait, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 196; Pratt v. Wheeler, 6 Gray (Mass.) 520.

Other instances may be cited. Thus, it is held that an amendment by a sheriff of his return to an attachment, made upon his own application and without notice, by which he vacated the levy of an attachment on lands, and substituted a return of nulla bona, was an abuse of the court's powers and discretion, and should be set aside. Griffiths v. Short, 14 Neb. 259; Murfree on Sheriffs (2d ed.), § 878.

A sheriff's return cannot be so amended as to cause a reversal of judgment. Chicago Planing Mill Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 97 Ill. 294.

conforms in form and character to that used in the courts of the State wherein such circuit or district courts sit. This was made the rule to govern such process by act of Congress, 1789, and also by later statutes.¹

2. Service and Return.—Service and return of process in the Federal courts is always made by the marshal, who is the ministerial officer of such courts, he occupying the same position relatively as does the sheriff in State courts.² The rule as to the time, manner, and place of service, and the character of the return, are the same as those which apply in case of process issuing from State courts.³

1. The process act of Congress of 1789, adopted for the courts of the United States, in each State respectively, the forms of writs and other process, and the forms and modes of proceeding in suits at common law, as they existed at that time in the supreme courts of the States, but did not adopt, prospectively, such alterations as the State might afterwards make. Lane v. Townsend, 1 Ware (U. S.) 286.

Such parts only of the laws of a State as are applicable to the courts of the United States are adopted by the process act of Congress. Gwin v. Breedlove, 2 How. (U. S.) 29.

Actions for penalties brought in the Federal courts of New York in the name of the United States correspond with those brought by the State of New York in the name of the people. Congress, therefore, having adopted the "forms and modes of proceedings" of the several States, the summons in such an action must be indorsed with a reference to the statute giving the penalty, as is required by the New York Code; otherwise it is defective, and not amendable. U. S. v. Rose, 14 Fed. Rep. 681.

Where the circuit court of the United States, by a rule, adopts the process pointed out by a State law, there must be no essential variance between them; such a variance is a new rule, unknown to any act of Congress or the State law professedly adopted. McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. (U. S.) 608.

The act of Congress of May 19, 1828, to regulate process, adopted for the Federal courts the laws then in force in the State of Indiana, governing executions issued by the supreme court of that State. Simpson v. Niles, 1 Ind. 196.

Service of process by one who, by memorandum, indorsed on the same by the marshal, was deputized to execute it, has been held sufficient. The E. W. Gorgas, 10 Ben. (U. S.) 460.

It is held that the United States statutes conferring on marshals similar powers to those exercised by sheriffs are laws conferring powers only, and not restricting those which the marshals already had. The E. W. Gorgas, 10 Ben. (U. S.) 460.

A summons directed to the marshal must be served by that officer or his deputy, and cannot be served by a private person. Schwabacker v. Reilly, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 127.

While a witness's subpoena, issued by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, may run out of the District, it must be served by a marshal, or, under his order, by a deputy; it cannot be served by any one else, although such service might be valid under the law of the State where made. In re Spencer, 4 McArthur (D. C.) 433.

A warrant issued by order of the Senate of the United States, for the arrest of a witness for contempt in refusing to appear before a committee of the Senate, and addressed only to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, cannot be served by deputy in Massachusetts. *Sanborn v. 1. The district or circuit court of one district has no authority to send its process into any other district, to compel the appearance of a person not residing or found within the jurisdiction of the court from which the process issued, or for any alleged contempt of court. Ex parte Graham, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 211. See also In re Spencer, 4 McArthur (D. C.) 433.

The act of Congress of 1859 (11 Stat. at L. 272)—prescribing the mode of procedure where there are several defendants residing in different districts of the same State—construed and applied. Babbitt v. Burgess, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 169.

The 11th section of the Judiciary Act (1 Bright. Dig. 127) provides that, "no civil suit shall be brought before either of these (i. e., circuit or district) courts against any inhabitant of the United States by any original process in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, or in which he shall be found at the time of serving the writ;" and that "no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a circuit or district court." 4 Minor's Insts. (2d ed.), p. 273; Desty's Fed. Proc. 116, 118.

"And, although this act relates in terms to original process, it is well understood that no process whatever, issued from the circuit or district courts, can be legally executed without the limits of the judicial district in which it is issued, unless Congress expressly authorizes it to be done. This authority Congress has conferred in reference to executions. But this provision does not per se avoid any jurisdiction which these courts would otherwise possess. It is a personal privilege of the defendant to be sued only within his district. He may waive it by omitting to avail himself of the objection by plea. An appearance by the defendant and answering generally, without objection, has always been deemed a waiver. (1 Abb. Pr. (U. S.) 248; Pollard v. Dwight, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 421; Logan v. Patrick, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 288; Gracie v. Palmer, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 699; Levy v. Fitzpatrick, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 167.) And so also, an appearance alone, and an omission to plead, or otherwise to insist upon this privilege until a subsequent term, has been held to be a waiver of it. (Flanders v. Aetna Ins. Co., 3 Mason (U. S.) 158; Harrison v. Rowan, Pet. (C. C.) 489.)" 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.), p. 274; 1 Bright. Dig. 268; Rev. Sts. U. S., §§ 985, 986; 2 Abb. U. S. Pr. 160; Desty's Fed. Proc. 207.

In all cases of a local nature at law or in equity, where the land, etc., lies partly in one district and partly in another in the same State, the plaintiff may sue in either district, and process may be sent to the other. 11 U. S. Sts. 272; 1 Abb. U. S. Pr. 78, 79; 2 Bright. Dig. 15, 16; Rev. Sts. U. S., §§ 740-742; Desty's Fed. Proc. 117, 118.

"A subsequent statute relaxes the restriction still further, providing, in substance, that in suits not local (for in the United States courts the distinction of local and transitory actions is still retained), if there be two or more defendants residing in different districts in the same State, the plaintiff may sue in either district, and may issue a duplicate writ to the other, and carry on the suit at once against all the parties, so far as they reside in the same State. And in suits of a local nature, if defendant lives in a different district in the same State from that in which the local cause of action exists, and where the suit is brought, process may be sent to his district. And in all cases of a local nature, at law or in equity, where the land, etc., lies partly in one district and partly in another in the same State, plaintiff may sue in either district, and send the process to the other. It is further to be observed that provision is made in one case for summoning a defendant constructively, although not resident in the district where the suit is brought, by what in the practice of the State courts is known as an order of publication through the newspapers." 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.), p. 276.

SERVIENT—SESSION.

Definition.

SERVIENT.—See SERVITUDE.

SERVILE.—See note 1.

SERVITUDE (see also EASEMENTS, vol. 6, p. 139), in its original and popular sense, signifies the duty of service, or, rather, the condition of one who is liable to the performance of services. The word, however, in its legal sense is applied figuratively to things. When the freedom of ownership in land is fettered or restricted by reason of some person other than the owner thereof, having some right therein, the land is said to serve such person; the restricted condition of the ownership, or the right which forms the subject-matter of the restriction, is termed a servitude; and the land so burdened with another's right is termed a servient tenement, while the land belonging to the person enjoying the right is called the dominant tenement. The word "servitude" may be said to have both a positive and a negative signification; in the former sense denoting the restrictive right belonging to the entitled party; in the latter, the restrictive duty entailed upon the proprietor or possessor of the servient land.²

SESSION.—(See also ADJOURN, vol. 1, p. 192; TERM).—The time during which a legislative body, a court or other assembly sits for the transaction of business; as a session of Congress, which commences on the day appointed by the Constitution and ends when Congress finally adjourns before the commencement of the next session; the session of a court which commences at the day appointed by law and ends when the court finally rises.³

1. Servile Labor—Service of a writ has been held to be "servile labor," within the Connecticut Sunday law. The court, by Brainard, J., adverted to the contention of counsel that a distinction should be taken between "servile labor" and "secular business," and denied the existence of such distinction, saying: "There is, indeed, a difference in expression, but I think not in principle. The service of a writ is labor, and generally servile. A sheriff may race his horse after a fugitive debtor, and find the exercise servile enough; and, I think, common sense would say it was also secular." Gladwin v. Lewis, 6 Conn. 49; 16 Am. Dec. 33. See generally SUNDAY.

2. Brown's L. Dict.

Easement and Servitude Distinguished.—"A privilege or right attached to one tenement or parcel of land, to enjoy some benefit in or over another tenement or parcel, is called an easement of the dominant tenement to which it belongs, and a servitude upon the servient tenement, or that in which it exists." Fetters v. Humphreys, 18 N. J. Eq. 262.

3. People v. Auditor, 64 Ill. 86, quoting Bouv. L. Dict.

The term "session" when applied to courts, means the whole term, and in legal construction the whole term is construed but as one day, and that day is always referred to the first day or commencement of the term. Dew v. Judges, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 1; 3 Am. Dec. 639.

But in Com. v. Gove, 151 Mass. 392, where a statute provided that a commissioner might admit to bail when the "court is not in session," it was held that the words "when the court is not in session" meant "when it is not in actual session," and that the time, between sittings of a court, during a temporary adjournment, was not part of the "session." See also In re Gannon, 69 Cal. 541; People v. Fancher, 50 N. Y. 288.

These cases illustrate the double meaning of the word as pointed out by Mr. Abbott, who thus defines the term: "A sitting; sometimes used for the time during which any body of persons or tribunal is organized, competent for transaction of its business; in other connections, the time during which it is convened and actually engaged in business. To illustrate this double use of the term, it is common to speak of the first or the second session of a Congress, meaning the whole time from the first Monday in December to the adjournment, on the fourth of March or later; and equally common to say, in the holidays' recess, that Congress is not in session." And so, in People v. Fancher, 50 N. Y. 294, it is said: "The word 'session' may mean the actual sitting of a court or legislature, or the time during which a court or legislature meets for the transaction of business, and the connection in which it is used must determine its meaning as used." information or suit is quashed, or the proceedings on the same are 'set aside' or reversed on writ of error," the time during which the same was pending shall not be computed as part of the time of the limitation prescribed for the offense. In Swalley v. People, 116 Ill. 250, the court by Sheldon, J., said: "To 'set aside' is very broad in scope—to defeat the effect or operation of;" and we think it may well be held to embrace here every other mode of defeat of the proceedings on an indictment, than quashing it and reversal on error." And upon a similar Missouri statute, the court by Wagner, J., said: "There is no particular magic about the words 'set aside,' they simply mean to annul, to make void. A nolle prosequi has no more effect." State v. Primm, 61 Mo. 171.

I. SET-OFF—1. Definition.—A set-off is a counter-demand, generally, of a liquidated debt, growing out of an independent transaction, for which an action might be maintained by the defendant against the plaintiff, exhibited by the defendant to counterbalance the plaintiff's recovery, either in part or in whole, and, as the case may be, to recover a judgment in his own favor for the balance.¹

2. Nature, Origin, and General Principles of Set-off—a. AS A DEFENSE. — Set-off, in the proper sense of the word, is wholly of statutory origin. In the proper sense of a cross-

1. See 2 Chit. Contr. (11th Am. ed.) 1266; Mitchell v. McLean, 7 Fla. 329; Avery v. Brown, 31 Conn. 398; Trabue v. Harris, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 598; Cook v. Mills, 5 Allen (Mass.) 37; Parker v. Hartt, 32 N. J. Eq. 225.

Set-off has been described as "a mode of defense whereby the defendant acknowledges the justice of the plaintiff's demand on the one hand, but on the other sets up a demand of his own to counterbalance it, either in whole or in part." Tomlin's L. Dict. See Babb. on Set-off, p. 17; Ord v. Ruspini, 2 Esp. 569.

See also Mr. Parsons' distinction between set-off and reduction, infra, this title, Recoupment.

A set-off is a counter-demand which a defendant holds against a plaintiff, arising out of a transaction extrinsic of the plaintiff's cause of action. Raymond v. State, 54 Miss. 562; 28 Am. Rep. 382.

A set-off means a "cross-claim, for which an action might be maintained against the plaintiff, and is very different from a mere right to a deduction from, or reduction of, his demand, on account of some matters connected therewith." See the authorities cited, 2 Saunders on Pleading and Evidence (Am. ed. 1829) 314; Annan v. Houck, 4 Gill (Md.) 331; 45 Am. Dec. 133.

In New York, counterclaims under the Code of 1852, embrace both set-offs and recoupments, as previously understood. Pattison v. Richards, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 146. In Boston Silk, etc., Mills v. Eull, 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 299, 301, the superior court, by Freedman, J., said: "A set-off is a money demand by the defendant against the plaintiff, and refers to a debt or demand independent of and unconnected with the plaintiff's cause of action. It may exceed the plaintiff's claim or fall short of it."

Discount.—In the law of South Carolina the term "discount" appears to be synonymous with "set-off." See Haynes v. Prothro, 10 Rich. (S. Car.) 318; Sumter v. Welsh, 1 Brev. (S. Car.) 539.

Compensation of the Civil Law.—The law of set-off is somewhat similar to the compensation of the civil law. Domat, pt. 1, b. 4, tit. 2, § 1; 1 Ersk. Inst., b. 3, tit. 4, § 5. Pothier, Traité des Obligations, pt. 3, ch. 4. The likeness is such that the civil-law doctrines can sometimes be applied to the law of set-off. This similarity has been thought, by an eminent writer, to exist, not because set-off is borrowed from the civil-law doctrine of compensation, but because both rest on similar principles of common sense and common justice. 2 Pars. Conts.

demand, a set-off was, at common law, recoverable only by a separate action.¹

While a defendant, upon common-law principles, is in general entitled to retain, or claim by way of reduction, all payments made by him, and all just demands and allowances accruing to him, in respect of the same transaction or account, which forms the ground of action, this species of defense is, in this respect, clearly distinguishable not only from set-off, but also from recoupment.² Set-off and recoupment do not attack the claim of the plaintiff, but, on the contrary, admit the plaintiff's cause of action, and urge a counter-demand, so that the sum awarded to one party may counterbalance that awarded to the other, in whole or in part.³ For this reason it has been said that they are not true

Peters*, 18 Conn. 187; Meriwether v. Brid, 9 Ga. 594; Call v. Chapman, 25 Me. 128; Chandler v. Drew, 6 N. H. 469; 26 Am. Dec. 704; Hart v. Davis, 21 Tex. 411.

Disconnected and independent claims cannot, except by agreement or by virtue of the statute of set-off, be applied to the extinguishment of each other. A having advanced $500 to B took a receipt from B in these words: "Received of A $500—$300 of which I am to give him credit for, and for which sum he is to pay himself out of money which he may collect for me; the other $200 is left with me for safekeeping, which I am to hand to him when called for." In an action of account, brought by B against A for claims which B had put into A's hands for collection, held that A's claim for the $200 mentioned in the receipt had no connection with the claim in suit; that the receipt showed no agreement to apply such claim of A in extinguishment of so much of his indebtedness to B, but the contrary; and that, as the case was not claimed to be within the statute of set-off, A could not insist upon such application. Starkey v. Peters, 18 Conn. 181.

2. 1 Chit. Pl. 495; 2 Chit. Contr. 1266; Pom. Rem., §§ 731-733.

Where the plaintiff was sued on a quantum meruit for work and labor, it was held that the defendant might (without pleading a set-off) give in evidence that he provided the plaintiff's men, who did the work, with their beer, as it might be that the plaintiff deserved to be paid the less, because his men had their beer provided for them by the defendant. Grainger v. Raybould, 9 C. & P. 229; 38 E. C. L. 94.

Likewise it has been held that, in assumpsit for the value of services, the defendant, with a view to the reduction of damages, may, under the general issue, without notice or plea of set-off, offer evidence that during the time of the rendition of the services he had supported and maintained the plaintiff and his family. Brooke v. Carroll, 13 Md. 379.

See DISCOUNT, vol. 5, p. 681, note 1.

3. Effect of Set-Off on the Jurisdiction of Court.—The characteristic of set-off referred to in the text has been considered by the courts in determining the effect of urging this defense upon the jurisdiction of the court where its jurisdiction is regulated by the amount in controversy. Setting off an independent debt does not deny the plaintiff's right to recover the amount claimed. It was accordingly held, where, in an action to recover a larger debt than forty shillings the plaintiff's demand was opposed by a set-off which, if allowed, would reduce plaintiff's recovery to less than that sum, that the action was nevertheless not within the provisions of the local act confining debts for less than forty shillings to an inferior jurisdiction, but that it might be brought in a superior court. Pitts v. Carpenter, 1 Wils. 19; 2 Str. 1191; Heaward v. Hopkins, Dougl. 448; M'Collum v. Carr, 1 B. & P. 223. See Cooper v. Coats, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 308; Brailey v. Miller, 2 Dall. (U. defenses.¹ But the defense referred to does not admit that the demand sued upon is just; on the contrary, it attacks the plaintiff's claim itself, and urges matter to defeat, or at least reduce, the plaintiff's demand, on account of some matter connected therewith. The defense of payment obviously belongs to this species.² So also, in an action of debt for work performed or goods furnished, the defendant may, in general, independently of the statutes of set-off, by way of reducing the sum claimed by the plaintiff, prove that the work was not done,³ or that none or only part of the goods were furnished.⁴ And in an action for work

The effect of a plea of set-off, without a denial of the plaintiff's claim, is to admit the facts alleged by the plaintiff, and leave the defendant to proof of his set-off. Gregory v. Trainor, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 58.

2. Broughton v. McIntosh, 1 Ala. 103. In Buce v. Henagan, 1 McMull. (S. Car.) 28, where the word "discount" is evidently employed in the sense of "set-off," the court by Earle, J., said: "Discount and payment are not convertible terms. Discount may admit the existence of the plaintiff's demand; payment implies that it has been extinguished. If the plaintiff had applied the money received by him, as a payment of the demand sued on, it would have been at the option of the defendant to repudiate it or not. He might still have recovered it by action, and hence disputed the account. It is enough for the purpose of this motion, to say, that if the defendant's demand against the plaintiff was a proper subject of discount at all, it cannot, under the general issue, be considered as payment; and the defendant cannot be permitted without notice, to avail himself of a separate cause of action, which the plaintiff cannot be prepared to resist." See Jeffs v. Wood, 2 P. Wms. 128; Gilliat v. Lynch, 2 Leigh (Va.) 504.

So where a tenant has been compelled by a superior landlord, or other incumbrancer having a title paramount to that of his immediate landlord, to pay sums due for ground rent, or other like charges, the courts have given to the tenant the benefit of a set-off as to payments of this description, by holding them to be, in fact, payments of the rent itself, or part of it (Graham v. Allsopp, 3 Exch. 186, 198; Sapsford v. Fletcher, 4 T. R. 511, 512; *Taylor v. 3. When a person was employed to do certain work for a specified sum (40*l.*), and part of the work was afterwards done by the employer, who paid 2*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* to workmen employed by him to complete the contract, the value of the latter work was not a matter for set-off, but for deduction from the agreed sum which the plaintiff was to receive, on the ground that the work was not done. Turner v. Daper, 2 M. & G. 241; 40 E. C. L. 351. See Edwards v. Todd, 2 Ill. 462.

4. Weakland v. Hoffman, 50 Pa. St. 513; 88 Am. Dec. 560. So, where the plaintiff contracted to do certain work for the defendant, and to find the materials for it for a fixed sum, and the defendant supplied a portion of the materials, which the plaintiff accepted and used up in the work, it was held, in an action by the plaintiff for work done, that the defendant was entitled to deduct the value of the materials supplied by him, without pleading a set-off. Newton v. Forster, 12 M. & W. 772.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage, allegations in the answer that the consideration for the mortgage was plaintiff's agreement to advance to defendants the amount for which the mortgage was given, $1,000, in cash, but that only $850 had ever been advanced, were held to show a partial failure of consideration, but not a set-off or counterclaim. Lash v. McCormick, 17 Minn. 403.

and labor done or for goods sold, though the contract was at a certain price, the defendant may prove, under the general issue, in reduction of the claim, that the work was improperly done,¹ or that the goods were not of the quality warranted.² Likewise, in an action for money had and received, the defendant may show, without the aid of the statutes of set-off, that he is entitled to retain certain allowances out of the very sum demanded, this not being in the nature of a cross-demand; but being a charge, which makes

In Moffet v. Sackett, 18 N. Y. 522, which was an action for the price of certain gas fixtures and for the value of work and labor performed in placing the fixtures in defendant's house, alleged to be worth $197.25, the defendant set up that by reason of the defective fitting, his indebtedness should be reduced $15. It was held that this deduction could be made notwithstanding there was no counterclaim in the answer. The court by Strong, J., said: "If a plaintiff charges in his complaint for a general indebtedness for goods, and work and labor bestowed upon them, and proves that there were specified prices, and it appears from his evidence, or the evidence of the other party, that there were defects in the goods or work, it follows that there was never an indebtedness to the extent claimed, and the amount allowed to him should be limited accordingly. It requires no counterclaim to reduce the amount."

Where, in an action for the price of seed sold, and which was warranted to be good, new, growing seed, it appeared that soon after the sale the buyer was told that it did not correspond with the warranty, it was held to be an answer to the action upon the general issue that the seed was wholly unproductive and worthless. Poulton v. Lattimore, 9 B. & C. 259; 4 M. & R. 408; 17 E. C. L. 373.

The distinction between set-off and a mere right to a reduction of the plaintiff's demand or claim to defeat it on account of some matter connected therewith, was discussed and applied in Crookshank v. Mallory, 2 Greene (Iowa) 257, a case of assumpsit upon a building contract. Therein the court, by Greene, J., said: "Where a mechanic sues for his labor, and a defense is made by setting up damages for defective work, such damages can only be used as a defense against the plaintiff's claim, and not as a ground of action in the nature of set-off by which the defendant may recover over against him. The statute provides that a defendant may set off 'any demand' he may have against the plaintiff. Rev. Stat., p. 318. The defendants in this case set up no demand against that of the plaintiff, but sought rather to destroy his claim by showing that the work was not properly done. A set-off must be predicated upon an independent demand, which a defendant has against the plaintiff. But in this case, the defendants attempted to set off a claim which resulted from and depended upon the demand of the plaintiff. Had the defendants recovered a verdict, it would not have been the result of their demand against the plaintiff, but it would have been by the avoidance or destruction of the plaintiff's demand against them. If the plaintiff had no demand, the defendants had nothing against which they could place their set-off; and if the plaintiff's demand was legal, then the defendant's claim would necessarily fail, because it depended upon the fact that it was not a legal demand."

In Pennsylvania, in an action for services as a housekeeper, and for goods sold and delivered, it was held that the defendant could, under a plea the sum of money received to the plaintiff's use so much less.¹ When the nature of these defenses is rightly understood, that is, understood to be defenses which simply attack the cause of action, and show that by virtue thereof the plaintiff ought not to recover at all, or only part of his demands, in contradistinction to those defenses which admit the plaintiff's cause of action, but set up claims due the defendant, so that the sums awarded to each party may counterbalance one another, which is the nature of set-off and recoupment, and that set-off, although resembling recoupment in being confined to actions upon contract, differs also from that defense in that it must be for a sum certain, and may arise upon a different contract from the one in suit, while recoupment is for damages, often unliquidated, resulting from the breach of the very contract sued upon, it will be observed that set-off is wholly distinct from those defenses which might be urged at common law, and that it can find no authorization except by statute law. Nor should set-off be confounded with the defense that there was an agreement by which the plaintiff should accept certain coun-of non-assumpsit, give evidence that while the plaintiff was acting as housekeeper, she, without his knowledge, gave away articles belonging to him, although such matter was not proper subject of set-off. The court by Tilghman, C. J., said: "By the plea of non-assumpsit the defendant puts the plaintiff on proving his whole case, and entitles him to give in evidence anything which shows that at the time the action was commenced the plaintiff had no right to recover. . . . So whatever be the nature of the services for which the plaintiff demands compensation, I may show that those services were ill-performed, for by such evidence I do no more than meet plaintiff on his own allegation; I prove that he did badly what he ought to have done well.

"The principle being settled, we have only to apply it to the present case. Plaintiff claimed compensation for services as a housekeeper. It is the duty of the housekeeper to care for the household goods. The defendant offered to prove that the plaintiff did not take care of his goods, and to show the particular manner in which she violated her trust, viz., that she sent sundry articles to her daughter's house, and suffered her to make use of them. How is neglect of duty to be shown but by showing the particular acts of negligence or misfeasance?" Heck v. Shener, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 249; 8 Am. Dec. 700.

142, where the plaintiff had employed the defendant, who was a ship-broker, as his agent in suing for and recovering a sum of money for damages done to the plaintiff's ship, and the defendant had recovered £2,000, and paid that sum, less £40, which he retained for his labor and services, over to the plaintiff, and the sum retained was proved to be a reasonable charge—it was held that the defendant might deduct the value of his labor and services, in this manner, without pleading or giving notice of set-off; Lord Mansfield, saying: "The plaintiff can recover no more than he is in conscience and equity entitled to, which can be no more than what remains after deducting all just allowances which the defendant has a right to retain out of the very sum demanded. This is not in the nature of a cross-demand or mutual debt. It is a charge which makes the money received for the plaintiff's use so much less." Dale v. Sollat, 4 Burr. 2133. See Dobson v. Lockhart, 5 T. R. 135; Sturdy v. Armand, 3 T. R. 599; James v. Kynnier, 5 Ves. 108.

See ACCOUNT STATED, vol. 1, p. 122, n. 5. Where services have been performed in payment of the demand sued, under a contract between the parties, it is not necessary for the defendant to file an account for such services, by way of set-off, pursuant to the provisions of the statute, in order to entitle him to give evidence of the ter-demands in satisfaction of his claims.¹ Evidence of such an agreement may be given under the general plea of payment.² Where demands, originally cross, and not arising out of the same transaction, have, by subsequent express agreement, been stipulated to be deducted, or set off against each other, only the balance is the debt and sum recoverable, without any special plea of set-off.³ But, in order that matter of set-off, or of recoupment, may be proved, under a plea of payment, it is indispensable that an express agreement that such matter shall constitute payment, or such a state of facts from which such assent is clearly inferable, be first proven.⁴ When this is proved, the right to urge such matter as a defense to the claim of the plaintiff is secured to the defendant independently of the statutes of set-off, if, of same in defense of the action. Wilby v. Harris, 13 Mass. 496.

1. Although set-off is not permitted in an action on an insurance policy after a partial loss under the statute of set-off (see infra, this title, note In Actions on Insurance Policies, p. 242), yet where there is an express agreement between the parties in the policy that the amount of the premium due shall be deducted out of any loss that may be claimed, the contract of the parties must govern. Livermore v. Newburyport M. Ins. Co., 2 Mass. 232; Dodge v. Union M. Ins. Co., 17 Mass. 471. And, under agreement, the insurers may set off not only their premium against the loss upon the same policy, but also against losses arising on different policies. Cleveland v. Clap, 5 Mass. 201. Under a clause in a policy of insurance that the "loss shall be paid," "the amount of the premium note" "being first deducted," the insured, when sued upon the note, can set off a loss under the policy (Columbian Ins. Co. v. Bean, 113 Mass. 541; see Osgood v. De Groot, 36 N. Y. 348), although the amount of such loss being unliquidated, cannot be set off under the statute. See infra, this title, p. 251. Massachusetts Gen. Stats. ch. 130, §§ 3, 16.

A counterclaim which might be set off is not admissible under the plea of discount, without an agreement to discount it. Glazier v. McCallister, 5 Harr. (Del.) 41.

The vendor gave a deed with a warranty of title, and a covenant that the land was free from incumbrances, except an outstanding lease, which had two years and seven months to run. The vendee gave, in part payment, his note, with an agreement that so much

Before the expiration of the lease, the tenant pulled down the house. Held, on demurrer to the answer, in an action by the vendor on the note, that the vendee could not deduct the value of the house under the agreement. *Ogilvie v. course, the agreement is founded upon a sufficient consideration.¹ It is probably upon the theory that there exists an agreement of this kind,² that, where the nature of the transaction necessarily constitutes an account, consisting of receipts and payments, debts, and credits, the balance only will, at both law and equity, be considered to be the debt.³ But the right to set-off is entirely dif-

In an action to recover money for dyeing goods, it was held that the defendant might, at common law, prove as a defense that there was a custom in the trade that the amount of damage done to goods whilst being dyed might be deducted from the price of the dyeing. Banford v. Harris, 1 Stark. 343.

So where mutual debts are contracted in a foreign country, and by the law of that country the defendant would be entitled in an action against him, to set off his debt against the plaintiff's, it appears that irrespective of the English law of set-off, this may be pleaded as a defense to an action brought by the plaintiff in England to recover the debt in question. MacFarlane v. Norris, 2 B. & S. 782; 110 E. C. L. 782; 31 L. J. Q. B. 245.

Whatever an agent is entitled to deduct from the demands of his principal for advances or disbursements which he makes, may be given in evidence in an action brought against him without pleading or giving notice of set-off. In Downam v. Matthews, Proc. Ch. 580, where there were mutual dealings on each side, and independent debts, the Lord Chancellor held that a set-off ought to be allowed, because the mode of dealing furnished a strong presumption of an agreement to this purpose, and that without such liberty of retaining against each other, the parties would not have continued on their dealings. In the case of Hawkins v. Freeman, 2 Eq. Abridg. 10, pl. 10; 8 Vin. Abr., the decision was precisely to the same effect. And in Lanesborough v. Jones, 1 P. Wms. 326, Lord Cowper said that "it was natural justice and equity that in all cases of mutual credit only the balance should be paid."

Upon these and other English decisions Judge Story deduced the general rule, that courts of equity will set off distinct debts, where there has been a mutual credit (i. e., a credit founded on a knowledge of, and trust to, the existing debts), upon the principles of natural justice, to avoid circuity of suits, following the doctrine of compensation of the civil law to a limited extent. Greene v. Darling, 5 Mason (U. S.) 201. And in Gordon v. Lewis, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 628, the same judge said: "To justify a court of equity in allowing a set-off, there must be some original and intervening equity between the parties beyond the mere fact of mutual debts. There must be a mutual credit, founded on a subsisting debt on the other side, or an express or implied agreement for a set-off of mutual debts." See Simmons v. Williams, 27 Ala. 507; Jordan v. Jordan, 12 Ga. 77.

Equity Jurisdiction as to Set-Offs.—Independently of statute, "the mere existence of distinct debts, without mutual credits, or some supervening equity, has never been supposed to give the right of set-off in a court of equity any more than at law. But the general principle has always prevailed, both at law and in equity, that where there were connected accounts of debt and credit, the balance of the accounts constituted the amounts due, and was the sum only recoverable." Holcombe's Intr. Eq. Jur. 285. This is probably founded on the existence of an agreement between the parties that one debt shall be discounted from the other. And many of the cases, which would otherwise appear to be founded on other grounds, can be reconciled with this view when it is remembered that there need not be an express agreement to this effect. It is sufficient that there has been a mutual credit given by each upon the footing of the debt of the other, so that a just presumption arises that one is understood by the parties to go in liquidation or set-off of the other. See Raleigh v. Raleigh, 35 Ill. 512. It would seem that courts of equity in giving effect to such agreements do no more than should be done in an action at law; for the granting of such reduction is not properly referable to any power to permit a set-off. The agreement between the parties is in effect that one debt shall be in payment of the other; so that the defense is not in the nature of a set-off, but rather attacks the plaintiff's cause of action. In Rawson v. Samuel, 1 Cr. & Ph. 161, Lord Cottenham says: "We speak familiarly of equitable set-off, as distinguished from set-off at law, but it will be found that this equitable set-off exists in cases where the party seeking the benefit of it can show some equitable ground for being protected against his adversary's demand." Courts of equity will not enforce a set-off not allowed by law unless the party seeking it can show some equitable ground for being protected against his adversary's demand. Simmons v. Williams, 27 Ala. 507; Beall v. Squires, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 372. The mere existence of cross-demands is not sufficient. Rawson v. Samuel, 1 Cr. & Ph. 161; Dodd v. Lydall, 1 Hare 337; Whyte v. O'Brien, 1 S. & S. 551; Greene v. Darling, 5 Mason (U. S.) 201; Gordon v. Lewis, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 628; Bowen v. Bowen, 20 Conn. 127; Spurr v. Snyder, 35 Conn. 172; Downs v. Gage, 39 Ill. 27. And there is no equity to retain a sum due because cross-demands to a larger amount are about falling due. Jeffries v. Agra, etc., Bank, L. R., 2 Eq. 674; Smith's Case, L. R., 1 Ch. 538. Where A recovered a judgment against C, and was at the same time surety for B upon an arbitration bond, for submitting differences between B and C to arbitration, C obtained an award against B and then filed a bill to have the amount of the judgment credited on the award—it was held that, as A's liability to C was only contingent and might never arise, he should not be restrained from collecting his judgment, unless it was alleged that he was insolvent or about to leave the State. Hinrichsen v. Reinback, 27 Ill. 295.

But, where the parties have mutual demands against each other, and an equitable right of set-off exists because the debt due to the party claiming the set-off is so situated that it is impossible for him to obtain satisfaction of such debt by an ordinary suit at law, or in equity to recover the same, a court of equity, upon a bill filed, will compel an equitable set-off of one debt against the other. So, where there are mutual demands between the parties which cannot be set off under the statute, but which a court of equity may compensate or apply in satisfaction of each other without interfering with the equitable rights of any person, the fact that one of the parties is insolvent has frequently been held a sufficient ground for the exercise of equitable jurisdiction. *Tuscumbia, etc., R. Y.) 63, Spencer, J., asserts that insolvency furnishes a strong and substantial ground of equity, as a meditated fraud. Where the plaintiffs' creditors, by representing that the makers of a certain note were perfectly solvent, procured the plaintiffs' indorsement on the note, and the makers of the note were at the time insolvent, as were the creditors, who, about two weeks thereafter, made an assignment for benefit of creditors, with preferences to the exclusion of plaintiffs, who were forced to pay the note, it was held that the representations were fraudulent, giving the plaintiffs a right of action against the creditors in the nature of assumpsit, and that an action was maintainable to compel the application of the sum paid on the note by the plaintiffs to the extinguishment of a sum due from them to the defendant, as assignee. Rothschild v. Mack, 115 N. Y. 1.

A court of equity has also been influenced to set off one demand against another by the fact that the situation of the parties against whom the demand is allowed is such that, unless it were allowed, it could probably never be enforced against them because of their removal and being withdrawn from the State, leaving nothing there out of which satisfaction could be had. Quick v. Lemon, 105 Ill. 578; Edminson v. Baxter, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 11; 9 Am. Dec. 751; Robbins v. Holley, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 194; Forbes v. Cooper, 88 Ky. 285. But see M'Kinney v. Bellows, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 31.

But where a complainant filed a bill to restrain execution on a judgment at law recovered against him by a corporation incorporated by Congress and established in the District of Columbia, and praying that so much of the complainant's claim might be set off as necessary to extinguish said judgment, the court held that the complainant's contention that the non-residence of the defendant and the non-subjection of it to the jurisdiction of the courts of the State constitute a special equity, or an equitable ground for being protected against a judgment threatened to be executed, was not well founded, it not being pretended that the defendant was insolvent, nor that redress for any wrong that the complainant had suffered might not have been made in the courts of the United States exercising jurisdiction over the District of Columbia, the court by Alvey, J., said: "The mere fact that the appellee is located and doing business in the city of Washington, does not give a court of equity here jurisdiction to restrain the judgment against the appellant and to enforce a set-off," citing Beall v. Brown, 7 Md. 393; Smith v. Washington Gas Light Co., 31 Md. 12; 100 Am. Dec. 49.

And in Murray v. Toland, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 569, it was insisted that the set-off should be allowed because the complainant might have difficulty in obtaining satisfaction of his demand of a party who resided in Spain, if the latter were permitted to recover judgment and withdraw the fund in question. But Chancellor Kent, in answer to the application said: "Such a principle would check all suits at law, and extend the doctrine of set-off to every possible case, if it so happened that the plaintiff at law was not within the jurisdiction of the court. The inconvenience of following a party to his place of residence abroad does not appear to me to be of itself a sufficient ground for departing from the settled doctrines of the court. The court cannot be governed by the mere question of comparative convenience. What would be proper, if the party resided in a country where there was no regular law or justice, or where he was absolutely inaccessible, is not a point before me. A resident at Cadiz is surely not such a case; nor is Spain, with all her infirmity, to be put out of the pale of civilized nations."

As to the peculiar equities which will justify the interposition of a court of equity to secure the subtraction of such cross-demands, Mr. Story says: "It has been already suggested that courts of equity will extend the doctrine of set-off and claims in the nature of set-off beyond the law in all cases where peculiar equities intervene between the parties. These are so very various as to admit of no comprehensive enumeration. Some cases, however, illustrative of the doctrine, may readily be put. Thus if an agent having a title to an estate should allow his principal to expend money upon the estate without any notice of that title, he will not be permitted after a recovery at law in ejectment to maintain an action at law against the principal for mesne profits; but courts of equity will require that to the extent of the improvements there shall be a set-off or compensation allowed to the principal against the mesne profits. Cawdor v. Lewis, 1 Y. & C. 433. See Money Penny v. Bristol, 2 R. & M. 117. So if an agent in his own name should procure a policy of insurance to be underwritten for his principal, he will be personally liable for the premium of insurance to the underwriters; and if he has also in his own name procured another policy to be underwritten for the same principal, and a loss occurs under the latter policy on which he sues the underwriters, they may in equity, if not at law, set off the premiums due on the first policy against such loss. Leeds v. Marine Ins. Co., 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 565; 2 Story Eq. Jur., § 1437 a.

But according to some of the authorities, it is required, in addition to these aforementioned equities, that there should be a mutual credit. Thus, it has been held that, where there is no mutual credit, insolvency alone is insufficient, even in a case of positive indebtedness, to authorize an equitable offset. Hale v. Holmes, 8 Mich. 37; Kinney v. Tabor, 62 Mich. 517. In Lockwood v. Beckwith, 6 Mich. 168; 72 Am. Dec. 69, it was considered that, where nothing more than a cross-demand was shown, it not appearing that there was a mutual credit between the parties, the mere fact of the insolvency of the party against whom the set-off is claimed, does not of itself raise an equity of set-off, although it is a circumstance, which, in connection with the fact of the existence of a mutual credit, will justify such set-off. So in U. S. Bung Mfg. Co. v. Armstrong, 34 Fed. Rep. 94, it was said that in order to create the right to an equitable set-off there must exist a mutual credit between the parties founded at the time upon the existence of some debt, due by the crediting party to the other. The court by Jackson, J., said: "Mutual credit means something different from mutual debts.

Mutual credit, such as will give rise to an equitable set-off, applies only to that class of cases where there has been mutual trust and understanding that an existing debt should be discharged by a credit given upon the ground of such debt."

Where there were mutual demands so connected that one might fairly be presumed to have been founded on the other, it was considered that the insolvency of one party rendered the interposition of the court necessary for the protection of the other. Littlefield v. Albany Co. Bank, 97 N. Y. 581.

The rights of the parties become fixed at the moment and by the act of insolvency; insolvency will not be a ground for allowing set-off where the claim was bought after the insolvency for the purpose of set-off. Robbins v. Holley, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 191; Condon v. Shehan, 46 Miss. 710; Reppy v. Reppy, 46 Mo. 571; Hegerman v. Hyslop, Anth. (N. Y.) 197; Venango Nat. Bank v. Taylor, 56 Pa. St. 14. But it has been frequently said that, as to the right of set-off in equity the fact that the debt owing to the insolvent is not due when he makes an assignment, is entirely immaterial. Rothschild v. Mack, 115 N. Y. 1; Richards v. La Tourette, 119 N. Y. 54; Kentucky Flour Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank (Ky. 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 910. But the claims which may be set off under this equitable jurisdiction have, in some cases, been expressly limited to debts which are due at the time when it is sought to enforce the set-off. See Jeffries v. Agra Bank, L. R., 2 Eq. 674; Smith's Case, L. R., 1 Ch. 538. Where the complainants, being indebted to the defendant's testator in the sum of between $3,000 and $4,000 to recover which the defendant, as executor, had brought an action at law, filed their bill to restrain the action at law and to compel a set-off of certain notes given to them by the testator, but which were not yet due, it was held that the bill could not be sustained even though the estate of the testator was insolvent. Bradley v. Angel, 3 N. Y. 475; Spaulding v. Backus, 122 Mass. 553; 23 Am. Rep. 391; Keep v. Lord, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 78; Chance v. Isaacs, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 356; affirmed, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 595. It was said that by allowing a set-off in this case, the executors would have been deprived of a legal right, secured to their testator by contract, and the complainants would have obtained payment of their debt before it became due, and to the prejudice of the other creditors of the decedent.

But, upon bill filed, it does not appear that the fact that the defendant's demand against the complainant is not yet due and payable, forms any valid objection to the claim of the latter to have it applied in payment of their debt which is due from the defendants. Rothschild v. Mack, 115 N. Y. 1; Richards v. La Tourette, 119 N. Y. 54. Thus, it has been held that A, having a demand against B, which is due, and B one against A, not due, A may in equity compel a set-off if B is insolvent, notwithstanding. Lindsay v. Jackson, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 581, and cases cited. In deciding this case the court, by Walworth, Ch., said: "... as the debt of the defendants is due, and if they paid it immediately, according to their agreement, the complainants might, without any injustice to the other party, waive the time of credit which was for their own benefit, and pay the notes immediately with the money thus received; the defendants have no cause to complain of such a mode of compensating one debt by another." Commenting upon this decision, the court, in Bradley v. Angel, 3 N. Y. 475, by Gardiner, J., said: "Where a debt is due from an insolvent debtor, the right of the creditor to payment is absolute. Natural equity and law unite in binding the debtor to a fulfillment of his obligation. If the latter holds a demand against his creditor not due, he has no right to retain it, as an investment. The law by sequestration and sale would compel him at once to apply the proceeds in discharge of the debt due from him. Equity by compelling a set-off, under such circumstances, with the consent of the person entitled to the credit, and where third persons are not injured, follows the law. It creates no new obligation, and deprives the insolvent of no right or privilege which he could justly exercise."

So it was held that a plaintiff, holding a payable demand against the defendants, could set it off against a note which the insolvent defendant held against him, although such latter note was not yet due. Keightly v. Walls, 27 Ind. 384; Snyders' Sons Co. v. Armstrong, 37 Fed. Rep. 18.

An equitable set-off existing against a bank when it stops payment is allowable whether the debt is then payable or becomes due afterwards. In re Middle Dist. Bank, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 413, note.

Where the complainant, having paid the defendant, as receiver of the Fidelity National Bank, a certain promissory note, of which it was the maker, afterwards filed its bill in equity to have a set-off of the sum so paid against debts which it owed to the insolvent bank, it was held that the voluntary payment of the note with the full knowledge of all the facts operated as an abandonment of all right to set off cross-demands or independent debts, and the bill disclosing such facts presented no case for equitable relief by way of equitable set-off. U. S. Bung Mfg. Co. v. Armstrong, 34 Fed. Rep. 94. But, upon the failure of a national bank, a depositor in the amount of $2,900 was indebted to it on eleven notes to the amount of $5,000, and the receiver agreed with the complainant that this sum should go as a set-off on the indebtedness, but that the depositor should pay the notes first coming due, and the deposit should be applied on the last maturing notes. After paying the first two notes, it was found, both to the surprise of the petitioner and that of the receiver, that the others were in the hands of third parties. The depositor was compelled to pay them, and filed his bill to authorize the receiver to refund the money paid under a mutual mistake. It was held that the deposit should properly be set off against the claim of the bank, and the depositor should, therefore, recover the sum paid by him. Snyders' Sons Co. v. Armstrong, 37 Fed. Rep. 18.

Since this equitable jurisdiction to allow set-offs in the case of insolvency, etc., and the statutory provisions for set-off in the various insolvency and bankruptcy statutes, arose from the same need, it may be that the decisions under the statutes may sometimes serve to throw light upon the equitable principle, and vice versa. In Snyders' Sons Co. v. Armstrong, 37 Fed. Rep. 18, the court by Hammond, J., said: "This principle arises out of the fact of insolvency, ipso facto, and finds its highest development in all of our insolvency and bankruptcy statutes, particularly the late bankruptcy act of the United States, where the very best judicial and legislative thought upon this subject finds expression in its provisions and the decisions concerning the subject of set-off. . . ." See infra, this title, ferent from a right to an account, where the demands are not of a distinct and independent character, but are connected in such a way that the whole series forms one transaction.¹

b. COMMON LAW AND STATUTES. — At common law a defendant who was sued by his creditor could not set up a debt due him by the plaintiff, by way of counterbalancing the plaintiff's recovery, although the amount of such debt was the greater. The defendant would be driven to separate action to recover his own claim. This not only tended to multiplicity of suits, but, if the plaintiff happened to be in circumstances of insolvency, often resulted in positive injustice. Even if the plaintiff had become bankrupt, so that his assignees had become entitled to what was owing from the defendant, the law allowed the assignees to recover the whole amount of the defendant's indebtedness, leaving the defendant to go in under the bankruptcy and prove against the bankrupt's estate, and recover a dividend only.² The temporary bankrupt act of 4 and 5 Anne, ch. 17, effected a mitigation of this evil by allowing a set-off in cases of mutual credits and mutual debts between the bankrupt and any person. This enactment was followed by similar ones, which were designed for the same purpose.³ But these acts only partially remedied the

What May be the Subject of Set-off, Under the Bankruptcy Acts.

1. The essential difference between the right of account and set-off has been stated as follows: "It (the right of account) is not a right to amalgamate independent cross-demands, for the purpose of enabling one action or suit to suffice, but it assumes that the several demands have no independent existence, but have been so connected by the original contract or course of dealing, that the only thing which either party can claim is the ultimate balance. The only right, therefore, is that of taking the account. An account of this kind is not confined to mere receipts and payments of money, although it ordinarily occurs in that form. But it is applicable to any dealings which have been treated as equivalent to receipts and payments. An account, for instance, will lie in respect of reciprocal deliveries of goods, provided that in the course of dealing between the parties such deliveries have been treated as items in an account, and not as creating mere cross-demands; or it will lie in respect of a claim for work done and partially paid for by advances from time to time, so that a balance only of the price is ultimately due." Adams Eq. pp. 423, 424. See Ranger v. Great West. R. Co., 5 H. L. Cas. 91.

2. Ex parte Prescott, 1 Atk. 230.

3. The statute of Anne was followed by a similar one in the temporary act of 5 Geo. I., ch. 11; then with improvements by 5 Geo. II., ch. 30, § 28. By the 28th section of the latter statute it was enacted "that where it shall appear to the said commissioners, or the major part of them, that there hath been mutual credit given by the bankrupt and any other person, or mutual debts between the bankrupt and any other person, at any time before such person became bankrupt, the said commissioners, or the major part of them, or the assignees of such bankrupt's estate, shall state the accounts between them, and one debt may be set against another; and what shall appear to be due on either side, on the balance of such account, and on setting such debts against one another, and no more, shall be claimed on either side respectively." None of these acts, however, went further than to allow a set-off upon the accounts existing at the time of the bankruptcy. But the statute of 46 Geo. III., ch. 135, § 3, went further and extended the right of set-off to cases where credit was given within two months of the date of the commission, provided the person giving it had not notice of a prior act of bankruptcy, or that the bankrupt was insolvent, or had stopped payment. Afterwards in the statute of 6 Geo. IV., ch. 16, § 50, the evil of not allowing set-offs; in all cases, except where the plaintiff was bankrupt, the defendant was still compelled to bring a separate action to recover any sum which might be due him from the plaintiff upon an independent transaction. To remedy the evil of multiplicity of suits,¹ it was enacted in 2 Geo. II., ch. 22, § 13, that a defendant might establish a debt against a plaintiff without resorting to a separate action.² And these provisions were subsequently made perpetual and extended by 8 Geo. II., ch. 24, §§ 4 and 5.³ While it seems that these statutes of Geo. II. did not become a part of the law of the United States,⁴ they have been substantially reenacted in the different States,⁵ though usually without the restriction as to penalties.⁶ provisions of this statute relating to set-off were reenacted in 12 and 13 Vict., ch. 106, § 171. And this enactment continued to govern this branch of the law until the passing of the Bankrupt Act (32 and 33 Vict., ch. 71) in 1869. See Gibson v. Bell, 1 Bing. N. Cas. 753; 27 E. C. L. 562; Rose v. Hart, 2 Sm. L. C. (8th ed.) 330; Tuscumbia, etc., R. Co. v. Rhodes, 8 Ala. 206.

1. To avoid multiplicity of suits is generally understood to have been the object of these enactments. See Isberg v. Bowden, 8 Exch. 852; 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 551; Wallis v. Bastard, 4 De G., M. & G. 251; 31 Eng. L. & Eq. 175; Cook v. Mills, 5 Allen (Mass.) 37; Raymon v. Green, 12 Neb. 219; 41 Am. Rep. 763.

2. The terms of this statute were as follows: "Where there are mutual debts between the plaintiff and defendant, or, if either party sue or be sued as executor or administrator, where there are mutual debts between the testator or intestate and either party, one debt may be set against the other."

3. The statute of 8 Geo. II., ch. 24, § 5, enacts, "that, by virtue of the said clause in the said first-recited act contained (2 Geo. II., ch. 22, § 13), and thereby made perpetual, mutual debts may be set against each other, either by being pleaded in bar, or given in evidence on the general issue, in the manner therein mentioned, notwithstanding that such debts are deemed in law to be of a different nature; unless in cases where either of the said debts shall accrue by reason of a penalty contained in any bond or specialty, and, in all cases where either the debt for which the action hath been or shall be brought, or the debt intended to be set against the same, hath accrued, or shall accrue, by reason of any such penalty, the debt intended to be set off shall be pleaded in bar, in which plea shall be shown how much is truly and justly due on either side; and, in case the plaintiff shall recover in any such action or suit, judgment shall be entered for no more than shall appear to be truly and justly due to the plaintiff, after one debt being set against the other as aforesaid." Lee v. Lester, 7 M. G. & S. 1011.

Statutes of Set-Off.—The following compilation is illustrative of the legislation on this subject.

In Rhode Island, the language of the statute is as follows: "If any defendant shall have a demand on the plaintiff for any sum liquidated, or for one which may be ascertained by calculation, and which is founded on a judgment, or upon an account, or upon any contract, whether express or implied, and whether with or without seal, and which existed at the time of the commencement of the action, and then belonging to the defendant in his own right, and for which he might maintain a suit in his own name, he may set off the same in an action founded upon any demand which could itself be set off." Rhode Island Pub. Sts. 1882, ch. 580, § 14.

The statute of Delaware is, that "mutual debts between parties to an action due at the time of action brought, in the same right, and being for a sum liquidated, or which can be ascertained by calculation, may be the subject of set-off in such action." Delaware Laws, 1874, p. 649, § 21.

In New Hampshire, the first provincial statute of 1765 followed the terms of the 8 Geo. II., Prov. Stat. 1771, 195. A change of phrase was made in the revision of 1791, Stat. 1815, 172. "If there are mutual debts or demands between the plaintiff and the defendant at the time of the commencement of the plaintiff's action, one debt or demand may be set off against the other." New Hampshire Pub. Stat. 1891, p. 619, § 7.

Massachusetts.—The existing statutory provisions for set-off in Massachusetts will be found to be of representative importance: "No demand shall be set off unless it is founded upon a judgment or upon a contract, but the contract may be either express or implied, and with or without a seal. No demand shall be set off unless it is for the price of real or personal estate sold, for money paid, for money had and received, or for services done, or unless it is for a sum that is liquidated, or that may be ascertained by calculation. No demand shall be set off unless it existed at the time of the commencement of the suit, and then belonged to the defendant, nor unless it is due to him in his own right, except as is hereinafter provided.

"A demand assigned to the defendant with notice to the plaintiff of such assignment before the commencement of the action, may be set off in like manner as if it had been originally payable to the defendant. If the demand set off is founded on a bond or other contract having a penalty, no more shall be set off than the sum equitably due. The set-off shall be allowed in all actions founded on demands which could themselves be the subject of set-off according to law, and in no others.

"If there are several plaintiffs, the demand set off shall be due from all of them jointly; and if there are several defendants, the demand set off shall be due to all of them jointly, except as is provided in the following section:

"When the person with whom a contract is made has a dormant partner, and a suit is brought on such contract by or against the partners jointly, a demand due to or from the person with whom the contract was made may be set off in like manner as if such dormant partner had not been joined in the suit.

"If the demand on which the action is brought has been assigned, and the defendant had notice of the assignment, he shall not set off a demand that he acquired against the original creditor after such notice. When an action is brought by one person in trust or for the use or benefit of another, the defendant may set off a demand against the person for whose use or benefit the action is brought, in like manner as if that person was the plaintiff in the suit.

"In an action by an executor or administrator, a demand against his testator or intestate, which at the time of his death belonged to the defendant, may be set off in the same manner as if the action had been brought by the deceased. In actions against executors, administrators, trustees and others sued in their representative character, the defendants may set off demands belonging to their testators or intestates or those whom they represent, in the same manner as the persons represented would have been entitled to set off the same in an action against themselves. In suits brought by or against executors, administrators, or trustees in their representative character, no demand shall be set off that is due to or from such executors, administrators or trustees in their own right.

"After a declaration in set-off is filed, the plaintiff shall not be allowed to discontinue his action, unless by consent of the defendant." Mass. Pub. Stat. 1882, chap. 168, p. 982.

Under the foregoing statute, in A's action against an administrator, it was held that a claim for money which a written instrument signed by A recited that A had "received in trust" from the intestate, "the same to be accounted for" to the intestate, could be set off, whether the instrument imported a trust or a debt merely. Gannon v. Ruffin, 151 Mass. 204.

In a case under the Massachusetts Betterment Act, special benefits must be separately assessed, and cannot be set off against damages. Benton v. Brookline, 151 Mass. 250.

Unliquidated damages for breach of an agreement to pay a mortgage on realty cannot be set off. Rice v. Sanders, 152 Mass. 108.

In A's action for B's breach of an agreement to pay a mortgage on one estate conveyed by A to B, B cannot set off damages for A's breach of an agreement to pay a mortgage on another estate mortgaged by A to B. (Three judges dissenting.) Rice v. Sanders, 152 Mass. 108.

As to when unsecured claims of a life-insurance company may be set off against proceeds of the policy, see Boden v. Mass. M. L. Ins. Co., 153 Mass. 544.

In A's action for goods sold to B, B cannot set off damages for A's breach of a prior agreement to constitute B selling agent of a similar line of goods, and to give B the privilege of purchasing at net prices, less commission. Knitted Mattress Co. v. Griggs, 154 Mass. 5.

New York.—It seems that the doctrine of set-off was introduced into the colony of New York as early as September 4, 1714. The earliest statutes of set-off in New York were modeled upon the English statute of 2 Geo. II, ch. 22, § 13; the similarity between those acts was such that English decisions were relied upon for the interpretation of the early statutes of the State. Gordon v. Bowne, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 150; U. S. v. Eckford, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 484. This statute regulating and defining set-off was the first innovation upon the common law, and it was deemed to remain in force, notwithstanding the enactment of the code of procedure, except so far as the latter was inconsistent with it. Comm's Rep. 1850.

The New York Revised Statutes provided that the demand to be set off must arise upon judgment, or upon contract express or implied: "It must be a demand for real estate sold, or for personal property sold, or for money paid, or for services done; or if it be not such a demand, the amount must be liquidated or be capable of being ascertained by calculation." 3 New York Rev. Stats. (5th ed.), pp. 634, 635. Compare the present provisions, Birdseye's New York Rev. Stat. 1890, p. 2236.

In Virginia, the legislation on the subject of set-off began at a very early date. See 5 Rob. Prac., ch. 87, § 3, where the earliest enactments are set out.

In 4 Anne (1705) the general assembly of Virginia enacted as follows: "That where any suit shall be commenced and prosecuted within this colony for any debt due by judgment, bond, bill, or otherwise, the defendant shall have liberty upon the trial thereof to make all the discount he can against such debt, and upon proof thereof the same shall be allowed in court." 3 Hen. Stat. 378; 4 Hen. Stat. 275; 6 Hen. Stat. 87. This was accidentally omitted by the revisers of 1792, but re-enacted by act of Dec. 29, 1806. 1 R. C. 819, p. 487, ch. 127. It was considered "as equally extensive with the English statute of set-off, to say the least." Lewis v. Long, 3 Munf. (Va.) 157. Compare the present provisions, see Virginia Code, 1887, ch. 160, §§ 3298, et seq.

The statute of West Virginia (West Virginia Code, 1891, ch. 126, § 4) provides that "in a suit for any debt the defendant may, at the trial, prove and have allowed against such debt any payment or set-off, which is so described in his plea, or in an account filed therewith, as to give the plaintiff notice of its nature, but not otherwise." It seems that the statute of set-off in that State, or in its parent State, has been substantially the same at least as far back as 1705. See Wartman v. Yost, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 607; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Jameson, 13 W. Va. 833; 31 Am. Rep. 779.

The Pennsylvania act of 1705 (Defalcation Act) was passed before the British statute of 2 Geo. II., and is more comprehensive. Its provisions are: "If two or more dealing together be indebted to each other upon bonds, bills, bargains, promises, accounts or the like, and one of them commence an action in any court of this province, if the defendant cannot gainsay the deed, bargain or assumption upon which he is sued, it shall be lawful for such defendant to plead payment of all or any part of the debt or sum demanded, and give any bond, bill, receipt, account or bargain in evidence." 1 Bright. Purd. Dig. 603. This statute has been construed to include cases not permitted to be set off under the English statutes. Boyd v. Thompson, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 217; Steigleman v. Jeffries, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 477; 7 Am. Dec. 626; Gogel v. Jacoby, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 121; 9 Am. Dec. 339; Shaw v. Badger, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 275; Bayne v. Gaylord, 3 Watts (Pa.) 301; Nickle v. Baldwin, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 290; Phillips v. Lawrence, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 150; Carman v. Franklin Ins. Co., 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 155; Hunt v. Gilmore, 59 Pa. St. 450.

In Maryland the set-off was first authorized by the Act of 1785, ch. 46.

This act provides as follows: "That in case any suit shall be brought on any judgment, or any bond or other writing sealed by the party, and the defendant shall have any demand or claim against the plaintiff, upon judgment, bond, or other instrument under seal, or upon note, agreement, assumpsit, or account proved, as by this act is allowed the defendant, or otherwise according to law, shall be at liberty to file his account in bar, or plead discount of the plaintiff's claim, and judgment shall be given for the plaintiff for the sum only which remains due after just discount made; provided the sum which shall remain due, after such discount, be sufficient to support a judgment in the court where the cause may be tried, according to its established jurisdiction; and in all cases of suits upon simple contracts the defendant may file an account in bar, or plead discount of any claim he may have against the plaintiff, proved as aforesaid, or otherwise proved according to law, which may be of an equal or superior nature to the plaintiff's claim, and judgment shall be given as aforesaid."

This has been given a wider construction than the English statutes, in that set-off has been permitted in actions to recover unliquidated claims. Dyer v. Dorsey, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 442. Thus, set-off was allowed in an action on a policy of insurance. Baltimore Ins. Co. v. M'Fadon, 4 Har. & J. (Md.) 41.

Except a slight change made in 1876, this statute may be found in Maryland Pub. Gen. Laws, 1888, p. 1095, § 12.

Section 2 of the South Carolina discount act, passed in 1759, and made perpetual by the act of 1783, provided as follows: "That in all actions whatever, brought for the recovery of any debt, by any plaintiff, either in his own right or in the right of his wife, or as executor or administrator of any person deceased, it shall and may be lawful for the defendant, if he have any accmpt, reckoning, demand, cause, matter or thing against the plaintiff, to give the same in evidence, by way of discount, regard being always had to the cause of action, so that accmpts, reckonings, demands causes, matters or things relating to the defendant in his own right, shall only be given in evidence by way of discount to actions brought against such defendant in his own right; and so if such defendant is sued in the right of his wife, or as executor or administrator of any person deceased, and the same shall be noted, and judgment be entered for the balance only; and if the plaintiff be found indebted to the defendant, judgment shall be entered for the defendant, with costs of suits, and execution go against the plaintiff."

This provision has been enlarged into those for counterclaim. See South Carolina Code, 1882, § 171; also infra, this title, Counterclaim.

In Missouri: "If any two or more persons are mutually indebted in any manner whatsoever, and one of them commence an action against the other, one debt may be set off against the other, although such debts are of different nature." Missouri Rev. Stats. 1879, § 3867. Compare the present provisions, Missouri Rev. Stat. 1889, § 8160.

In Vermont: "In suits for the payment or recovery of money, offset shall be allowed agreeably to the equitable rights of the parties." Rev. Laws, 1880, § 715.

In Tennessee the statute provides that the defendant may plead by way of set-off "any equities between the defendant and the original party under whom the plaintiff claims, which by law have attached to the demand in the plaintiff's hands, and for which the defendant would be entitled to a recovery against such original party." Tennessee Code of 1884, § 3628, pl. 4.

In some of the States where statutes have been enacted which substantially allow the same defense which may be made under the provisions for counterclaim under the codes of reformed procedure, the terms "set off" and counterclaim have both been preserved. Thus, in Ohio and some other States, the term set-off is applied to the class of matter which may be set off under that part of the statute which in effect provides that, in an action on contract, any other cause of action on contract, existing at the commencement of the action, etc., may be offset, and the term "counterclaim" is employed to designate the class of cases which come within the provision which extends to a cause of action arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action.

"A set-off can only be pleaded in an action founded on contract, and must be a case of action arising upon contract

AS A CROSS-ACTION.—Set-off is in the nature of a cross-action; it does not affect the plaintiff's right to recover on his cause of action.¹ Because of its nature, the same principles must, in general, apply to the maintenance of a set-off that would govern were an independent action brought thereon.²

A defendant cannot file the same claim in set-off to two separate actions.³ Using a demand in set-off bars a subsequent action thereon.⁴ But, although there is a close analogy between setting off a demand and bringing an independent action thereon, it has or ascertained by the decision of a court." Ohio Rev. St. 1890, § 6075. "The counterclaim must be one existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff, between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the petition as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action." Ohio Rev. St. 1890, § 5072. See like provisions in 2 Kansas Gen. St. 1889, §§ 4178, 4181; Nebraska Consol. Stat. 1891, § 4641. Somewhat similar ones in Indiana Rev. St. 1888, §§ 348, 350.

As to Iowa, see Miller's Iowa Rev. Code, 1888, § 2659, or McClain's Iowa Annot. Code, 1888, § 3865. See also infra, this title, Counterclaim.

As to Georgia, see Georgia Code, 1882, §§ 2900, et seq. Formerly the proposed set-off must have been a money demand for which indebitatus assumpsit, or some other action, ex contractu, would lie. Crenshaw v. Jackson, 6 Ga. 509; 50 Am. Dec. 361.

1. Lewis v. Denton, 13 Iowa 441.

Nor does a defendant, by filing an account by way of set-off or cross-demand, commencing within six years, thereby waive the Statute of Limitations as to so much of plaintiff's account as is of more than six years' standing. Hibler v. Johnston, 3 Harr. (N. J.) 266.

2. Mitchell v. McLean, 7 Fla. 329; Freeland v. Man, 1 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 531; Chase v. Strain, 15 N. H. 535; Prentiss v. Sprague, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 428; Barnes v. Shelton, Harp. (S. Car.) 33; 23 Am. Dec. 642.

It was, therefore, held that a set-off may be proved by the defendant's uncontradicted affidavit under a statute (Mansf. Dig. Arkansas, § 2915) which enacts that "in suits upon accounts, the affidavit of the plaintiff . . . that such account is just and correct, shall be sufficient to establish the same, unless the defendant shall, under oath, deny the correctness of the account." Herr Dry Goods Co. v. Shaffer, 51 Ark. 368.

A set-off was held to be within the meaning of 2 Indiana Revised Statutes 41, § 78, requiring that when any pleading is founded on a written instrument or an account, the original, or a copy thereof, must be filed with the pleading. Fugit v. Ewing, 9 Ind. 345.

3. Chase v. Strain, 15 N. H. 535.

4. King v. Fuller, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 152.

See RES JUDICATA, vol. 20, p. 167.

An account in set-off, already pleaded in one case, may be proved by the defendant; but the plaintiff may reply by proof (where there is no special pleading) showing the fact of such former use of the account. Merchants' Bank v. Rawls, 21 Ga. 289.

Where a party in the defense of a suit sets up matter on the trial of the cause which is not properly available as a defense, as, where he insists upon matter as set-off which is not available as such, and testimony is produced in support of such defense, and submitted to, and passed upon, by the jury, such matter cannot again be brought up in a suit by such defendant, and, if it be, the former suit and trial may be pleaded in bar of a recovery. Wilder v. Case, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 583.

Where a verdict was given against the plea of set-off, and the defendant afterwards brought an action for such cause of action, it was held that he was estopped from suing for the same demand, and a plea stating such former action and the second action was for the recovery of the identical claim specified in the set-off, was not answered by a replication that no evidence was offered to substitute the plea of set-off. Eastmure v. Laws, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 444; 7 Dowl. 431; 35 E. C. L. 170.

To admit a suit for a matter once been said that statutes which speak only of an action are to be construed rigidly, and are not to be extended to set-off.¹ The fact that set-off is in the nature of a cross-action does not deprive the plaintiff's counsel of his right to the closing argument.²

d. APPLICATION OF SET-OFF—BALANCES.—Set-off not being a defense, but admitting the truth and validity of the plaintiff's claim, the result is that, if only a set-off is pleaded, the plaintiff's demand will be taken as true, and, the set-off having been proved, whichever demand is the smaller deducted from the other, and judgment rendered for the balance; but if the defendant should fail to establish his claim, the judgment must be for the amount claimed by the plaintiff in his pleading.³ This where offered to be proved as a set-off and rejected, there must be clear proof that it was withdrawn by the party. Muirhead v. Kirkpatrick, 2 Pa. St. 425.

It was held that a defendant is not precluded from claiming a set-off on the trial of a cause in court, by reason of his having used it in another suit by the same plaintiff, before arbitrators, from whose award the plaintiff appealed in. Bitzer v. Killinger, 46 Pa. St. 44.

A bill of particulars by a defendant in one suit, claiming a payment made on a certain day, as a set-off in that suit, is not evidence against the same defendant in another suit, in which he insists upon such payment as a bar to a recovery. Starkweather v. Kittle, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 20.

1. Taylor v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 82 N. Y. 10.

The provision of the New York Code, that no action on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace shall be brought in the same county within five years after its rendition, does not prevent parties thereto, and especially an assignee thereof, from using such judgment as a defense, set-off or counterclaim. Clark v. Story, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 295.

So notwithstanding the provision of the Code, that "no action shall be brought upon a judgment rendered in any court of this State, except a court of justice of the peace, between the same parties, without leave of the court for good cause shown, on notice to the adverse party," it was held in an action upon contract, for goods sold and delivered that the defendant may, without obtaining leave of court, set up in his answer, by way of set-off, or counterclaim, a judgment recovered by him against the plaintiff before the suit brought by the latter was commenced. Wells v. Henshaw, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 625.

Although by reason of the charter of a city no suit can be maintained upon a claim against it, until after presentation to, and demand of payment from, an officer thereof, it was yet held that the claim may be set-off in a suit against its owner by the city. Taylor v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 82 N. Y. 10.

Notwithstanding the statute in Virginia (1 Virginia Rev. Code 1819, p. 320, ch. 85, § 23), prohibiting an action for clerk's fees until a return by the sheriff or sergeant, such fees were allowed as a set-off in Craig v. Lobb, 12 Leigh (Va.) 630, the court citing Martin v. Winder, 1 Dougl. 198, note, and Bulman v. Birket, 1 Esp. 449.

Under a statute providing that no attorney shall commence or maintain an action for the recovery of any fees, charges, or disbursement for business done by him until the expiration of one month after the delivery of a bill therefor, it has nevertheless been held that an attorney may set off his bill although it was not delivered a month before the commencement of the action; but it ought, if possible, to be delivered time enough to be taxed, and at least should be delivered sufficiently early to prevent the plaintiff from being taken by surprise at the trial. Brown v. Tibbits, 11 C. B. N. S. 855; 103 E. C. L. 855; 31 L. J. C. P. 206; 103 E. C. L. 855; Martin v. Winder, Dougl. 199, note; Bulman v. Birkett, 1 Esp. 449; Montag, 36. See Harrison v. Turner, 10 Q. B. 482; 59 E. C. L. 481; and see per Parke, B., Lester v. Lazarus, 2 C. M. & R. 669.

2. Toppan v. Jenness, 21 N. H. 232.

3. For an application of the rule that a mere plea of set-off is an acknowl-only set-off is pleaded. But, in accordance with the well-settled practice that the defendant may plead one matter of defense to part of the plaintiff's demand, and, in the same plea, another matter of defense to the residue of the demand, it is admissible for the defendant to oppose a defense, as of payment, performance, etc., to a part of the plaintiff's claim and plead a set-off as to the remainder.¹ While set-off may be pleaded to a single count,² it is not necessary to plead it expressly to any particular count.³ Where a debtor has a set-off equally applicable to two demands against him, it is not for him to elect which demand he will satisfy by his set-off; but the court will direct the application according to the equities between the parties.⁴ Set-off will be applied on a secured rather than an unsecured claim.⁵

As has been substantially stated in the paragraph next above, if the defendant files and sustains his set-off, and the result is not only that he owes the plaintiff nothing, but that the plaintiff owes him a balance when the mutual and opposing claims are adjusted, the generally prevailing rule is that the defendant may have judgment and execution against the plaintiff, in that action, for the balance or surplus due him.⁶

2. PLAINTIFF'S RIGHT OF ACTION—NONSUIT.—It is not necessary, according to some authorities, to entitle the defendant to judgment for the amount of a cross-demand, that there edgment of the justice of the plaintiff's demand, and, if not sustained, entitles him to a judgment, see Raymond v. Kerker, 81 Ill. 381.

It was provided by statute that "when no balance is found due to either party, no costs are recoverable." Maine Rev. Stat., ch. 82, par. 60. Upon a set-off and counter set-off in an action on an account annexed, an instruction that if the jury should find as much due the defendant as there was due the plaintiff the verdict should be for the defendant, was held to be in contravention of this statute—the proper verdict would be, "nothing due either party." Morgan v. Heffler, 68 Me. 131.

Interest.—It has been said that justice demands that the claim of the debtor, not bearing interest, should be set off against that of the creditor, drawing interest, as of the time it became due and owing. Meriwether v. Bird, 9 Ga. 594.

Where an auditor found that the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant at the time the suit was brought to a certain amount, which was then a proper subject of set-off against any demand of the plaintiff in the action, and the court, in making the set-off, brought the interest on the plaintiff's claim down to the time of the judgment, and set off the amount of the defendant's claim as found without interest, it was held that the court erred, and that the defendant's claim should have been applied to the plaintiff's as of the time when the suit was brought. Tucker v. Jewett, 32 Conn. 563.

But in England this cannot be done; should be something proved and allowed to the plaintiff.¹ Other authorities are to the effect that there can be no set-off where the plaintiff has no cause of action.²

The more commonly accepted rule is that the filing of a plea of set-off in nowise impairs the plaintiff's right to a discontinuance or nonsuit.³ But it has been held that after filing a plea of set-off, the plaintiff has no longer a right to take a nonsuit without the consent of the plaintiff.⁴ In yet other States the plaintiff the defendant must bring his action for the surplus. Hennell v. Fairland, 3 Esp. 104.

1. Moore v. Wright, 4 Ill. App. 443; Greenleaf v. Low, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 168.

2. Claridge v. Klett, 15 Pa. St. 255.

It has been held that no judgment can be rendered against a plaintiff upon a demand against him by way of set-off if he become nonsuit; Sewall v. Tarbox, 30 Me. 27; or if he discontinued his action by leave of court. Cummings v. Pruden, 11 Mass. 206.

In Tennessee, by the act of 1815, ch. 58, the defendant could only recover, by means of a set-off, the balance, if any, in his favor, and could not recover at all if no claim of the plaintiff was proved against him. Edington v. Pickle, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 122. Likewise under section 2 of the act of 1852, the right of set-off was considered incidental to and dependent upon the fact of the plaintiff's having established a right of recovery against the defendant; this failing, the right of set-off could not exist. Brazelton v. Nashville R. Co., 3 Head (Tenn.) 570. So, under the Tennessee Code, § 2922, which authorizes a judgment upon a set-off only for its "excess" over the plaintiff's demand, there can be no judgment in favor of the defendant in a case where the plaintiff establishes no demand whatever against the defendant. *East Tennessee, etc., R. See NONSUIT, vol. 16, pp. 727, et seq.

In Illinois, it is, after a plea of set-off has been filed, within the discretion of the court whether to grant a motion by the plaintiff to dismiss the suit. Butler v. Randall, 25 Ill. App. 586.

In Maine, the statute touches on the matter; it provides that the time of the limitation of a debt or contract, filed by way of set-off, "shall be computed as if an action had been commenced therefor at the time when the plaintiff's action was commenced, unless the defendant is deprived of the benefit of the set-off by the non-suit or other act of the plaintiff; and where he is thus defeated of a judgment on the merits of such debt or contract, he may commence an action thereon within the time limited." Maine Rev. Stat. (ed. 1857), p. 512.

4. Thomas v. Hill, 3 Tex. 270. See NONSUIT, vol. 16, p. 727, et seq.; DISCONTINUANCE, vol. 5, p. 676, n. 2.

The case of Riley v. Carter, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 230, is in terms to this effect. But in Fowler v. Lawson, 15 Ark. 148, the court by Scott, J., comments upon this case as follows: "That case, however, originated before a justice of the peace, who not only found, upon the trial, a balance due the defendant, but rendered a judgment for it in his favor, which was appealed from the circuit court, where the plaintiff was refused leave to take a nonsuit, and that refusal was affirmed by the Supreme Court of Tennessee."

It was held that, after an account ordered by the court under Tennessee Code, § 2924, as to set-off in an action at law, the plaintiff cannot dismiss his suit without the defendants' consent. Galbraith v. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co., 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 169.

In assumpsit on account it was held that, after the defendant had filed an account in set-off, and the auditor had reported, the plaintiff could not then discontinue without the defendant's consent. Dyer v. Morris, 68 Me. 472; citing Maine Rev. Stat., ch. 82, § 59.

may dismiss his action but cannot thereby interfere with the defendant's cross-action or set-off.¹

f. FAILURE TO USE.—In the absence of evidence of any mutual and open accounts, a set-off may be withdrawn.²

The distinction between set-off and a defense in the technical sense is well illustrated in the rule that a set-off may be used or not, at pleasure.³ If a defendant in an action has a defense thereto, he must, in general, defend and protect his rights; for, if he omit to do so, he cannot afterwards, as plaintiff, sue for such rights.⁴ But, unless there are provisions in the statutes which expressly provide differently, a defendant may use or not use his claim in set-off when an opportunity is presented,⁵ without im-

1. Georgia Code, § 2907.

Where defendant pleads a set-off, plaintiff cannot, by refusing to proceed with the case, defeat defendant's right to recover under his set-off; and the rule is the same, although defendant may have discontinued a pending action against plaintiff in order to interpose his claim by way of set-off to plaintiff's claim. Simon v. Myers, 68 Ga. 74.

In Nebraska, if the plaintiff dismisses his action after the filing of set-off, the clerk should, before dismissal, docket the set-off, with claimant as plaintiff and the adverse party as defendant. This practice was, in Rawalt v. Brewer, 16 Neb. 444, explained substantially as follows: Suppose A B commences an action against C D, and C D files a set-off. If A B, after the set-off of C D was filed, should dismiss his action and pay the costs, as in this case, the action would not proceed further under that title. That action would be dismissed, and if the defendant desired a trial of his set-off or cross-action, the justice would make the proper entry in his docket showing the dismissal of the action, the set-off of the defendant, and give it the proper title, C D v. A B, and the cause would proceed under that title, as C D would be the plaintiff in that action.

Compare cases cited in Nebraska Consol. Stat. 1891, § 4644.

In Iowa, the dismissal of an action without prejudice by the plaintiff will not entitle him to a dismissal of a counterclaim. Sigler v. Hidy, 56 Iowa 504.

The Iowa Code, § 2846, in providing that where a counterclaim has been filed defendant shall have the right to proceed to the trial of his claim, although plaintiff may have dismissed his action or failed to appear, was construed not to contemplate the introduction, by defendant, of a cause of action not involved in the case at the time of plaintiff's dismissal. Page v. Sackett, 69 Iowa 226.

It was held in Kansas, that a plaintiff may, after having been allowed to dismiss his action without prejudice, come in and defend against the defendant's counterclaim, which goes to trial as if the defendant were plaintiff and had sued upon the claim. Sale v. Bugher, 24 Kan. 432.

5. Rule Under the Doctrine of Compensation in the Civil Law.—The difference between set-off and compensation of the civil law is here well illustrated. Under the civil-law doctrine of compensation the cross-debt to the same amount was, by mere operation of law, and independent of the act of the parties, extinguished, consequently the rule in the civil law is contrary to that stated in the text. 2 Story Eq. Jur., § 1440, citing Pothier on Oblig., n. 599; 1 Domat., b. 4, tit. 2, § 1, art. 4. It seems to resemble our payment, in this respect, rather than set-off.

pairing his right to establish his claim in a separate action,¹ or to use it in a subsequent action by the same plaintiff,² or to plead it to an action on the judgment.³ And where the defendant is not prepared, at the time the plaintiff sues him, to prove his demand, it is most advisable not to plead or give notice of set-off, for in case he should go into evidence upon the trial in support of his cross-demand, and fail in the attempt, he cannot afterwards proceed in an action for the amount.⁴ It is, however, better that a claim should be settled by set-off, when that can properly be done, because it saves both expense and time to do this. And courts have censured parties for not pleading a demand by way of set-off, when there was nothing to show that it might not have been made perfectly available to the defendant in that way. Besides, the possibility of the plaintiff in the action in which a demand can be set off becoming insolvent before an independent action can be instituted and judgment recovered, should be considered. But it has been held that when a judgment creditor becomes insolvent after obtaining his judgment, equity may compel allowance of any set-off the debtor may have against him, though it existed at the time suit was brought, provided it was not adjudicated against in the suit.⁵

So the statute of New York, authorizing set-off in the higher courts was held to be not compulsory, and that the defendant might waive the set-off and resort to an action. Carpenter v. Butterfield, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 146.

It was held that one who fails to make a set-off at law cannot have relief in equity, although the omission is due to surprise or accident, unmixed with negligence, because he still has a legal remedy by suit. Hudson v. Kline, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 379.

2. In a suit to enforce a vendor's lien on land, it was held that, though the plaintiff had obtained a judgment on the note for the unpaid purchase money, before filing a bill to enforce his lien on the land, the defendant was not precluded from setting off a cross-demand, which would have been available as a set-off in the action at law, but which was not introduced in that suit. Weaver v. Brown, 87 Ala. 533.

4. A plea to an action of debt, alleging that in a former action brought by the defendant against the plaintiff, the latter had pleaded a set-off in respect of the same money now sought to be recovered, but the jury had found for the plaintiff, on which judgment was given, is a good plea of estoppel, and the plaintiff cannot reply that he was not prepared to support his plea of set-off at the former trial. *Eastmure v. But where a defendant purposely omitted to set off certain claims in an action at law, and afterwards came into equity to have them set off against the judgment, it was held that, under the circumstances, this could not be done. The court, by Curtis, J., said: "He (the complainant) purposely omitted

It is, in the statutes of some States, provided, in effect, that if the defendant, when an action is brought against him in which a set-off may be made, neglects to set off his claim, a subsequent suit for its recovery is thereby barred.¹ In order that a suit may be barred by the operation of a statute of this kind, it must ap-to set off these alleged claims in the action at law, and now asks a court of equity to try these unliquidated claims and ascertain their amount, and enable him to have the same advantage which he has once waived, when it was directly presented to him in the regular course of legal proceedings. Courts of equity do not assist those whose condition is attributable only to want of due diligence, nor lend their aid to parties, who, having had a plain, adequate and complete remedy at law, have purposely omitted to avail themselves of it. It is suggested that courts of equity have an original jurisdiction in cases of set-off, and that this jurisdiction is not taken away by the statutes of set-off, which have given the right at law. This may be admitted, though it has been found exceedingly difficult to determine what was the original jurisdiction in equity over this subject. 2 Story's Eq. Jur., 656, 664. But whatever may have been its exact limits, there can be no doubt that a party sued at law has his election to set off his claim, or resort to his separate action. And if he deliberately elects the last, he cannot come into a court of equity and ask to be allowed to make a different determination, and to be restored to the right which he has once voluntarily waived.

"Similar considerations are fatal to the plaintiff's claim for relief, on the ground that the defendant resides out of the State, and that therefore he should have the aid of a court of equity, to subject the judgment at law to the payment of the complainant's claim. When the complainant elected not to file these claims in set-off in the action at law, he knew that defendant, who was plaintiff in that action, resided out of the State. If that fact was deemed by the complainant insufficient to induce him to avail himself of his complete legal remedy, it can hardly be supposed that it can induce a court of equity to interpose to create one for him." Hendrickson v. Hinckley, 17 How. (U. S.) 443.

1. New Jersey. See Schenck v. Schenck, 10 N. J. L. 276.

In Pennsylvania, it is provided by the act of March 20, 1810, that in an action before a justice of the peace, the defendant must set off any claim which he may have against the plaintiff not exceeding $100, or be forever barred of its recovery. Herring v. Adams, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 459.

Where a justice of the peace issues his process, which is served according to law on a defendant, the latter cannot turn round and sue the plaintiff before another justice for any debt or demand within his jurisdiction, but must submit his claim by way of set-off to the justice before whom the plaintiff has brought his suit. Slyhoof v. Flitcraft, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 171; White v. Johnson, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 146.

Under this act an employé cannot sue for wages for manual labor performed while a suit by the master in another court for damages, arising from the same transaction and ex contractu, is still pending and undetermined. Felipel v. Hershour, 128 Pa. St. 587.

Where a party is sued in the court for the trial of small causes, in New Jersey, he is not at liberty to bring a cross-action for a demand which is the subject matter of set-off; if not claimed as set-off, the right to recover it is barred by statute. Righter v. Van Riper, 3 N. J. L. 715; Johnson v. Pennington, 15 N. J. L. 188; Henry v. Milham, 13 N. J. L. 266.

So in Illinois, the defendant is obliged to set off his debt against the plaintiff's demand, in actions before justices of the peace. Morton v. Bailey, 2 Ill. 213; 27 Am. Dec. 767.

The seventh section of the act of Pennsylvania of March 20, 1810, only requires a defendant to make a set-off when his demand against a plaintiff does not exceed the sum of $100. Where, therefore, the demand of a defendant which was founded on a book account exceeded the sum of $100, it was held that he was not bound to submit particular items or any part of his demand, by way of set-off against the claim of the plaintiff, to the jurisdiction of the justice, before whom the plaintiff had brought his suit; and that he was not pear that the suit by the defendant was one in which a set-off might be had,¹ and that the plaintiff's claim was a proper subject of set-off, and might have been so employed by the plaintiff when he was defendant in the former action.² Although a joint and several note, being a separate debt against each of the makers as well as a joint debt against both, may be set off in a suit by either of the makers against the holder, the holder is, nevertheless, not bound to set it off.³

g. RELINQUISHMENT AND DEPRIVATION OF RIGHT.—It has been held that the right of set-off may be insisted on, though an express promise has been made to relinquish it.⁴ Although goods were to be paid for in ready money when delivered, it was, under barred by his neglect or refusal so to do from recovering any part of his said demand, in a subsequent suit against such party plaintiff. Simpson v. Lapsley, 3 Pa. St. 459.

1. Since the defendant cannot set off in an action of trespass, it is certainly no objection to the defendant's set-off in an action of assumpsit, that the defendant had not pleaded his set-off in a former action of trespass. Allen v. Horton, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 23.

2. Where the plaintiff, in a justice's court, declared on a special contract, by which the defendant agreed to transfer to him $1,000 worth of railroad stock, and to pay him $50 in goods, but claimed damages to $100 only, and the defendant pleaded that in a former action, on contract, brought by himself against the plaintiff before a justice, the plaintiff had neglected to set off his present demand, held that the plea was bad, because the demand was either unliquidated or was for $1,050; and in either case, could not have been set off in the former action. Babcock v. Peck, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 292.

In an action on a promissory note, it is sufficient excuse for not filing such note in set-off, in a former action by the defendant against the plaintiff that such note was, at the time of the former trial, out of the plaintiff's hands by assignment. Boylan v. Vughte, 2 N. J. L. 95.

It was held that where the plaintiff objects to admissibility of a note in set-off, when offered by the defendant, he cannot afterwards, in an action upon such note, object that it was not set off in the former action. Phinney v. Earle, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 352.

3. Culver v. Barney, 14 Wend. (N. Y.)

161. The court by Sutherland, J., said: "By doing so, and taking judgment against the plaintiff for the balance which would have been found in his favor, he would probably have lost his remedy against the other maker. He could not afterwards have sued him upon the note. The demands which the defendant must set off are demands against the plaintiff in the action, and not against the plaintiff and some other person either jointly or severally." 2 New York Rev. Stat. 236, § 50, subd. 7.

4. Though the debt from the defendant arises on a loan by the plaintiff, on making of which the defendant promised not to set off his demand against the plaintiff, such demand may nevertheless, be availed of in set-off. Lechmere v. Hawkins, 2 Esp. 626; Taylor v. Okey, 13 Ves. 180.

It was held that the words, "without defalcation for value received," in a sealed note, do not preclude the defendant in an action thereon from making the defense of set-off. Louden v. Tiffany, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 367.

But in Missouri it was held that a set-off cannot be pleaded to an action on a note made "payable without defalcation." Collins v. Waddle, 4 Mo. 452; Maupin v. Smith, 7 Mo. 402. But see Baker v. Brown, 10 Mo. 396.

It has been decided that an express agreement by a broker that he will sell goods for his principal, and pay over the whole proceeds, without setting off a debt then due to him from his principal, is not binding upon the broker, so as to deprive him of his legal right of lien or set-off, even though the plaintiff declare specially upon such agreement. McGillivray v. Simson, 2 C. & P. 320; 9 D. & R. 35; 12 E. C. L. 146.

the English statute, held that the defendant, in a suit for the price, might plead a set-off.¹

A party cannot be deprived of his right of set-off by anything less than a contract.² A person owing a balance upon an account, but having a greater sum due him for merchandise subsequently furnished, is not estopped from pleading the latter as a set-off, by a promise to pay the former balance. Such promise is without consideration to support it, unless in consequence thereof the promisee has acted so as to alter his previous position, and the breach thereof would operate to his injury.³ One who has given a bond to secure the payment of an unliquidated demand against which he has a set-off, may plead his set-off in an action on the bond, although he did not reserve the right therein.⁴ Similarly, if the maker of a note, having an equitable set-off, which is available against an assignee after maturity, executes a mortgage to the assignee to secure the payment of the note, this does not estop him from afterwards setting up against the assignee his equitable set-off.⁵ So, where a vendor takes a guaranty from a third person for goods sold and delivered, their value may, notwithstanding, be set off by the vendor in an action against him by the vendee.⁶

It seems that, under the general well-settled doctrine that a person may waive many statutory or constitutional provisions intended for his benefit, a party entitled to a right of set-off may waive it by an agreement deliberately made upon a good consideration.⁷ So, an agent or attorney who, by virtue of special

The execution after the rendering of services by the maker of the note to the payee of a promissory note with a cognovit authorizing the entry of judgment thereon, was considered a waiver of the right to interpose the value of such services as a set-off to the note; and, in such case, the court refused to stay proceedings on the judgment, it not appearing that services of any material value had been rendered since the exeauthority, has received money, cannot, when sued by his principal, set off a debt due to himself in a matter not arising out of his agency. By accepting the special trust he waives the general right of set-off.¹ An agreement to pay in a specific way has been held to waive the right of set-off.²

4. SET-OFF AGAINST A SET-OFF.—The right to set off was designed to protect a defendant; consequently there cannot, under the generally prevailing statutes, be a set-off against a set-off.³

cution of the note and cognovit. Gross v. Weary, 90 Ill. 256.

Where the parties had expressly agreed that a particular question should be tried between them, the court refused the defendant the advantage of a set-off, which it was the intention of both parties he should not have. Gould v. Oliver, 6 Scott 648.

M, being a housekeeper with a family, and owning but one cow, agreed to sell her to W, to enable him to buy another that gave milk, W knowing at the time the object of the sale. Held, that M. was entitled to recover the whole price of the cow in money from W, and the latter could not set off against it any debt he might hold against him. Muliken v. Winter, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 256; 87 Am. Dec. 495.

1. In Tagg v. Bowman, 108 Pa. St. 273, 56 Am. Rep. 206, the court by Sterrett, J., said: "The receipt of money by one person from another, to be applied to a specific purpose, implies an agreement on the part of the former not to apply it to any other use, and, of course, not to his own by pleading a set-off. Smuller v. Union Canal Co., 37 Pa. St. 68; Bank of U. S. v. Macalister, 9 Pa. St. 475; Ardesco Oil Co. v. North American Oil, etc., Co., 66 Pa. St. 375. In Simpson v. Pinkerton, 10 W. N. C. (Pa.) 423, we held that an attorney at law or in fact employed to collect a claim, when he has received the money, has no right to set off an antecedent debt or claim of his own against his constituent, without first showing that the latter agreed he might retain his demand out of the money. It was also ruled, in Middletown, etc., Turnpike Road v. Watson, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 330, that an agent of the company, who had received money to its use, could not in a suit against him set off debts of the company which he had paid, without showing he had authority to pay them. It is there said: 'As long as the agent acts within the scope of his authority, and no longer, he is protected. It was the duty of Watson to collect and pay over the funds as they came into his hands. It was for the company to direct the application of the money when in the treasury or under their control, to the discharge of their debts, the repair of the road, or whatever purposes they might suppose most beneficial to the corporation. This they have been prevented from doing by an assumption of power by their agent and a misapplication of the funds of the company. If such a breach of trust should be permitted, it would in practice lead to great abuses by introducing a scene of speculation and fraud the most disastrous, and of the most secret and dangerous nature. A principal may give a special authority to his agent to settle and liquidate his debts; but previous to the introduction of such a defense to a suit brought for money had and received as agent, the special authority should be shown.'"

2. Where the plaintiff had given the defendant a note payable in work, it was held that such note could not be set off in an action by him against defendant for a money demand, although such debt accrued for the same kind of work. Prather v. McEvoy, 7 Mo. 598.

Where the defendant has by mistake overpaid the amount actually borrowed by him, and in an action brought to recover the money loaned, sets up the fact by way of counterclaim, the plaintiff cannot set up by way of set-off that the defendant is indebted to him, in dealings and transactions between them entirely distinct from and foreign to the subject-matter of the issues made by the petition, answer, and counterclaim, and such claims of set-off are properly rejected. West v. Meddock, 16 Ohio St. 417.

But under the Massachusetts statutes

i. CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES—LEX LOCI.—Statutes of set-off, being regarded as remedial acts, tending to prevent circuity of action, and thus settle controversies speedily, are to be liberally construed.¹ As a general rule, equity, in relation to set-off as in other matter, follows the law; courts of equity, except in cases where there exist special supervenient equities, which justify them in granting relief beyond the rules of law,² follow the course adopted in the construction of the statutes by courts of law.³

Set-offs, being allowed in order to prevent multiplicity of actions, ought not to be so allowed as to be themselves the cause of new disputes.⁴ Since the right of set-off was considered a mere mat-

(Massachusetts Gen. Stats., ch. 130), a plaintiff may file a set-off to the defendant's set-off. Galligan v. Fannan, 9 Allen (Mass.) 192.

In Indiana, the plaintiff, in a suit on a note where a set-off is filed, may put in a counterclaim to reduce the set-off. Turner v. Simpson, 12 Ind. 413.

If plaintiff has a note and an account against defendant, he may sue on the note, and reply the account as a set-off against an equal amount pleaded as a set-off by defendant. He may do this if he held the claim which he seeks to set off at the time the defendants' plea was filed; it is not necessary that the claim replied should be held by the plaintiff at the time his action was commenced. Blount v. Rick, 107 Ind. 238.

It was held that under the New York Revised Statutes, set-offs are allowed in the court of chancery, in the same manner as at law; and a statement of the set-off in the answer, and proof thereof, at the hearing, is sufficient without filing a cross-bill. Irving v. McKay, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 319.

In Michigan and Colorado, the statutes provide that, in suits for the recovery and payment of money, set-offs are to be allowed in equity in the same manner, and with the like effect, as in actions at law. Laws of Michigan (ed. 1857), p. 1010; Colorado Stats. 1867, p. 93.

4. Mangle v. Stiles, 31 Pa. St. 72.

Since the purpose of allowing set-off was to do away with circuity of action, an accounting in set-off must be of such a character that the record will protect the party against an action relating to the same matter. So where the plaintiff had purchased a horse from the defendant for $125, but had been taken back by the defendant on the plaintiff's promise to do what was right about it, or to leave it to a third person, it was held that the defendant could not set off a claim for use of and damages to the horse while in the plaintiff's poster of grace, it was held that a creditor cannot compel a third person who has had mutual dealings with him and his insolvent debtor to assist the former in obtaining a set-off.¹

The right of set-off belongs to the remedy, and is therefore to be governed by the law of the place where the action is brought.² So, a foreign statute of set-off, going merely to the remedy, will not be regarded as affecting a debt, but the lex fori will exclusion, since a recovery by the defendant for "use and damage" to the horse would be no answer for the plaintiff in a suit by the defendant for the value of the horse when sold, nor for the difference in value when taken on resale. Stevens v. Blen, 39 Me. 420.

In an action for damages for breach of special contract, the breach consisting of negligence in keeping the plaintiff's sheep, whereby some were greatly injured, and others died, it was held that the defendant could not deduct from such damages the amount to which he was entitled for the keeping of the sheep. Crowninshield v. Robinson, 1 Mason (U. S.) 93. The court said: "In our judgment, the true rule under the circumstances of this case, is to estimate the full value of the plaintiff's damages, without taking into account the possible claims of the defendants for the keeping of the sheep. If the defendants are entitled to anything for the keeping, they may recover it in another form of action to the extent to which they can show a performance of their contract, and a benefit derived by the plaintiff. A recovery in this action would be no necessary bar to such a suit; and, therefore, the plaintiff might be doubly charged if the deduction were now made. Besides, if the defendants were entitled to a meritorious compensation equal to the injury sustained by the plaintiff, then upon the ground stated, notwithstanding such injury, the verdict of the jury ought to be that the defendants are not guilty, which would throw the costs of the suit upon the plaintiff. And certainly, in that event a judgment for the defendants in this action, would be no bar to an action on a quantum meruit for keeping the sheep; for it never could judicially appear that the former verdict was given upon this special ground, and not upon the ground that the plaintiff had sustained no injury. The verdict would affirm nothing but a general finding in favor of the defendants; and the private grounds upon which the jury proceeded could never be a fit subject of inquiry, even supposing, what might well be doubted, that they were all agreed on the same grounds. We think it safest, though the point is certainly not free from difficulty, to adhere to the old doctrine, and to confine the later doctrine to such cases only where it is incontestable that the parties cannot be prejudiced. It is, at most, an equitable offset which ought not to be admitted when it may work against equity. The case might have admitted of a very different consideration if the present defendants had brought an action upon the contract for compensation for keeping the sheep; for to such an action gross negligence and injury would be a complete defense, since they would establish the fact of a non-performance of the contract according to the express engagement of the defendants. And even on a quantum meruit, such negligence or injury might, under circumstances, constitute a bar to the action, or be proper evidence to reduce the amount of the compensation."

1. The plaintiff had deposited $3,000 with the F. & M. Bank; he then got them to discount his note for $1,500, and they indorsed it to defendant, who had collateral to secure them in all such transactions. The F. & M. Bank became insolvent, and this suit was brought to compel defendants to apply their surplus collateral as set-off to this note of $1,500. The demand was not allowed, and it was said that the plaintiff had no right of set-off either at law or in equity. Munger v. Albany City Bank, 85 N. Y. 580.

sively govern.¹ It has, however, been submitted by good authority that when a foreign statute of set-off goes to extinguish a debt subject to it, it should have extra-territorial force.²

3. In What Actions Available.—By a reference to the terms of the more commonly adopted statutes of set-off, it will be seen that set-off is permitted if there exist mutual debts between the parties, or, according to some of the statutes, the defendant may set off those claims against the plaintiff, which are defined by statute, when an action is brought for the recovery of any debt.³ And in those States where the right has not been enlarged to counterclaim, a set-off will be permitted only in actions where the plaintiff's demand is in the nature of a debt. It cannot be resorted to in an action where the plaintiff claims unliquidated damages, i. e., damages which cannot be ascertained by mere calculation, without the intervention of a jury.⁴ Accordingly, set-off is not

The Texas statute provides: "If the plaintiff's cause of action be a claim for unliquidated or uncertain damages, founded on a tort or breach of covenant, the defendant shall not be permitted to set off any debt due him by the plaintiff." Texas Rev. Stats., art. 649.

In determining the right of set-off it was said that a claim for the failure to deliver 40½ bushels of corn alleged to be worth $1.25 per bushel, based upon a verbal contract of sale, was unliquidated in its nature. Sanders v. Bridges, 67 Tex. 93.

Mutual Credits Under Bankrupt Acts.—So, mutual credits cannot be pleaded by way of set-off under the bankrupt acts, where the action is for unliqui-allowed in actions for a tort,¹ in actions upon the case,² trespass,³ detinue,⁴ replevin,⁵ or trover.⁶ Nor is it admissible in an action to recover unliquidated damages for breach of dated damages. 2 Chit. Contr. 1285. No set-off, by reason of mutual credit, could be pleaded to a claim by the assignees resulting from the misapplication of the defendant of money placed in his hands by the bankrupt for the purpose of meeting his acceptances, such claim being held to be for unliquidated damages. Bell v. Carey, 8 C. B. 887; 65 E. C. L. 885; Hill v. Smith, 12 M. & W. 618.

A tort cannot be pleaded as a set-off in an action for a tort. Hart v. Davis, 21 Tex. 411.

In an action for negligence and breach of duty, the defendant cannot claim to set off his account for services. Collins v. Groseclose, 40 Ind. 414.

In an action for trespass for disregarding the claim of the debtor to the benefit of the exemption law, the debt cannot be defalked against the plaintiff's damages. Wilson v. McElroy, 32 Pa. St. 82.

4. Bull. N. P. 181.

5. Fairman v. Fluck, 5 Watts (Pa.) 516; Peterson v. Haight, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 150; Beyer v. Fenstermacher, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 95.

But under the Iowa Code, § 1740, where the plaintiff in replevin sought restitution of cattle and damages for their detention, it was held that the defendants might set up a claim in set-off for rescuing, taking care of, and feeding them. Dunham v. Dennis, 9 Iowa 543.

Under the Kansas statute providing that any cause of action arising from contract, whether it be for a liquidated demand or for unliquidated damages, constitutes a set-off against any action founded on contract (Kansas Civ. Code, §§ 94, 98), it was held, in an action of replevin, that it did not follow that a set-off cannot be pleaded in a replevin suit, against a claim to the re-plevied property arising from contract. Gardner v. Risher, 35 Kan. 93. But Johnston, J., did not concur, saying: "Under our statute a set-off can only be pleaded in an action founded on contract. This was an action of replevin, which is in the nature of a tort, and is founded upon the wrong of the defendant and not upon contract."

In a later case in the same State it was decided that a set-off cannot be pleaded as a defense in an action of replevin. In delivering the opinion of the court, Johnston, J., said: "Such an action is founded upon the wrong or tort of the defendant, and not upon contract; and § 98 of the code specifically provides that 'a set-off can be pleaded in an action founded on contract.'" Kennett v. Fickel, 41 Kan. 211.

After tender of the amount secured by a mortgage, and refusal by the mortgagee, he cannot set it off in an action of trover. Fuller v. Parish, 3 Mich. 211.

Where stock was pledged as security for a loan of money, and the lender agreed that he would give to the borrower thirty days' notice to redeem stock, after the note should become due, and before a transfer thereof, and in case of a sale of the stock, to pay the borrower the balance, after satisfying the note and $20 for expenses, and an action was brought by the borrower against the lender to recover damages for selling the stock at private sale, and without notice to the plaintiff, it was held that this was not an action in trover for conversion, but was an action upon contract and would admit of a set-off. Seaman v. Reeve, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 454.

Under the Connecticut statutes (Connecticut Gen. Stats., tit. 19, ch. 8, §§ 17, 18), which provides that in all actions for trespass, other than of assault and battery, and for the taking of property exempt from being taken on execution, in which judgment shall be contract.¹ So there can be no set-off in a proceeding in rendered for the plaintiff, the defendant may, upon petition to the same court, be allowed to set off against such judgment any debt that he may hold against the plaintiff; it was held that this relief could be had in an action of trover for attaching exempt property. Williams v. Stratton, 45 Conn. 566.

1. George v. Cahawla, etc., R. Co., 8 Ala. 234; Frick v. White, 57 N. Y. 103.

In an action for the recovery of damages for the breach of a warranty in the sale of goods, the defendant is not entitled to a set-off of demands against the plaintiff. Wilmot v. Hurd, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 584.

A set-off cannot be pleaded to an action of covenant for uncertain damages. Warn v. Bickford, 7 Price 550; Weigal v. Waters, 6 T. R. 488; Dowd v. Faucett, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 92. Nor can it be opposed to an action for breach of covenant to deliver specific articles. Barnes v. Lloyd, 1 How. (Miss.) 584.

It has been held that a set-off is not available in an action for not accepting, according to contract, a bill of exchange for the price of goods; Hutchinson v. Reid, 3 Campb. 329; nor in an action for breach of warranty in the sale of goods. Wilmot v. Hurd, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 584.

Where a bill of exchange was delivered by A to B, for a special purpose, e. g., to deliver it to a creditor of A, in payment of a debt; but B, instead of doing this, received and retained the amount of the bill, it was said that if the plaintiff had brought a special action for the breach of duty, there could have been no set-off, because it would have been an action for unliquidated damages, but it was held that, since the plaintiff declared in assumpsit for money had and received, a set-off by B was available. Thorpe v. Thorpe, 3 B. & Ad. 580; 23 E. C. L. 146.

Set-off is not allowed in an action for not indemnifying plaintiff from certain taxes. Cooper v. Robinson, 1 Chit. 161.

It has been held that a set-off cannot be pleaded to a special count for not indemnifying the plaintiff for having been forced, as the accommodation acceptor of a bill, to pay such bill with interest and expenses, because if the contract declared upon was such as might entitle the plaintiff to recover special damages, the statutes of set-off did not apply, even though no special damage was laid, and the jury might simply give damages in such a case for the manner in which the plaintiff had been forced and compelled to pay the bill. Hardcastle v. Netherwood, 5 B. & Ald. 93; 7 E. C. L. 37.

But it was said in this case that the defendant might, perhaps, have pleaded a set-off to that part of the count which charged the defendant with the amount of the acceptance paid by the plaintiff. And in the case of Crampton v. Walker, 3 E. & E. 321; 30 L. J. Q. B. 19; 107 E. C. L. 320, where the action was to recover the amount which the plaintiff, as the accommodation acceptor of the bill, had been forced and obliged to pay, and also the amount of the costs and expenses incurred in defending and settling an action brought by the payee against the plaintiff as acceptor, it was held that set-off might be pleaded to so much of the declaration as related to the plaintiff's claim in respect of his payment of the amount of the bill and interest, because such claim was a liquidated demand capable of being ascertained with precision at the time of pleading, and was separable from the rest of the claim, though mixed up with it in one count, but that set-off could not be pleaded to the costs and expenses incurred by plaintiff, but not paid, and therefore not constituting the liquidated demand to which a set-off could be pleaded. In a later case, where the plaintiff declared on an agreement by the defendant to indemnify the plaintiff against the costs which he might be obliged to pay in a certain suit, and the declaration alleged that the plaintiff was compelled to pay the sum of 131*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.* for costs in the said suit, and assigned as a breach that the defendant had not indemnified the plaintiff, nor paid the said sum, it was held that a plea of set-off pleaded to so much of the said breach as related to the non-payment of the said sum of 131*l.* 18*s.* and 10*d.* was good. Brown v. Tibbits, 11 C. B. N. S. 855; 103 E. C. L. 855.

In Action on Bonds.—So set-off is not allowable in an action on a bond conditioned for replacing stock, Gillingham v. Waskett, McCl. 198; or conditioned, not against the payment of a liquidated demand, but, to indemnify generally, Attwool v. Attwool, 2 E. & B. 23; 75 E. C. L. 23; as for the performance of covenants, Bull. N. P. 179; 2 Burr. 1024.

Thus, in an action upon the bond of executors, against the principals and sureties, alleging breaches in various acts of misconduct by the principals, the damages to be recovered are not necessarily liquidated, and the action is not, therefore, one in which a set-off is allowed. State v. Modrell, 15 Mo. 421.

In a suit upon an appeal bond for unliquidated damages a set-off was held not admissible. May v. Kellar, 1 Mo. App. 381.

In an action on a bond where the failure of the defendant to support the plaintiff, his mother and sister, was alleged as a breach, it was doubted by the court whether the defendant could set off demands against the plaintiff. Hepburn v. Hoag, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 57.

But where a bond is conditioned for the payment of an annuity, Collins v. Collins, 2 Burr. 820, or of liquidated damages, Fletcher v. Dyche, 2 T. R. 32, a set-off may be allowed. In an action of debt, brought on the penalty of a bond conditioned for the performance of the award of arbitrators, to recover the sum awarded, it was held that the defendant might set off a debt due to him from the plaintiff. Burgess v. Tucker, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 105.

In an action on a bond for the faithful and honest discharge of the obligor's duty as agent, where the specific allegation of the breach was that the defendant did not compensate the plaintiff for the loss sustained by the defendant's making way with $395 received by him for the plaintiff, it was held that, as the precise sum thus made away with by the defendant would compensate the plaintiff for its loss, and it would necessarily recover neither more nor less than this sum, so that the breach thus alleged was obviously the same in substance as though the breach had been a non-payment of this sum, a set-off was admissible. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Jameson, 13 W. Va. 833; 31 Am. Rep. 775.

In Actions on Insurance Policies.—So set-off cannot be pleaded in an action to recover a partial loss on a valued policy of insurance. Castelli v. Boddington, 1 E. & B. 66; 72 E. C. L. 65; Boddington v. Castelli, 1 E. & B. 879; 72 E. C. L. 879.

Even though the loss has been adjusted, a set-off cannot be pleaded in such action. Luckie v. Bushby, 13 C. B. 864; 76 E. C. L. 862; 24 Eng. L. & Eq. 256. This is on the ground that the adjustment does not make the debt so ascertained and certain as to place it upon the footing of a claim for liquidated damages. While the adjustment may be strong evidence to determine the amount of the plaintiff's claim upon the policy, it is still only a mode of enabling the jury more easily to arrive at the proper estimate. In a suit upon a marine policy to recover from the insurers their contributory share payable to the assured, on the adjustment of a general average, after a partial loss, it was held that the insurers could not set off promissory notes due from them to the insured, although they had assented to the amount to be paid by them on the policy, provided such set-off would be permitted. Diehl v. General Mut. Ins. Co., 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 257.

In an action on an open policy of insurance a set-off cannot be made even though the plaintiff claims for a total loss. Gordon v. Bowne, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 156.

But, in an action on a policy in which there is an express stipulation that the premium due shall be deducted out of any loss claimed, the premium due will be deducted from the amount of a partial loss ascertained by assessors. Livermore v. Newburyport M. Ins. Co., 2 Mass. 232. See supra, this title, note 1, p. 216.

Statutes Allowing Set-off in All Actions Founded on Contract.—The statutes in some States have been construed to authorize a set-off in any action ex contractu, although it be for the recovery of unliquidated damages.

Such is the construction in Kansas where the statute (Kansas Civ. Code, § 94) says: "A set-off can only be pleaded in an action founded on contract, and must be a cause of action arising upon contract, or ascertained by the decision of the court." Stevens v. Able, 15 Kan. 584; Read v. Jeffries, 16 Kan. 534.

And the same construction was given to the statute of Nebraska (Nebraska Code Civ. Pro., § 100), which is an exact counterpart of that of Kansas. Raymond v. Green, 12 Neb. 215; 41 Am. Rep. 763.

Under the Texas statute, a claim unliquidated in its nature, growing out of a breach of contract, is subject to set*rem.*¹ From the nature of a tax, a debt due a municipal corporation or county for taxes cannot be offset by a debt due the corporation or county.²

off by an unliquidated claim growing out of the breach of a different contract. Sanders v. Bridges, 67 Tex. 93; Bodman v. Harris, 20 Tex. 31.

Under the Ohio Rev. Stat., § 5075, providing that "a set-off can only be pleaded in an action founded on contract, and must be a cause of action arising upon contract or ascertained by the decision of a court," it was held, in an action on account for the sale of two organs, that a breach of warranty in the sale of two other organs was properly pleaded. Needham v. Pratt, 40 Ohio St. 186.

Under the Kansas statute, where the plaintiff stated such facts as were necessary to sustain an action to recover chattels on the implied contract, and none showing a purpose to rely on the tort, except in using the words, "did convert the same to her own use and benefit," it was held that the defendant might treat the action as ex contractu, and plead a set-off. Smith v. McCarthy, 39 Kan. 308.

In a suit by a corporation against its former treasurer for money appropriated to his own use, it was held that this was, within the meaning of the statute, a cause of action founded on contract, against which a set-off was available. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Chenault, 36 Kan. 51.

Statutes Allowing Set-Off in Action on Contract or Agreement, Express or Implied.—In Illinois, under a statute providing that a defendant "in any action brought upon any contract or agreement, either express or implied, having claims or demands against the plaintiff may set up the same and have them allowed him upon the trial," it was held that a judgment is not a contract within the meaning of the statute, and that a set-off could not be pleaded in an action of debt upon a judgment recovered in a sister State. Rae v. Hulbert, 17 Ill. 572. In the decision of this case the court, by Caton, J., said: "It (the judgment) is the conclusion of the law upon the rights of the parties, and it is not very common that it is entered up by the agreement of the unsuccessful party, but the reverse is generally the case. In this statute the words 'action,' 'contract' and 'agreement' are used in their ordinary sense, and not with the intention of embracing every imaginable litigation upon every cause of action. A judgment is no more a contract than is a tort. In one sense it is true that every member of society impliedly agrees to pay all judgments which may be regularly rendered against him; and, in the same sense, does he impliedly agree to make amends for all torts which he may commit. No one will pretend that actions for torts are within the spirit and intent of the statute, and yet they are certainly as much so as are actions upon judgments."

Under a statute requiring that the claims against which a set-off is allowable must be founded on "contract express or implied," it was held that a plea in set-off is allowable against a claim for usury, a claim for usury being founded upon an implied contract within the meaning of that term as used in this statute. Blair v. Ellsworth, 55 Vt. 415.

1. See 2 Whart. Contr., § 1030; Johnson v. Lytle's Iron Agency, 5 Ch. Div. 687; 22 Moak's Rep. 399.

A set-off cannot be made in an action of ejectment. Nutwell v. Tongue, 22 Md. 419.

A bill in equity to enforce a vendor's lien has been considered a proceeding in personam, in which all legal set-offs are allowable. Hooper v. Armstrong, 69 Ala. 343.

In Suits to Foreclose Mortgage.—In New Jersey it is considered that a suit to foreclose a mortgage is a proceeding in rem, and that a set-off is not admissible therein. Dolman v. Cook, 14 N. J. Eq. 56; Bird v. Davis, 14 N. J. Eq. 467; Parker v. Hartt, 32 N. J. Eq. 225.

But, under the statutes of New York, a set-off may be allowed in a foreclosure suit. Holden v. Gilbert, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 208.

And see FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGES, vol. 8, p. 231, n. 1.

2. Apperson v. Memphis, 2 Flip. (U. S.) 363; Himmelmänn v. Spanagel, 39 Cal. 389; Finnegan v. Fernandina, 15 Fla. 379; 21 Am. Rep. 292; Scobey v. Decatur Co., 72 Ind. 551; Newport, etc., Bridge Co. v. Douglass, 12 Bush (Ky.) 673; New Orleans v. Davidson, 30 La. Ann. 541; 31 Am. Rep. 228; Cobb v. Elizabeth City, 75 N. Car. 1;

The right of set-off has been denied in penal actions for taking usurious interest.¹

But it is not needful that the action should be an action of debt; for a debt may be recovered by the action of assumpsit when the promise is not under seal, or in an action of covenant, when it is under seal, as well as by the action of debt; and the material question is not what the action is, but what is the nature of the plaintiff's demand.² The general rule has been laid down by some judges, and in some statutes, that a set-off is allowed only when the suit is based on a demand which could itself be used as a set-off.³

Gatling v. Carteret Co., 92 N. Car. 536; 53 Am. Rep. 432. See also McCracken v. Elder, 34 Pa. St. 239.

Such was the rule in the civil-law doctrine of compensation. Domat's Civ. L., § 2299.

So it was held that, in a suit on a special tax bill, the defendant can set off a debt due to him from the owner of the bill. Kansas v. Ridenour, 84 Mo. 253.

See also, as to set-off in tax proceedings, Hoffmire v. Rice, 22 Kan. 749; Nebraska City v. Nebraska Gas, etc., Co., 9 Neb. 339.

But it has been held that a set-off was admissible in a debt on bond for a penalty, although the bond had been given to secure the collection and payment of public taxes. Concord v. Pillsbury, 33 N. H. 310.

1. It has been held that, in a suit against a national bank under U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5198, to recover penalties for taking unlawful interest, there can be no set-off. Morehouse v. Second Nat. Bank, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 628; Lebanon Bank v. Karmany, 98 Pa. St. 65.

But, where the action was merely to recover usurious interest paid, a set-off was allowed. Blair v. Ellsworth, 55 Vt. 415.

A plea of set-off in an answer "for money paid to the plaintiff for the use and forbearance of payment of said sums," is defective in not charging that the money so paid was usurious interest. Wilson v. Fleming, 23 Ind. 119.

2. See 4 Min. Inst., pt. 1, p. 657; Downer v. Eggleston, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 51; Chambers v. Lewis, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 210; 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 591; 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 206; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Jameson, 13 W. Va. 833; 31 Am. Rep. 775; Birch v. Depeyster, 4 Campb. 385, by Gibbs, C. J.

So it was said in a decision allowing a set-off in an action of covenant, that if the action "be for money expressly ascertained, whether the action be debt, covenant, or otherwise, the defendant is unquestionably at liberty to plead a set-off." This was an action of covenant. The second matter assigned for breach in the plaintiff's declaration was the defendant's failure to pay plaintiff twenty-five dollars. As to the sum mentioned in this second breach the defendant pleaded in set-off an indebtedness due him from the plaintiff, and the plea was sustained. Roebuck v. Tennis, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 82.

3. See Montague v. Boston, etc., Iron Works, 97 Mass. 502; Smith v. Warner, 16 Mich. 390; State v. Modrell, 15 Mo. 421; Wilnot v. Hurd, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 584; Osborn v. Etheridge, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 339; Downer v. Eggleston, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 51; Hills v. Tallman, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 674; Diehl v. General Mut. Ins. Co., 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 257; Gordon v. Bowne, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 156; Burgess v. Tucker, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 105; Dale v. Cooke, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 11; Dowd v. Faucett, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 92.

In Maryland, under the peculiar provisions of the act of 1785, it has been held that a set-off is permissible even when the action is on an unliquidated claim. Thus, it has been held that a promissory note drawn by P in favor of D, may be set off in an action on an open policy of insurance brought by P against D. Baltimore Ins. Co. v. McFadon, 4 Har. & J. (Md.) 31. In this case the court by Johnson, J., said: "No reason can be urged why a person who has an uncertain claim should be permitted to recover from him who had a certain demand. If any difference ought to be made it should be in favor of that which is certain; for a great length of time might be necessary to ascertain the one, and perhaps it might totally

The joinder by the plaintiff of an unfounded claim for unliquidated damages in the same suit with other claims which are subject to set-off, will not deprive the defendant of his right to urge a set-off.¹

4. What May be the Subject of Set-off—a. UNDER THE COMMON STATUTES OF SET-OFF—(1) Debts.—With regard to the nature of the demands to be set off against each other the common provisions of the statutes specify only mutual debts; consequently, a claim, in order to be the subject of set-off, must, like the demand against which it may be opposed,² be in the nature of a debt,³ and not of unliquidated damages.⁴ And fail for want of proof, and therefore it might be unreasonable to compel the certain creditor to await the termination of the uncertain demand on him. But, if he thinks proper to retain his certain demand to meet that which is uncertain, why should he be prevented?" The court says that he ought not to be prevented unless the statute permitting set-off positively precludes the employment of set-off where the plaintiff's claim is unliquidated, and, by recurring to the terms of the act of 1785, concludes that this is not done by that statute. Dyer v. Dorsey, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 443; Annan v. Houck, 4 Gill (Md.) 330; 45 Am. Dec. 133; Warfield v. Booth, 33 Md. 63; Tyrrell v. Tyrrell, 54 Md. 169.

1. Smith v. Warner, 16 Mich. 390.

2. See supra, this title, In What Actions Available.

3. Taxes.—Under statutes defining the demands which may be set off as those "founded upon judgment or upon contract," taxes due a municipality may not be set off in an action against it. Pierce v. Boston, 3 Met. (Mass.) 520; Home Sav. Bank v. Boston, 131 Mass. 277.

And it was so held under a statute providing that a set-off "must be a cause of action arising upon contract, or ascertained by the decision of the court." Nebraska City v. Nebraska City Gas, etc., Co., 9 Neb. 339.

So, it has been held, under a statute permitting a "debt and demand" to be set off, that a claim of a town to taxes assessed could not be set off. Hibbard v. Clark, 56 N. H. 155; 22 Am. Rep. 442. But see, contra, Maine Rev. Stats., ch. 86, § 9.

Stock in Corporation.—In an action by a bank as the indorsee of a promissory note, the defendant cannot set off stock which he may have in the bank.

Whittington v. Farmers' Bank, 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 489; Harper v. Calhoun, 7 How. (Miss.) 203.

A debtor to a bank for borrowed money cannot, even in equity, set off against his note, on a judgment rendered thereon, the dividend that will be coming to him as a stockholder, unless there is an express agreement to set off the debts against each other pro tanto. Ruckersville Bank v. Hemphill, 7 Ga. 396.

Liens.—In an action to recover for the amount of a promissory note executed by the defendant, the latter cannot set off the amount of a lien for the unpaid balance of the purchase-money on a tract of real property purchased and held by the plaintiff with full knowledge of such lien, which is due and owing from an insolvent former owner of such real property, on his purchase thereof from defendant. It was considered that this was not a ground for the recovery of a personal judgment by the defendant against the plaintiff. All the cause of action which the defendant could show against plaintiff would be that he owned a lot, and knew at the time he purchased it that the defendant had a vendor's lien thereon. This would not constitute a cause of action for a personal judgment against him. While he would have his election to pay off the lien on his property, or suffer the lien to be enforced against it, the lien holder would have no election of remedies, but could only enforce the lien against the property. The court compared it to the case of one holding a mortgage on property, without any personal promise to pay the debt. Brake v. King, 54 Ind. 294.

But where the equities exist which will afford a court of equity opportunity to grant equitable relief independently of the statutes of set-off (see supra, this title, note, Equity Jurisdiction as to Set-offs, p. 217), it seems that a court of equity may permit unliquidated demands to be set off. See Davis v. Milburn, 3 Iowa 163. Contra, Duncan v. Magette, 25 Tex. 245; Howard v. Randolph, 73 Tex. 454.

In Texas, it is declared by statute that "if the suit be founded on a certain demand, the defendant shall not be permitted to set off unliquidated or uncertain damages founded on a tort or breach of covenant on the part of the plaintiff." Texas Rev. Stat., art. 649. Under this statute it was held that in an action on a promissory note for the purchase of land, and to foreclose the vendor's lien, the maker cannot plead in reconvention unliquidated damages, resulting to him from the action of the plaintiff in selling another tract of land for defendant, in violation of a trust, for less than its value. Riddle v. McKinney, 67 Tex. 29.

Demand.—Many of the statutes in defining the matters which may be set off, make use of the term "demands" as well as "debts." In Hanna v.

Pleasants, 2 Dana (Ky.) 269, the court by Nicholas, J., says, in regard to the meaning of the word demand, that it "may have been used in the statute in addition to the word debt, for the purpose of silencing a doubt, whether under the English statute set-off could have been pleaded in the actions of assumpsit and covenant. Be that as it may, the statute means moneyed demand in its strict legal sense, which renders it of about the same signification as the term debt, and excludes the idea of allowing a set-off in actions for torts, and upon contracts for the payment of property and choses in action." The insertion of the word "demands" in the statute does not change the law so as to allow uncertain damages to be set off. Gould v. Kelley, 16 N. H. 560; Drew v. Towle, 27 N. H. 412; 59 Am. Dec. 380; Hepburn v. Hoag, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 613.

Claim.—In Iowa, under section 1740 of the Code of 1851, providing that the defendant may "set up, by way of set-off or cross-action, any claim which would have been the subject of an action against the plaintiff," etc., it was held that claims for damages arising from a tort, as well as those for money due on a contract, may be pleaded as set-off. Campbell v. Fox, 11 Iowa 318.

Demands Not Sounding in Damages Merely.—In Alabama not only debts, but liquidated and unliquidated demands not sounding in damages merely, are the subject of set-off. And an unliquidated demand not sounding in damages merely which is made the subject of set-off, is defined as one which, when the facts upon which it is based are established, the law is capable of measuring accurately by a pecuniary standard. Eads v. Murphy, 52 Ala. 520; Sledge v. Swift, 53 Ala. 110; Collins v. Greene, 67 Ala. 211. Therefore, under this statute, if a vendee, with covenants of warranty, buys in an outstanding vendor's lien, at a price less than the amount of the purchase money and interest, this demand, if reasonable, would be a good set-off in an action on the note given for the purchase money. Holley v. Young, 27 Ala. 203. It was held that a claim in favor of a mortgagor against the mortgagee for conversion of personalty, may be relied upon to reduce the mortgage debt, in a suit to redeem land sold under a power of sale in the mortgage. Conner v. Smith, 88 Ala. 300. In the decision of this case, as to the question whether the claim based upon the conversion of the personalty necessarily sounded in damages merely, the court by McClellan, J., said: "It is quite an error to suppose that these demands necessarily sound in damages merely, within the language of our statute of set-off. It is true that an action of trespass de bonis asportatis would lie for their recovery, and it is also true such action sounds in damages merely. But it is equally true that trover would lie, and in that action the law furnishes a standard by which damages may be admeasured, and the recovery regulated and limited. Curry v. Wilson, 48 Ala. 638." If, however, the law does not fix the measure of damages, but they are committed to the judgment of the jury, and depend upon the circumstances of the particular case, the demand sounds in damages merely and is not available as a set-off. So, it was held that where the defendant's cause of action is recoverable only in an action de bonis asportatis, the demand was one sounding in damages merely, and was excluded from the statute of set-off, on the ground that, vindictive damages being recoverable, the law did not furnish a pecuniary standard of measurement. Walker v. McCoy, 34 Ala. 659; Rosser v. Bunn, 66 Ala. 89.

In an action on a note, it was held that the defendant cannot set off damages for injury to one's farming operations, arising from a trespass committed by the plaintiff in wrongfully seizing and carrying off defendant's stock. Nelmes v. Hill, 85 Ala. 583. A cause of action which would give both special and vindictive damages can be no ground of set-off, as both cannot be ascertained, and the party cannot split up his claim. Walker v. McCoy, 34 Ala. 659.

But it has been held that, in an action for rent, the defendant may set off damages done to his crop by plaintiff's mules. It was said that damage done to a growing crop matured and ungathered, has a legal standard of measurement, and may be pleaded as a set-off. Johnson v. Aldridge (Ala. 1891), 9 So. Rep. 513. In Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Clanton, 59 Ala. 392; 31 Am. Rep. 15, an action by a railway conductor against his employer for wages, it was held that the employer might set off damages resulting to him from the conductor's negligence in performing the work. The court by Manning, J., said: "... if the loss resulting from such negligence consists only of the damage done to cars or other property, the amount of which depends upon the expense of making them good by repairs, or of putting the defendant, in these particulars, in as good condition as it was in before, such damages may be considered as 'fixed by a legal standard.' The computation is founded on the ascertainable value of material things, as it would be in an action of assumpsit concerning the same values."

So damages for breach of covenant of warranty may be set off in an action for purchase money. Kingsbury v. Milner, 69 Ala. 502. It was held that damages on account of the lessor's misrepresentations as to the capacity or the condition of a mill on the leased premises, may be set off in an action of covenant by lessor for rent reserved. Cage v. Phillips, 38 Ala. 382. Likewise damages which a mortgagor has sustained by reason of the mortgagee's violation of instructions to postpone the sale of his cotton, are a proper subject of set-off. Gafford v. Proskauer, 59 Ala. 264.

A demand for the value of corn delivered may be pleaded as an offset, though the price of the corn had not been agreed on. Smith v. Huie, 14 Ala. 201. An attorney's fee for services rendered, is a good set-off, though the amount of the fee had not been liquidated, between the attorney and his client. Briggs v. Moore, 14 Ala. 433.

Goods Delivered, Moneys Paid, or Services Done.—Under the Massachusetts act of 1793, ch. 75, authorizing the defendant to give in evidence upon the general issue his demands for "goods delivered, moneys paid, or services done," it was held that an account for board, washing, mending, and finding a room was a proper matter of set-off. Witter v. Witter, 10 Mass. 223. And, under the same statute, it was even considered that money received by the plaintiff to defendants' use might be called money paid, and was accordingly allowed to be set off. Richards v. Blood, 17 Mass. 66; Truesdell v. Wallis, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 63.

Statutes Allowing Set-off in the Nature of Recoupment.—But unliquidated damages growing out of the contract sued on may sometimes be recouped. See infra, this title, Recoupment. And the statutes of set-off in some States have provisions to this effect. See Kaskaskia Bridge Co. v. Shannon, 6 this is as far as the privilege of set-off can be allowed consistently with expediency and justice; for, were it more generally allowed, as the proceeding is of a summary nature, the parties must be deprived of the ordinary modes of trial of controverted claims and of the established methods of review and redress for error;¹ besides, where the plaintiff's claim is for a certain amount, no rule ought to be favored which would permit the defendant to urge an independent unliquidated claim as a set-off thereto, and thereby delay the plaintiff's recovery for the length of time necessary to ascertain the amount due the defendant, when it is considered that a great length of time might be necessary to ascertain the amount, and that even then the claim might fail for want of proof.²

It follows that a claim which could only be recovered in an action ex delicto, as in trespass, replevin, or case, cannot in general be set off.³ While no demand can be set off for which indeb-

The rule disallowing a claim of damages for a tort to be set off was applied in an action to recover for the boarding of stage horses which the defendant averred had been detained away from him by the plaintiff, contrary to an agreement to permit the defendant to have a certain use of them. Hudson v. Nute, 45 Vt. 66.

The Florida statute making "all demands mutually existing . . . whether liquidated or not, proper subjects of set-off," was construed to mean matters growing out of contract, express or implied, and it was held that damages growing out of a conspiracy could not be set off thereunder. While the statutes of Pennsylvania permit claims for unliquidated damages founded on contract to be set off (see infra, this title, note, Statutes Authorizing Claims Arising Out of Contract to be Set Off, p. 251), it was held that B could not set off a claim for gas conducted away from the land and consumed by A without right, such claim sounding in tort, not in contract. Kitchen v. Smith, 101 Pa. St. 452.

A claim for services for so much as they were reasonably worth cannot be set off. Bell v. Ward, 10 R. I. 503. So, in an action on a note, it was held that unliquidated claims for defendant's services as attorney could not be set off. Berens v. Ker, 28 La. Ann. 96.

A charge for rent by way of set-off, there being no contract as to the price, cannot be sustained. Hall v. Glidden, 39 Me. 445; Carter v. Joseph, 48 Mich. 615.

So in debt upon a bond given for the consideration money of a tract of land and mill sold by the plaintiff to the defendant, with a reservation of the right to raise and swell the water so as not to injure the mill, the defendant cannot set off unascertained damages occasioned by the plaintiff's having raised the water so as to injure the mill. Kahlin v. Mulhallon, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 237.

So in an action by assignees of a bankrupt for money due the bankrupt as supercargo of a ship, the defendant cannot set off a claim against the bankrupt for not keeping the vessel fully insured according to orders, as the damages are uncertain. Brown v. Cuming, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 33. See M'Cumber v. Goodrich, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 56.

Where the defendant had sold a horse to the plaintiff, and afterwards taken it back under a promise from the plaintiff that he would pay for the use of the horse, and any damage it might have sustained while in his possession, or leave it to a third person to determine, it was held that a claim for such use and damage, the same not having been determined by the third person named, was not the subject of set-off in an action between the parties for another cause. Stevens v. Blen, 39 Me. 420.

Where A gave B an order on C, payable at sight, with the understanding that the amount when received was to be placed to A's credit, and B took the drawee's acceptance payable at sixty days, but before the expiration of that time the acceptor died insolvent, it was held that A's claim against B for a failure to collect the draft was wholly uncertain and could not be set off in a suit brought by B to recover his original demand, since it is manifest that such claim might be either merely nominal or it might amount to the sum mentioned in the draft. For if the drawee was insolvent at the date of the bill, or when it came into B's hands, or if any other cause rendered it prudent for him to take an acceptance at sixty days, the jury would give no damages, and other circumstances might vary the amount. Harrison v. Wortham, 8 Leigh (Va.) 296.

In a suit by A against B upon a note, it appeared that B had delivered to A for collection, a note against C, and taken a receipt from A to the effect that when such note was collected he would indorse it on the note from B. But the note was never collected, and all remedy thereon was barred by statute when the suit was commenced. There was no evidence of the responsibilities of C, or whether the note was collectible. Defendant claimed that he had a right to have the amount of the note set off against the note sued on. It was held that, even if the receipt which A had given to B could be regarded as an express promise to collect, it did not follow as a matter of course that he was charged with the whole amount of the note for a failure to collect it. The damages in such a case must depend upon the value of the note and the probability of collection, so that if the maker was irresponsible, the damages could only have been nominal. The damages were, therefore, unliquidated and not the subject of set-off. Mitchell v. Shuert, 16 Mich. 444.

It has been held that debtors to a banking company cannot set-off the bills and notes of such company in an action by the company against them. Hallowell, etc., Bank v. Howard, 13 Mass. 235. Contra, Niagara Bank v. Roosevelt, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 409; Bruyn v. Middle Dist. Bank, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 413, note.

Where a promissory note was given in payment for seventeen articles of machinery with no separate valuation, and five of the articles being at the time under a valid attachment against the vendor, were afterwards sold upon execution in the attachment suit, it was held that, since the value of these articles was wholly uncertain, the plaintiff should have judgment for the whole note. Riddle v. Gage, 37 N. H. 519; 75 Am. Dec. 151.

In an action on a promissory note, the defendant cannot, under the plea of set-off, give in evidence a writing by which the plaintiff promised to pay to him "fifty barrels of corn," if the value of the corn was neither stated in the contract nor any criterion provided by either of the parties or the law for its ascertainment. Handley v. Dobson, 7 Ala. 359.

In an action for money due for cloth furnished, it was held that the defendant could not show, by way of set-off, that a former bale, which the defendant had bought of the plaintiff, was damaged by being burnt in the pressing, but that he would be compelled to bring a separate action for the damages. Freeman v. Hegett, 1 W. Bl. 394.

So in an action for rent, the defendant will not be permitted to plea by way of set-off, a breach of agreement to repair on the part of the plaintiff. Weigal v. Waters, 6 T. R. 488; Sickles v. Fort, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 559. Nor can the defendant in such action set off damages which he has sustained by breach of the covenant of the plaintiff, contained in a lease reserving the rent, to the effect that the sub-cellar of the demised premises should, at all times during the term, be free from the percolation of water through the walls or floor thereof. Benkard v. Babcock, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 175.

Nor, to an action of freight, could there be set off damages accruing to the defendant from the plaintiff's delay in getting the ship ready, except so far as such damages are assessed by the charter party; Seeger v. Duthie, 8 C. B. N. S. 45; 98 E. C. L. 45; or a claim for damages to the goods carried; Meyer v. Dresser, 16 C. B. N. S. 646; 111 E. C. L. 644; Dowland v. Thompson, 2 W. Bl. 919; or for the loss of the goods, Clyde v. Knight, 12 R. I. 194. So the plea of the defendant that by reason of the plaintiff's negligence and unskillfulness, the coal which had been intrusted to the plaintiff was lost, and that the price of the coal was equal to the plaintiff's demand, was held bad as a set-off. Stimson v. Hall, 40 Eng. L. & Eq. 442. But by recent American and English statutes, this has been changed, and damages sustained by goods in transportation may be pleaded as a set-off. See FREIGHT, vol. 8, p. 977, n. 8.

Loss Under Policy of Insurance.—Unliquidated losses on a policy of insurance cannot be made the subject of set-off. Thompson v. Redman, 11 M. & W. 487; Grant v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co., 5 M. & S. 439; St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Homer, 9 Met. (Mass.) 39. So a demand on an insurance policy for a partial loss may not be set off. Union Ins. Co. v. Howes, 124 Mass. 470; Diehl v. General Mut. Ins. Co., 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 257. And a loss under an open policy of insurance cannot be set off, although it be a total loss. Gordon v. Bowne, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 150. But it is otherwise as to a total loss on a valued policy. Columbia Ins. Co. v. Black, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 149.

Liability Under Guaranty.—It is held that a mere liability under a guaranty cannot form the subject of set-off because the sum due from the guarantor upon default of the principal debtor is not certain or liquidated, but is a question of the amount of damages. Thus, in an action of assumpsit, the defendant relied on a set-off founded on a guaranty given to him by the plaintiff for goods to be sold by the defendant to A, who, after having obtained the goods, became bankrupt. It was held that there was no foundation for the set-off, there not having been an absolute debt by the plaintiff to the defendant, but an engagement for the deficiency of A only, and it being impossible to say to what extent plaintiff was liable until it was ascertained how much was paid by A's estate. Crawford v. Sterling, 4 Esp. 207. A stronger case was where the plaintiff had guaranteed the payment of 1,600*l.*, which the defendant advanced to J. C. at the plaintiff's request, and also of any further sums which might then or thereafter be owing from J. C. to defendant, and the defendant afterwards advanced J. C. 3,000*l.*, which sum, as well as the 1,600*l.*, remained due at the time the plaintiff sued defendant for a debt; it was held that the defendant could not use these sums as a set-off. The liability of the plaintiff was considered not to be for an ascertained sum, nor for a sum which was capable of being ascertained without a jury. A guaranty is a contract peculiarly sounding in damages. There was no original debt between the plaintiff and the defendants, but merely a collateral engagement to see the debt of J. C. paid; that undertaking could only be the subject of a suit for unliquidated damages. Morely v. Inglis, 4 Bing. N. Cas. 58; 33 E. C. L. 279.

But there may be a set-off if the damages are certain. Collins v. Wallis, 11 Moore, 248.

Statutes Authorising Claims Arising Out of Contract to be Set Off.—By the Kansas statute, a set-off must be a cause of action arising upon contract, or ascertained by the decision of the court, and any cause of action arising from contract, whether it be for a liquidated demand or for unliquidated damages, may constitute a set-off, and may be pleaded as such in any action founded on contract. Kansas Civ. Code, §§ 94-98. Under this statute, a claim for damages sustained by plaintiff for breach of contract to deliver goods was 'held a good set-off. Stevens v. Able, 15 Kan. 584. And a cause of action founded upon an implied contract may be set off. Fenson v. Linsley, 20 Kan. 235. Compare Kansas Gen. Stat. 1889, §§ 4178-4189.

Under the Pennsylvania Defalcation act of 1705 (1 Sm. Laws 40), the defendant may set off unliquidated damages arising out of contract distinct and independent from the plaintiff's cause of action. Ellmaker v. Franklin F. Ins. Co., 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 439; Phillips v. Lawrence, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 150; Speers v. Sterrett, 29 Pa. St. 192; Hunt v. Gilmore, 59 Pa. St. 450; Halfpenny v. Bell, 82 Pa. St. 128. See Shoup v. Shoup, 15 Pa. St. 361.

And the South Carolina Discount act of 1759 has been construed to authorize the setting off of uncertain damages for the breach of an independent contract. Haynes v. Prothro, 10 Rich. (S. Car.) 318.

By some of the statutes the right of set-off is extended to causes of action arising out of contract, express or implied.

In Vermont, where the statute allows the defendant to plead in offset whenever the plaintiff is indebted to him on contract, expressed or implied, it was held that unliquidated damages may be set off. Hubbard v. Fisher, 25 Vt. 539; Keyes v. Western Vt. Slate Co., 34 Vt. 81. In an action of assumpsit it was held that the defendant might, under the contract of hire, recover compensation for the use of a carriage, and also for damages resulting thereto by plaintiff's negligence; such claim being "founded upon contract, express or implied" within the meaning of the statute. Thompson v. Congdon, 43 Vt. 396.

In an action of assumpsit to recover the difference agreed to be paid on the exchange of lands, the defendant sought to set off the value of the rails which he had, before the exchange, placed along the line for the purpose of constructing a fence, and which the plaintiff, after the exchange, had taken and converted to his own use. The parties admitted that the only matter in dispute was the admissibility of this matter as set-off. They also admitted that the rails were worth $50. Although the demand for the rails was, therefore, a liquidated one, yet the court held that it was not a subject of set-off under the statute, and it was not a demand arising upon a judgment or contract, expressed or implied, in the sense in which the term was used in the statute; that the term referred to demands resulting from the voluntary engagement of an individual to another, either express or implied in law, as distinguished from the liability originating in tort or wrong unconnected with an agreement. Conklin v. Parsons, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 240. But it should be observed that Whitton, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in this case, said that "Where rails are promiscuously placed along the line of a contemplated fence and before its erection the land is conveyed, the better opinion is that they pass by the conveyance as a part of the realty."

So in an action brought to recover for services rendered by the plaintiff in the defendant's store, it was held that the defendant might not prove by way of set-off that during the time that plaintiff was clerk in his store he had embezzled and appropriated to his own use and deposited in bank to his own credit, several sums of money amounting to several hundred dollars under such circumstances as would make him guilty of larceny. It was insisted on the part of the defendant that, inasmuch as his claim against the plaintiff was for a liquidated sum, and an action for money had and received could have been maintained to recover the stolen money, it was a proper subject of set-off. But the court by Cole, J., said: "The statute applies to demands arising upon contract in contradistinction to those arising in tort, although it is a very familiar principle of law that when goods have been tortiously taken and sold, the owner may waive the tort and bring an action of assumpsit for money had and received against the wrongdoer and recover the proceeds. It follows from this view of the statute that a demand to be the proper subject of offset must not only be liquidated or capable of being ascertained by calculation, but must be one arising upon contract in contradistinction to one resulting from a tort." Pierce v. Hoffman, 4 Wis. 277.

But subdivision 3 of the Revised Statutes of 1849, ch. 94, § 1, which provided that the set-off "must be for a demand for real estate sold, or for personal property sold, or for money paid, or for services done, or if it be not such a demand, the amount must be liquidated or be capable of being ascertained by calculation," was omitted in the provision of 1858, and it was thereafter held that the defendant might waive tort, and sue in assumpsit upon implied contract, or set off such demand in an action against him on contract. Thus, if A commits a trespass against B, by laying down B's fences and letting in cattle upon B's land, B may waive the tort, and sue for the value of the pasturage of A's cattle, upon an implied contract, and he may set off such a demand in an action against him by A, as in other cases of demand on contract. Worden v. Jones, 33 Wis. 600; 14 Am. Rep. 782. This decision was under a statute which reads as follows: "In the following cases, and under the following circumstances, a defendant may set off demands which he had against the plaintiff: 1. It must be a demand arising upon judgment or upon contract, express or implied, whether such contract be written or unwritten, sealed or without a seal; and if it be founded upon a bond or other contract having a penalty, the sum equitably due by virtue of its condition only, shall be set off." Wisconsin Rev. Stat. 1858, ch. 126, § 1; 2 Tay. Stats. 1448.

In the decision of a case arising under the Kansas statute permitting the set-off of a demand arising out of any kind of contract, in which the defendant was permitted to waive the tort on which his claim was really founded, and treat his cause of action as one arising upon an implied contract, the general rule was laid down that wherever one party commits a wrong or tort against the estate of another with the intention of benefiting his own estate, the law will, at the election of the party injured, imply or presume a contract on the part of the wrongdoer to pay to the party injured the full value of all benefits resulting to such wrongdoer. Fenson v. Linsley, 20 Kan. 235. It was held that if an agent who has embezzled his principal's money, sues his principal on a note, the principal, under his right to waive the tort, may set off the amount embezzled. Challiss v. Wylie, 35 Kan. 506.

It was held that a demand made by the United States for the proceeds of Indian trust bonds converted by persons who had illegally procured and sold them, was a demand arising upon an implied contract, or one which might be so treated by waiver of the alleged fraud in the conversion of the bonds, and was, therefore, a proper subject of set-off. Allen v. U. S., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 207.

It was held that a claim, under a Michigan statute, making the owner of logs or lumber becoming jammed in navigable streams liable to any person who shall cause such jam to be broken, for the costs and expenses incurred in so doing, is not a demand arising "upon contract express or implied," within the meaning of the statute of set-off. Woods v. Ayres, 30 Mich. 345; 33 Am. Rep. 396.

In an action by one town against another, for supplies furnished to a pauper, it was held that the defendant town could not, under a statute allowing only such demands to be set off as are founded on judgment, or an express or implied contract, set off a claim for the support of a pauper of the plaintiff; such a demand for the support of or relief of paupers was considered not to be founded on contract, but the liability was said to originate solely in positive provisions of statute, and has in it none of the elements of a contract, express or implied; and the demand of the defendants did not, according to the testimony, rest upon any special contract. Augusta v. Chelsea, 47 Me. 367.

Under the Indiana Revised Statutes of 1888, § 348, which provides that a set-off must consist of "matter arising out of debt, duty, or contract," it was held that a defendant's claim arising out of a series of torts cannot be set off, although the defendant expressly waives the tort, the waiver of the tort by the defendant not being considered as making his claim "matter arising out of debt, duty, or contract." Richey v. Bly, 115 Ind. 232.

Where the defendant sold a horse to the plaintiff, but after having possession of the horse some time, the plaintiff induced the defendant to take him back, on saying that he would do what was right about it, or would leave it to a third person, it was held that the defendant could not use a claim for use of and damages to the horse by the plaintiff, while he held a title to it, in set-off. The statute provided that no demand shall be set off unless it is founded upon a judgment or contract, but the contract may be either express or implied. There was no proof of an express contract on the part of the plaintiff to pay the defendant for the use of the horse, nor for requirement is that the claim must be for a certain amount. So a claim the amount of which can only be settled in an accounting cannot be set-off.¹

It has been said that "damages resulting from the breach of contract are unliquidated when there is no criterion provided by the parties, or by law, for their ascertainment."² But there is nothing illegal or unreasonable in the parties, by their mutual agree-damages done to him, and it was said that the law would not, under the circumstances, raise any such promise by implication. While the title and possession of the horse were in the plaintiff, he alone had a right to his services, and if he misused him, it gave the defendant no right to recover damages therefor. Stevens v. Blen, 39 Me. 420.

Where the defendant, in answer to the plaintiff's claim to recover balance due on a book account, pleaded in set-off "damages to her crop by the stock of the plaintiff, in the sum of fourteen dollars," it was held that this did not state a proper matter of set-off. Christy v. Jones, 39 Kan. 183.

Where A sued out an attachment against B, giving a bond which was conditioned to pay costs and damages sustained by B in case A should fail to successfully prosecute the attachment, and the attachment was afterwards dissolved by order of the court, it was held, in an action of assumpsit subsequently brought by A for the same debt, that B might set off damages sustained by reason of the attachment; that the damages arose ex contractu, not ex delicto, and could be liquidated within the meaning of the Pennsylvania Defalcation Act. Plunkett v. Sauer, 101 Pa. St. 356.

1. Ratliff v. Davis, 38 Miss. 107; Duncan v. Lyon, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 351; 8 Am. Dec. 513; Sherman v. Bal-lou, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 304; Sennett v. Johnson, 9 Pa. St. 335; Russell v. Mil-ler, 54 Pa. St. 154. A claim which must be established, if it can be estab-lished at all, by an accounting, may not be set off within a New York Rev. Stats. 354, § 32. Cummings v. Morris, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 560.

In Russell v. Miller, 54 Pa. St. 154, the court by Agnew, J., said: "A debt or the damages which can be set off as an independent counterclaim, must be such as a jury can find and liquidate in the ordinary way just as if the defendant were a plaintiff suing in debt, assumpsit, or covenant. But where the right of the defendant is only to call the plaintiff to an ac-count, and his demand is such as must be settled in an action of account ren-der, or by a bill in equity for an ac-count, it is not a proper set-off. A jury cannot pass on a question of this nature without great inconvenience. A set-off to a set-off will not be permitted, and it would be much worse to try before a jury at bar an unadjusted question of account and of profits arising out of a long and complicated business to be found only in numerous books of ac-count."

Though also open to the objection that the principle that one partner can-not sue the other upon matters involv-ing the partnership accounts would preclude an action upon the demand (see infra, this title, note 1, p. 273), it has been said that a claim arising out of the unsettled dealings of either partner with the firm, cannot, because of its un-liquidated nature, be set off in an action at law by one partner against the other. Ordiorne v. Woodman, 39 N. H. 541. Where the members of a voluntary trading association had voted to close its business and divide the property, and this was accordingly done, but the affairs of the company were not settled, it was held that a claim of one of the members of the company for his part of the property could not be set off in an action upon a note given to the treas-urer of the company. Farge v. Saun-ders, 4 Allen (Mass.) 378. See Ives v. Miller, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 196; Cummings v. Morris, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 560. But in Indiana it was held, under a statute allowing unliquidated demands to be set off, that an unliquidated demand growing out of unsettled copartnership accounts may, the partnership having been dissolved, be pleaded as a set-off in a suit between the members of the late firm; Irish v. Snelson, 16 Ind. 365; but the plea must show a balance due the defendant growing out of the entire transaction. Hendry v. Hendry, 32 Ind. 349.

ment, settling the amount of damages uncertain in their nature at any sum upon which they may agree.¹ And, where the damages are assessed and liquidated by the contract they may be the subject of set-off.² But it is otherwise where the agreement is so construed that the stipulated sum will be deemed a penalty.³

If the demand is for a certain sum, and also conforms to the requirements subsequently stated,⁴ it may be set-off.⁵ The claim

So, where, by the contract of employment, a particular sum is to be paid in lieu of notice on the dismissal of a servant, such sum may constitute a set-off. East Anglian R. Co. v. Lythgoe, 10 C. B. 726; 20 L. J. C. P. 84; 70 E. C. L. 724.

Where it was stipulated by articles of agreement for altering and repairing a warehouse for a fixed price, that, in the event of the work not being completed in three months, the builder should forfeit and pay to his employer the sum of £5 weekly, and every week, such penalty to be deducted from the amount which might remain due on the completion of the work, it was held, in an action brought for extra work, that the employer was entitled, after having paid the contract price, to set off the penalty against the amount claimed for extra work. Duckworth v. Alison, 1 M. & W. 412.

In assumpsit for work and labor, specified penal sums for the plaintiff's refusal or non-performance of work, being in the nature of liquidated damages, may be set off against his claim. Marshal v. Hann, 17 N. J. L. 425. See LIQUIDATED DAMAGES, vol. 13, p. 847.

3. 2 Chitt. Contr. 1274; Nedriffe v. Hogan, 2 Burr. 1024; Bull. N. P. 180; Freeman v. Hegett, 1 Bl. 394; Dowland v. Thomson, 2 Bl. 910; Howlett v. Strickland, Cowp. 56; Gillett v. Mawman, 1 Taunt. 137; Tayloe v. Sandiford, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 13.

So, although the amount due on the condition of a bond may generally be pleaded in set-off, the penalty may not, for this may be reduced both at law and in equity. Burgess v. Tucker, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 105; Nedriffe v. Hogan, 2 Burr. 1024.

But, although a bond is merely a security for unliquidated damages, yet where the course prescribed by law is to render judgment for the entire penalty, and the hearing is to be afterwards had in chancery, and, if the condition is single, execution awarded only for the amount found actually due, or, if there are several conditions, a like hearing is had to ascertain the amount due at the time of the rendition of the original judgment on each subsequent breach, as it may occur, it was held that a set-off is admissible in an action of debt on the bond for the recovery of the penalty. Concord v. Pillsbury, 33 N. H. 310.

A claim against the plaintiff's intestate for the value of a note by him converted to his own use, was held not to be for unliquidated damages, and was a proper subject of set-off. Gunn v. Todd, 21 Mo. 303.

A covenant to give thirty dollars as rent, to be paid in splitting rails, repairing fences, etc., was treated as a legitimate subject of discount. It was considered that, until the performance of the work, the thirty dollars would stand, either as the specific rent or for liquidated damages for the non-performance. Whisenant v. Towers, 2 Rich. (S. Car.) 110. But a claim for rent and horse pasture cannot be set off when the amount has neither been agreed upon nor means furnished for definitely ascertaining what it should be. Carter v. Joseph, 48 Mich. 615.

One partner in a firm sold his interest in a stock of goods belonging to the firm to his co-partners, receiving their promissory note therefor, and subsequently, to prevent a seizure and sale of the goods for delinquent taxes, which were a lien on the entire stock when the interest was so purchased, said co-partners paid off the amount of the taxes. It was held that the partners who had thus purchased the interest could set off, against a like portion of the sum due on the note, the amount of taxes so paid by them which constituted a lien on the interest so purchased. Evans v. Bradford, 35 Ind. 527.

Where the vendor was to deliver goods at a particular place, free of charge, it was held that the vendee might pay the government duties and set them off in a suit for the price. Fitch v. Archibold, 29 N. J. L. 160.

Where the defendant had purchased and paid for belting, with an express or implied warranty of quality, and the quality could only be ascertained upon trial of the belting, when it proved to be wholly worthless, it was held that the defendants could set off the price paid therefor in a suit for the price of a subsequent purchase of belting by them from the plaintiff. Gutta Percha, etc., Co. v. Wood, 84 Mich. 452.

Where a party has actually paid money for another under a guaranty, the money so paid may be set off in an action by the latter as money paid to his use. Hutchinson v. Sydney, 10 Exch. 438.

In Pennsylvania it has been held that in distress for rent, taxes paid by the tenant may be set off. Franciscus v. Reigart, 4 Watts (Pa.) 98, 476. So it was held that under the plea of payment on a contract for the sale of lands, the defendant may give evidence of taxes due by the former owner, which he has paid on the lands by way of set off. Fulweiler v. Baugher, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 45.

And under the Indiana statute (1 Gav. & H., § 199) taxes paid were held a good set-off in an action for use and occupation. Grossman v. Lauber, 29 Ind. 618.

Where A, the payee of a draft on B, at the time of the acceptance of the draft gave to B a release, written on a separate paper, of all obligations to pay if the draft should fall into the hands of an innocent holder for value before due, and the draft afterwards did fall into the hands of such holder, to whom B was compelled to pay it, the court held, in a subsequent suit by A against B on another acceptance, that the amount paid on the first draft could be set off, no funds of the drawer being in hand. The fact that B was bound to pay the draft if an innocent holder presented it, because on the face of it, the acceptance was unconditional and the draft negotiable, was said to give B an action for money paid out to A's use at his special instance and request, and therefore, in that event, he could set it off. Cannon v. Campbell, 69 Ga. 263.

When plaintiff has received a certain sum of money on the re-sale of property, to one-half of which, after making certain deductions, the defendant is justly entitled, the property having been purchased for the benefit of both parties, the defendant has legal right to have the same set off against any just claim the plaintiff may have against him. Pope v. McGee, 33 N. J. L. 271.

Money had and received has been deemed a proper matter of set-off—royalties, for instance, actually collected. Harris Wire Co. v. Moore, 55 Mich. 610. Where a plaintiff received of the defendants certain instruments under an arrangement to sell the same, and to give defendant thirty-six dollars per gross as profits on such sales, it was held that the defendants were entitled, in a proper suit, to set off against the plaintiff's demand, whatever sums of such profits the plaintiff received under the arrangement. Josselyn v. Bishop, 25 Mich. 397.

Under a statute providing that money paid for unlawful purchases of liquors sold in violation of the liquor laws shall be deemed to have been received without consideration, and may be recovered back, it was held that the liability for the same is thereby put on the same footing as other money had and received, and may be set off. Roethke v. Philip Best Brewing Co., 33 Mich. 340.

Where the defendant had given the plaintiff a note for a balance found upon a settlement, and it was ascertained, shortly after the settlement, that by mistake, the note was for $30 too much, the defendant, in an action upon the note, was permitted to set off the excess. Bentley v. Hollenback, Wright (Ohio.) 168.

An average loss, the amount which the underwriter has acknowledged, may be set off by a broker with a del credere commission, in an action against him for the amount of premiums. Weinholt v. Roberts, 2 Campb. 586.

Where A promised and agreed to pay B three hundred dollars, if B would release A's son from all damage and liability in consequence of a battery committed by his son on B, and B in consideration of such promise executed and delivered the release, it was held that A was liable upon his promise to is sufficiently certain if it is capable of being reduced to a certainty simply by calculation.¹

b. UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY ACTS—(1) Mutual Credits.—There is some difference between the allowance of claims in set-pay the three hundred dollars, and that B could plead it, by way of set-off, in a suit instituted against him by A. McCormick v. Oliver, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 24.

Where, in an action on contract, the defendant seeks to set off against the plaintiff a claim on an instrument acknowledging the receipt of a sum of money in trust, it was held that such sum, being liquidated and payable on demand, is a proper matter of set-off, whether considered as a trust or as a mere debt. The court, in the decision of this case, by Holmes, J., said: "If the instrument imports a 'trust,' properly so called, rather than a debt, so that the plaintiff was bound to keep the fund identified, but was only responsible for reasonable care in its preservation, and was not personally answerable for an equivalent sum from her assets generally, and at all events, still we think that the defendant's demand could be set off, under Pub. St., ch. 168, §§ 1, 14, consistently with §§ 2, 3. The trust was a naked one, which the defendant could terminate as matter of right. Underwood v. Boston Five Cents' Sav. Bank, 141 Mass. 305. Upon demand and refusal to pay it over, the money could be recovered in an action of assumpsit; that is, upon an implied contract. Johnson v. Johnson, 120 Mass. 465. It would serve no useful purpose to exclude the set-off of such a demand by a narrow construction of the statute." Gannon v. Ruffin, 151 Mass. 204.

Overpayments.—It seems that overpayments, when properly pleaded, may be set off. See O'Brien v. Anniston Pipe Works (Ala. 1891), 9 So. Rep. 415; Bracken v. Dillon, 64 Ga. 243; 37 Am. Rep. 70. In an action brought against a city by assignees of a claim for printing done in 1871, it was held that the fact that an amount for advertising in 1869, included a gross overcharge that had been fraudulently presented, passed upon and obtained by the assignor association, was a proper matter of set-off. Taylor v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 20 Hun (N. Y.) 292. So it was said that where the State has overpaid a contractor, under a mistake of fact, the amount overpaid may be set off against amounts due the contractor on other contracts than that on which the overpayment was made. Belden v. State, 31 Hun (N. Y.) 409.

Claims for Taking Usurious Interest, etc.—It is held that a claim under U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5198, to recover double the amount of usurious interest paid to a national bank, is not a proper matter of set-off under statutes requiring a set-off to be a "cause of action arising upon contract." Fraker v. Cullum, 24 Kan. 679; Hade v. McVay, 31 Ohio St. 231.

In other cases it has been laid down more broadly as a general rule, that such claim cannot be set off; that the party is restricted to his legal remedy by an independent action. Barnet v. National Bank, 98 U. S. 555; First Nat. Bank v. Childs, 133 Mass. 248; 43 Am. Rep. 509.

But where the claim sought to be set off, was simply to recover usurious interest paid, it has been allowed to be set off. So, a claim arising from a bonus, paid on a usurious loan, is the subject of a set-off; such claim cannot properly be said to have grown out of a tort. Dey v. Jackson, 39 N. J. L. 535. And it was held that the defendant in an action may set off the excess of interest taken of him by the plaintiff in a transaction different from that on which the action is brought. Thomas v. Shoemaker, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 179.

It has been said that the true construction of the words in a statute which define the matters which may be set off to be demands for a "sum liquidated, or one which may be ascertained by calculation," is to "limit them to such judgments, or contracts, only as that the amount of the defendant's demand can only be ascertained by the contract itself or by mathematical calculations on the same." Hall v. Glidden, 39 Me. 445; Smith v. Eddy, 1 R. I. 476. See Clyde v. Knight, 12 R. I. 194.

Where the defendant, in an action by the plaintiffs to recover £30 which he had received to their use, showed that he had been employed at a salary of £140, under an agreement that the contract of employment should be determinable at three months' notice, or on payment of three months' salary, it was held that since he had been dismissed without the stipulated notice, the three months' salary became a debt due the defendant, and he might set it off against the plaintiffs' claim. East Anglian R. Co. v. Lythgoe, 10 C. B. 726; 70 E. C. L. 724; 20 L. J. C. P. 84; 2 E. L. & Eq. 331.

So, where a statute (48 Geo. III, ch. 149, § 24) enacted "that where the full purchase or consideration money" for a conveyance, "should not be truly expressed or set forth" therein, "it should be lawful for the purchaser to recover back from the seller so much of the purchase or consideration money as should not be expressed and set forth in an action for money had and received for the use of the party suing for the same," it was held that such a sum of money might be made the subject of a plea of set-off. Gingell v. Parkins, 4 Exch. 720.

In an action on a bill of exchange the defendant was allowed to set off the sum to which the plaintiff was under a legal obligation to insure a vessel, but which he neglected to do, and the vessel was lost. De Talset v. Crousellat, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 504.

In an action on a note, the defendant sought to set off a claim against the plaintiff, arising on the following transaction: The plaintiff had sold hides in a vat to the defendant at one dollar and fifty cents a hide, under an agreement that if they fell short of a specified number the plaintiff should repay the defendant for the deficiency, and if they exceeded that number the defendant should pay for the excess. The hides fell short. It was held that the defendant could set off his account for the deficiency. Daniel v. Trice, 31 Ga. 162.

In an action by a collector of taxes against a town to recover the amount of an order by the selectmen on the treasury of the town, the defendants were permitted to set off their claim against the plaintiff, by reason of the plaintiff's neglect to account for and pay over money received by him on tax bills committed to him for collection, and which he had not accounted for nor paid over. Donelson v. Colerain, 4 Met. (Mass.) 430.

Where the parties entered into a written contract by which the defendant agreed to build a house for the plaintiff upon the terms therein stipulated, but the plaintiff broke the contract and the defendant justifiably abandoned and rescinded it, the court held that the defendant might set off the value of the work done and materials furnished before the breach and abandonment, such claim not being for unliquidated damages for breach of contract. Ford v. Burchard, 130 Mass. 424. But in Smith v. Eddy, 1 R. I. 476, under a similar state of facts, the defendants were not permitted to set off such demands. The court by Haile, J., said: "The defendants seek to recover, not by force of their contract and for performance of the same, but a reasonable sum for their services. This sum can be ascertained only by proof of such breach of the contract by the plaintiff, as would excuse the defendants from performing their part of the contract, and proof of the value of their services. Such evidence was not admissible to establish a claim to set-off by the defendants." And in Butts v. Collins, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 139, Chancellor Walworth treated the defendant's claim for the value of a certain number of pieces of flannel, which had been placed in the plaintiff's hands to be dressed, but had never been returned, as uncertain and unliquidated, although the number of yards in each piece and value per yard were proved. But Mr. Senator Maisson took a different view.

It was held that an obligation for money to be paid in the bonds of a railroad company by a given day, may if not complied with, be the subject of set-off in a suit against the original holder of such obligation, or his assignee, for money due said corporation. And it seems that this is so whether the obligation does or does not fix the value at which the bonds are to be received, the law having established a rule by which the value may be ascertained and rendered certain. Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Walker, 2 Head (Tenn.)

off, under the bankruptcy acts before referred to,¹ and the ordinary statutes of set-off, by reason of the employment of the term "mutual credits" therein. It is said that this term is of larger import than the term "mutual debts," and that under them many cross-claims may be allowed in cases of bankruptcy, which in common cases would be rejected.²

The claim need not be a debt due and payable before bankruptcy.³ It is sufficient if the claim, originating in a mutual credit before bankruptcy,⁴ has become due and payable after the

467. Where sundry bank stocks, railroad stocks, railroad bonds and coupons for interest on such bonds, were placed in the hands of a creditor as security, and were wrongfully disposed of by him so that the debtor had a claim upon him for damages for their loss, it was held that such damages could be set off against the debt, pro tanto, in an action at law brought by the creditor for the recovery of the debt. Bulkeley v. Welch, 31 Conn. 339. See Ainsworth v. Bowen, 9 Wis. 348. In the former case (Bulkeley v. Welch, 31 Conn. 342), the court by Sandford, J., said: "Upon the case stated in the bill the petitioner has an election of actions at law against the pledgee. He may maintain trover for the wrongful conversion of the goods, or, waiving the tort, he may bring assumpsit for the value of the property or for the money received upon its sale; but as he makes no claim on account of any peculiar quality or any extraordinary value of the property itself, or of any aggravating circumstances attending its conversion, the market value of the property would be the measure of his damages, whatever the form of the remedy which he might adopt. What the value of the property was can be shown by the testimony of witnesses acquainted with the market. The petitioner's claim, therefore, is not to such unliquidated damages, depending upon the opinion, judgment, or discretion of a jury, as cannot be set off against the respondents' debt in suit."

An obligation was executed for the payment of $5,000, payable in bonds of the obligor company, at par. It was held that this obligation could properly be employed as a set-off since, under this contract, the value of the bonds is not uncertain; it is the nominal value and not the value at which they might be rated in the market. Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Walker, 2 Head (Tenn.) 467.

2. See Ex parte Ockenden, 1 Atk. 234, opinion by Lord Hardwicke; Rose v. Hart, 8 Taunt. 499; 2 Sm. L. C. 308; 4 E. C. L. 185.

3. An accommodation acceptor to a bill, which did not fall due until after the bankruptcy, and was then outstanding in the hands of third persons, and paid by him after commission issued, was held entitled to a set-off under the words mutual credit. Smith v. Hodson, 4 T. R. 211.

4. In order that a case may be protected as one of mutual credit, it must appear that such mutual credit existed at the time of the bankruptcy. Boyd v. Mangles, 16 M. & W. 337.

It is to be observed that, in all the cases where set-off has been allowed under the bankruptcy acts, except, perhaps, the case of Ex parte Deeze, 1 Atk. 228, there were dealings between the parties before the bankruptcy, which by the efflux of time had ripened into mutual debts. In the latter case Lord Hardwicke held that goods, in the hands of a packer, who was a debtor of the bankrupt, could be retained not only for the price of packing them, but for a sum of £500 lent to the bankrupt on his note, though if there had been no bankruptcy, the debt could not have been set off in an action at law for the recovery of the goods, the holder having no lien on them, or having a lien on them for a portion only of his debt. Ex parte Deeze, 1 Atk. 228. But in the case of Ex parte Ockenden, 1 Atk. 234, which came before Lord Hardwicke about six years after the former, he very much narrowed the extensive construction that he had before put on the words "mutual credits," in the statute of 5 Geo. II, ch. 30, § 28.

The question of mutual credit cannot arise where the credit is altogether created after notice of an act of bankruptcy. Birdwood v. Raphael, 5 Price 593. It should appear that the obligation commenced previously thereto, or that there was some connection in the origin of the transaction. Gibbs, J., in Ouchterlony v. Easterly, 4 Taunt. 888. If the set-off claimed be a note made or a bill accepted by the bankrupt and indorsed to defendant, it should appear that the indorsement was made before notice of the bankruptcy. Marsh v. Chambers, 2 Str. 1234; Lucas v. Marsh, Barnes 453; Dickson v. Evans, 6 T. R. 57; Ogden v. Cowley, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 278. In New York, a defendant who, at the time of obtaining a note of plaintiffs, was chargeable with notice of their assignment, could not avail himself of the note as a set-off, Johnson v. Bloodgood, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 51; 1 Am. Dec. 93; Anderson v. Van Alen, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 344. But a bill or note may form an item of credit, although the person claiming it as such item may not have had it in his hands at the moment of the bankruptcy. 5 Rob. Prac. 995; Ex parte Hale, 3 Ves. 304, and Ex parte Burton, 1 Rose's B. C. 320, are distinguished from Bolland v. Nash, 8 B. & C. 105; 15 E. C. L. 157. The propriety of this decision is not doubted in Collins v. Jones, 10 B. & C. 777; 21 E. C. L. 169.

1. In Ex parte Boyle, Re Shepherd, Cooke B. L. (8th ed.) 571, Lord Cork, to accommodate Shepherd, who was his solicitor, drew four notes, two payable to Nibbs or order, and two to Shepherd or order, making, on the whole, 981*l.* os. 3*d.* Lord Cork having been forced to take up one of them before the bankruptcy, and two afterwards, the question was whether these payments could be set off against a debt due from his lordship to Shepherd's estate. The Lord Chancellor at first thought that the account must be taken as it stood at the time of the bankruptcy; but afterwards his lordship said he had considered the case, and was of opinion that the petitioner was entitled to set off the debt against the payments after the bankruptcy.

That an accommodation acceptance, not paid till after the bankruptcy by the acceptor, could be set off against the estate of the party accommodated was also decided in Ex parte Wagstaff, 13 Ves. 65; and Russell v. Bell, 8 M. & W. 277; and these cases were cited with approbation by Parke, B., in Hulme v. Muggleston, 3 M. & W. 31.

In this case, in an action of money had and received to the use of the assignees of John Smith, the defendant pleaded that before notice of the bankruptcy, he indorsed a bill for Smith's accommodation, and discounted another for him, both of which he was obliged to take up after the bankruptcy; that before the bankruptcy, Smith lent him a check, the proceeds of which he received after the bankruptcy, which was the same money now sued for, and against which he claimed to set off the dishonored bills. The court held the plea good. See, under bankrupt law of Scotland, Macfarlane v. Norris, 2 B. & S. 793. In Sheldon v. Rothschild, 8 Taunt. 156; 4 E. C. L. 55; 2 Moore 43, Otte drew a bill on B. & Co. for 400*l.*, which they accepted without value. They afterwards owed Otte 236*l.*, 11*s.* 3*d.*, and drew on him for 163*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*, the balance. This bill they sold to the defendant and afterwards became bankrupts, the 400*l.* bill remaining in Otte's hands unpaid. Otte accepted without notice of the bankruptcy, and paid the 193*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.* to the defendant, on which the assignees of B. & Co. brought an action as for money had and received; but the court held that there was a mutual credit between the bankrupt and Otte, and that inasmuch as he could have set off his demand on the estate in any action brought against him, the defendant, whom he had indemnified, and who stood in his place, could do so also. In Collins v. Jones, 10 B. & C. 777, 21 E. C. L. 169, it was laid down by Bayley, J., that "whoever takes a bill must be considered as giving credit to the acceptor; and whoever takes a note, credit to the drawer." See Arbouin v. Tritton, Holt. N. B. 408; 3 E. C. L. 164; Edmeads v. Newman, 1 B. & C. 418; 8 E. C. L. 178.

In Bittleston v. Timmis, 1 C. B. 389; 50 E. C. L. 387, it was held that a demand which originated before fiat, and before notice of any act of bankruptcy, could be set off against a claim for money had and received to the use of the assignees, arising out of a credit given by the bankrupt before fiat and before notice of any act of bankruptcy. It thus seems that the debt need not be due and payable before the bankruptcy.

Where bills had been indorsed in blank by E. & Co. to the defendants, yet payable.¹ Nor was it considered necessary that the bankrupt and the creditor should particularly intend to trust each other, or who were their bankers, for the purpose of being discounted, and, before the bills became due, E. & Co. became bankrupt, the defendants having then in their hands a sum of money belonging to E. & Co., much less than the amount of the bills, and the assignees of E. & Co. sued the defendants to recover the money of E. & Co., which was so in their hands, as aforesaid, it was held that the defendants were entitled, as indorsees of the bills, to set them off in that action. Alsager v. Currie, 12 M. & W. 751.

R, being indebted, by an open account, to an incorporated railroad company, the latter assigned the debt to one S, to whom the company was largely indebted, and by whom suit was brought against R, in the name of the company, and a judgment obtained thereon. Pending the suit against him, R paid for the company a large debt, as its surety, which debt existed previous to the assignment by the company to S. It was held that, as the company was insolvent at the time of the assignment to S of the debt of R, the latter could set off in equity the money he had paid for the company, against the judgment obtained by S. Tuscumbia, etc., R. Co. v. Rhodes, 8 Ala. 206.

A premium note given for a policy of insurance, and a loss incurred under the policy, are "mutual credits" within the meaning of 2 New York Rev. Stat. 47, § 36, and the insured are entitled to offset the loss against the note, although, by the terms of the policy, the loss was not payable until sometime after proof of loss, and no proof was furnished until after the insolvency of the insurers. Pardo v. Osgood, 5 Robt. (N. Y.) 348; following Osgood v. De Groot, 36 N. Y. 348.

So in Graham v. Russell, 5 M. & S. 498, it was held that an underwriter, in an action by the assignees of a bankrupt assured upon a loss which happened after the bankruptcy, may set off a sum due to him for premiums on the balance of accounts between the bankrupt and himself. The court said that the case depended much upon the construction of 19 Geo. II, which provided that the assured in any policy should be admitted to prove his debt as if the loss had happened before the commission issued, and shall receive dividend in like manner. "This statute," says Lord Ellenborough, "relates to the case of a bankrupt underwriter, and the case before us is that of a bankrupt assured, but the judges are of the opinion that as the set-off is to be allowed in the case of the bankrupt underwriter, by parity of reason there ought to be the same allowance on the part of the bankrupt assured. The question must, in effect, be the same as if the underwriter had become bankrupt, the assured being indebted to him and remaining solvent, and therefore it may be considered in that way."

1. Thus in Ex parte Prescott, 1 Atk. 230, a person owed the bankrupt a sum payable at a future day, and the bankrupt was indebted in a smaller sum then due. Lord Hardwicke held that although not strictly a mutual debt, it was a case of mutual credit within the meaning of the bankrupt law, and the sum owing by the bankrupt was set off and applied upon the demand owing to the bankrupt not then due.

Where an insolvent was indebted to a creditor in a certain amount due at the time of the insolvency, and the creditor owed a note due in a few days, it was held to be a mutual credit and a set-off allowable. Jones v. Robinson, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 310, decided under 2 New York Rev. Stat. 47, § 36. So in Massachusetts, in an action by the assignees in insolvency, the defendants, who, before notice of the insolvency, had taken a promissory note made by the insolvent, may set off the note, if it is due absolutely, though not payable till afterwards. Demmon v. Boylston Bank, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 194; Aldrich v. Campbell, 4 Gray (Mass.) 284.

Thus, in Rose v. Sims, 1 B. & Ad. 521; 20 E. C. L. 437, it was held that an agreement to indorse a bill of exchange did not create such a credit as the statute intends; in Gibson v. Bell, 1 Bing. N. Cas. 748; 27 E. C. L. 562, that an agreement to accept a bill did not create such a credit. These cases turned on the distinction between an acceptance, which creates a debt, and an indorsement which creates only a suretyship. See Wallis v. Swinburne, 1 Exch. 203.

An agreement to pay the bankrupt for goods sold prompt two months, or by acceptance, was held a claim against which a debt due from the bankrupt to raise a cross-demand.¹ It has been said that the leading rule on the subject of mutual credits is, that, to be within the meaning of the bankrupt laws, they must be such credits as would terminate in debts—e. g., where a debt was due from one party, and credit was given by him on the other hand, for a sum of money payable at a future day, and which would then become a debt; or where there was a debt on one side, and delivery of property with directions to turn it into money, on the other.² In the latter case, might be set off. Groom v. West, 8 A. & E. 758; 35 E. C. L. 520.

1. Where a bill of exchange, accepted by A got into the hands of B, it was held that there was a mutual credit between A and B, even though the former did not know the bill was in the hands of the latter. Hankey v. Smith, 3 T. R. 507.

Money was borrowed of an insurance company, for the purpose of erecting buildings upon a certain lot, secured by a mortgage upon the premises. After the completion of the buildings they were insured by the same company; and by a subsequent fire, by which the company was rendered insolvent, the buildings were destroyed, whereby the whole amount of the policy became due. Upon a bill by the mortgagor, the receivers were ordered to allow a set-off of the policy against the mortgage debt. In re Globe Ins. Co., 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 625.

2. 2 Chitt. Contr. 1284. See Rose v. Hart, 8 Taunt. 499; 2 Sm. L. C. 315; Naoroji v. Chartered Bank, L. R., 3 C. P. 444; Astley v. Gurney, L. R., 4 C. P. 714; Young v. Bank of Bengal, 1 Moore P. C. 150.

In the decision of the above cited case of Rose v. Hart, the court, by Gibbs, C. J., said that the principle there laid down (which has been adopted in the text), would support all the cases in the string of cases between Ex parte Ockenden and this case, beginning with French v. Fenn, 1 Atk. 228; 3 Dougl. 261; Cooke B. L. (7th ed.) 536 (8th ed.), 565; 26 E. C. L. 99, decided in 1783, and extending over a period of thirty years, during which French v. Fenn, 1 Atk. 228, was the leading case upon this subject, and ending with Olive v. Smith, 5 Taunt. 58.

In French v. Fenn, 1 Atk. 228; Cooke B. L. (7th ed.) 536, (8th ed.) 565; 26 E. C. L. 99, there was a debt due from Cox, the bankrupt, to Fenn, and Cox had intrusted Fenn with his share or interest in a string of pearls, to be sold by Fenn, and the profits on such share to be paid to Cox. Fenn sold the pearls after Cox's bankruptcy, and Cox's assignees brought an action against Fenn for his share of the profit. It was insisted on the part of the defendant that there was a mutual credit, though not a mutual debt, at the time of the bankruptcy, and that one could not be demanded without satisfying the other. The court determined that Fenn was protected from the claim of Cox's assignees by the clause of mutual credits.

So where the defendant had lent his acceptance to the bankrupts on a bill which did not become due till after the act of bankruptcy, and which was then outstanding in the hands of third persons, yet the defendant, having paid the amount after commission issued, and before the action brought by the assignees, was held entitled to set off that amount. Smith v. Hodson, 4 T. R. 211; 2 Sm. L. C. 126.

In Atkinson v. Elliott, 7 T. R. 378, the defendant sold the bankrupt a parcel of tar for 430*l.*, at six months' credit, for which the bankrupt accepted a bill, and afterwards bought another parcel for 230*l.*, on the same terms. On the first bill becoming due, he gave the defendant two bills on third persons, making together 600*l.*, and the defendant undertook, on their being paid, to return 170*l.*, it not being intended to do more than take up the bill accepted for the price of the first parcel. In an action for the 170*l.*, the defendant was allowed to set off his demand for the second parcel of goods.

A, a merchant, employed B, a broker, to effect policies and sell goods, and trusted him with the possession of the policies; A being indebted to B for premiums on insurance, and having obtained an advance of money upon a pledge of goods placed in B's hands for sale, but not on those goods, to the exclusion of A's general creditors, became bankrupt; afterwards a loss the credit given by the delivery of the property must in its nature terminate in a debt, and the balance will be taken on the two debts; the words of the statute will in all cases be complied with. But where there is a mere deposit of property, without any authority to turn it into money, no debt can ever arise out of it, and, therefore, it is not a credit within the meaning of the statute.¹

happened, and B received it from the underwriters. It was held that this was a mutual credit within the 5 Geo., II., ch. 30, § 28, and that B might retain the sum received for the loss, in liquidation of his advances, as well as of the balance due for premiums. Olive v. Smith, 5 Taunt. 56; 2 Rose 122. See also Parker v. Carter, Cooke B. L. 548; Arbouin v. Tritton, Holt N. P. 408; 3 E. C. L. 164.

But subsequent to Olive v. Smith, 5 Taunt. 56, in a case in which the goods themselves had not been intrusted by the bankrupt to his creditor, but where goods had been consigned by the bankrupt to a third party, under an agreement between the former and his creditor, whereby the proceeds of such goods must necessarily pass through the hands of the creditor, it was held that this was a case of mutual credit. Easum v. Cato, 5 B. & Ald. 861; 7 E. C. L. 282. In this case, J. S., being desirous of making a shipment at his own risk, but not in his own name, represented to the merchants through whom the shipment was to be made, that the goods were A's, and procured A to write to them to insure, and make advances on the goods, which was done. J. S. having become a bankrupt, it was held that A might recover the proceeds of the goods, and set off a debt due from him to J. S., in an action for them by the assignees. But see Young v. Bank of Bengal, 1 Deac. 622; Moore P. C. 150; 38 E. C. L. 627.

Deposit in Bank.—When money is deposited with a bank, the bank becomes the debtor of the depositor to the amount of the deposit. See BANKS AND BANKING, vol. 2, p. 94, n. 1. When, therefore, the depositor is indebted to the bank, it is a case of mutual credit, and the bank may set off against the claims of the depositor to the amount deposited, a debt due from him to the bank. Winslow v. Bliss, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 220; Scammon v. Kimball, 92 U. S. 362. See Demmon v. Boylston Bank, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 194; Fort v. McCully, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 87.

1. Thus, in trover for cloths deposited by the bankrupt, previous to his bankruptcy, with the defendant, who was a fuller, for the purpose of being dressed, it was held that the defendant was not entitled to detain them for his general balance for such work done by him for the bankrupt previously to his bankruptcy; for that there was no mutual credit. Rose v. Hart, 8 Taunt. 499; 2 Sm. L. C. 308; 4 E. C. L. 185. See Sampson v. Burton, 2 B. & B. 89; 6 E. C. L. 50.

A. and Co., merchants in Liverpool, remitted a bill to B. and Co. in London, with directions to get it discounted, and apply the proceeds in a particular way. B. and Co. did not get the bill discounted, but received the money when it became due. Before that time A. & Co. had stopped payment, and demanded the return of the bill. A commission of bankruptcy having been issued against them before the money was received on the bill by B. and Co., it was held, in an action by the assignees of the bankrupts to recover the amount so received, that B. and Co. could not set off a debt due to them from A. and Co. Buchanan v. Findlay, 9 B. & C. 738; 17 E. C. L. 486. A bank cannot set off notes left with them for discount, which they have refused to discount, in an action subsequently brought by the assignees in insolvency of the depositor, on a debt due from the bank to him before his insolvency. Stetson v. Exchange Bank, 7 Gray. (Mass.) 425.

H. owed the firm of S. & Co. two debts, one on a promissory note secured by a mortgage on real estate, and the other upon a merchandise account. H. remitted to S. & Co. five sums at different times, in each case directing the sum to be applied toward the payment of the note. Three of these sums were applied as directed. The last two sums were not so applied. Soon afterwards H. was adjudged a bankrupt. In an action by S. & Co. to foreclose the mortgage, it was claimed that against the sum of the last two remittances, which were not applied on the note, the unsecured debt could be set-off under the mutual credit clause of the

It has been suggested that the rule which has been laid down "that mutual credits, within the meaning of the bankrupt laws, are credits which must in their nature terminate in debts," means, not, as has been contended in some cases, credits which must, ex necessitate rei, terminate in debts, but, credits which have a natural tendency to terminate in debts, and not in claims differing in nature from a debt.¹

But a mere liability which may or may not, but has not become, a debt, cannot be set off.²

bankrupt act. (Bankrupt Act, § 20; U. S. Rev. Stats., § 5073.) But it was held that the remitting of moneys by H. to S. & Co. to be applied according to instructions, made S. & Co., not the debtor, but the trustee of H. Libby v. Hopkins, 104 U. S. 303; 25 Alb. L. J. 153.

A had pledged stock in a corporation for the payment of a promissory note given to the defendant, with the authority to the pledgee to sell the same on the non-payment of the note. Subsequently the maker assigned all his property to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors. On the maturity of the note, the trustee tendered the amount of the note to the holder, and on his refusal to deliver the shares, brought a bill in equity to redeem the same. It was held that there was not that mutual credit under the statute (Massachusetts Gen. Stats., ch. 118, § 26) which would allow the defendant to set off other debts due him from the pledgor at the time the note matured. Hathaway v. Fall River Nat. Bank, 131 Mass. 14.

It has been stated that when goods are held with a mere power of sale, which the debtor or his assignee may defeat, and which the creditor has not even signified his election to exercise, it does not yet appear that they are to be accounted for as money by the creditor, and therefore he is not yet in a position to set the debts due him against the proceeds if he sells. So, A, the insolvent, had given the defendant a promissory note, payable on demand, and secured by a transfer of shares of stock, and the defendant made other advances to A before and after this transaction, receiving other notes. Demand was made on the note secured three days before the date of the assignment to the plaintiff for the benefit of creditors, but no notice of intentions to sell the security was given; and the defendant bank afterwards became a party to the assignment. Subsequently the defendant sold the stock held as security. In an action by the plaintiff as trustee under the assignment to recover the surplus of the proceeds of the sale remaining after the payment of the note, the defendant sought to set off certain claims against A on the ground that at the time of the assignment there were mutual credits within the Massachusetts statutes (Gen. Stats. ch. 118, § 26; Pub. Sts. ch. 157, § 27). But it was held that the transaction did not show that the stock was held by the defendant "to be converted into money, so that the liability to account for it would ultimately become a debt," so that there was not a mutual credit within the statute. Brown v. New Bedford Sav. Inst., 137 Mass. 262. See Tallman v. New Bedford Five Cents' Bank, 138 Mass. 330.

1. Thus it was settled in Smith v. Hodson, 4 T. R. 211; 2 Sm. L. C. 126, that an accommodation acceptance is a credit, given by the acceptor to the party accommodated; and yet it is not certain to end in a debt, for the party accommodated ought to provide for the bill, at maturity, and, if he do, there will be no debt. Yates v. Hoppe, 9 C. B. 541; 67 E. C. L. 541.

2. Where A, B, and C, dissolved partnership, there being at that time due from the firm to one H a sum of 51,891*l.* 12*s.*, and from A to the firm the sum of 6,817*l.* 9*s.*, 8*d.*, and it was agreed that A should pay to B and C the debt due from him to the firm, and that B and C should keep the stocks and assets of the firm and should pay H, but B and C became bankrupts while the greater part of H's debt still remained unpaid, it was held that A's liability to pay H was in the nature of a guaranty, in respect of which he might never be called upon to pay anything, and that consequently he could not set off the sum of his liability to H in an action by the assignees of

It is to be remembered that the same mutuality is required in the case of setting off credits under the bankruptcy laws, as is required in order that debts may be set off under the ordinary statutes of set-off.¹

(2) Mutual Dealings.—The right of set-off in the case of bankruptcy has, in England, been extended to "mutual dealings" between the bankrupt and his debtor. But it is difficult to determine from the decided cases whether this permits other claims to be set off than those which could have been so employed under the earlier statutes, which authorized the practice only where there were mutual "debts" and "credits."²

5. What Subjects of Set-off May be Set off—a. IN GENERAL.—When it is determined that a particular demand is comprehended by the terms of the governing statute of set-off, whether the right is thereby, as in the more common provisions, limited to mutual debts, or is more generally allowed, as is done by some statutes which allow unliquidated claims, and by others (the bankruptcy acts) which permit mutual credits and dealings to be set off, it is necessary that it should conform to certain requirements which the bankrupts. Abbott v. Hicks, 7 Scott 715. And see Sampson v. Burton, 2 B. & B. 89; 6 E. C. L. 50; Arbouin v. Tritton, Holt. N. P. 408; 3 E. C. L. 164; Wood v. Dodgson, 2 M. & S. 195.

1. 8 Bac. Abr. 651; Staniforth v. Fellowes, 1 Marsh. 184. See infra, this title, The Requirement of Mutuality as to Claims in Set-off.

2. The English "Bankrupt Act, 1869," § 39, makes use of the term "mutual dealings," as well as the term "mutual credits" and "mutual debts," which alone are to be found in the older bankruptcy acts. Still it has been supposed that the meaning of this term is not materially different from the others; that it would probably be held to mean such dealings only as, in the natural course of business, would end in debts. 2 Chitt. Contr. 1285.

But some authorities have been disposed to give a wider meaning to the term. 2 Sm. L. C. 328.

In Booth v. Hutchinson, L. R., 15 Eq. 30, which was the case of a deed incorporating the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, it was held that a claim for damages for breach of covenant which were ascertained at the date of the deed might be set off against the claim for rent due and accruing due to the insolvent estate up to the time of the distribution of the estate under the deed. In delivering judgment, Malins, V. C., said: "If the case were under the old law I should probably have concluded that there was no right of set-off, but the old decisions rested on the construction which the courts had put upon the words 'mutual' and 'mutual credits.' . . . The language of the act of 1869 is altered from that of previous acts and made more comprehensive; and I must therefore conclude that the right of set-off given by the previous acts was considered to be too restricted, and was intended to be enlarged."

In Ex parte Barnett, In re Deveze, L. R., 9 Ch. 293, Barnett & Co. had had business transactions with a trader who became bankrupt, and at the time of the bankruptcy the bankrupt owed Barnett & Co. £3010, and Barnett & Co. owed the bankrupt £88, in respect of which sum he had a lien upon goods of Barnett & Co. in his possession. On a claim by the trustee in bankruptcy that Barnett & Co. should pay the £88 in full, and should prove, for the whole sum of £3,010 against the bankrupt's estate, it was held that they were entitled to have the sum of £88 set off against their claim, so as to free the goods from the lien, and to prove for the balance against the bankrupt's estate. But though this case was decided upon the recent act, Lord Selbourne, C. guarded himself from expressing an opinion upon the effect of the additional words.

A contractor failed to carry out his result from the very nature of set-off, although they are sometimes also demanded by the express terms of the statute. The object of these statutes of set-off is, as has been said, to do away with circuity of actions as much as practicable; this is sought to be accomplished by the abrogation of the common-law necessity of resorting to an independent action for the recovery of the demands comprehended by these statutes, and permitting them to be recovered in an action by the plaintiff. Set-off is, then, in the nature of a cross-action; the defendant must, to sustain the matter of his set-off, show whatever would be necessary to support an independent action thereon, and may be met by the same defenses.¹ And a claim must, in order to be set off, be one upon which an action could be maintained by the defendant against the plaintiff.²

In the construction of the statute of 2 Geo. II, it had been doubted whether debts of a superior nature could be set off against those of an inferior nature, and vice versa.³ This occasioned the enactment of the 8 Geo. II, which settled that mutual debts could be set off against one another notwithstanding that such debts are deemed in law to be of a different nature.⁴

contract, and had gone into liquidation. There was a clause in the agreement empowering the employers to use the plant left by the contractor on the premises in case of his default, and a portion had accordingly been used up by a contractor duly substituted under the contract. The balance remaining unused was sold by agreement, and the sum realized was claimed by the trustees. The employers sought to set off the damages sustained by them through the breach of contract, contending that there had been mutual dealings between them and the debtor, in respect of which they were entitled to the set-off. This contention the learned judge overruled, being of the opinion that inasmuch as the employers acquired no property in the plant, but only a right to use it in a certain event, there had not, under the circumstances, been a dealing in respect of the sum realized. Ex parte Bolland, In re Winter, 8 Ch. D. 225; 47 L. J. Bkcy. 52.

So, where notes sued upon are proven to have been given upon a settlement, and the defendant sets up a claim which accrued prior thereto, he must show that it was not included in the settlement. *Perry v. Where a contractor sued the defendant for work performed upon a building, and the defendant sought to set off the price of certain lime which had been furnished and charged, first to the contractor and then to the defendant, as owner, it was held that to establish the set-off, the burden of proof rested upon the owner to show, either that he had paid for the lime, or that he and not the contractor was liable for it. Belshaw v. Colie, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 213.

b. MUST BE SUBSISTING CAUSE OF ACTION.—Only such demands, as constitute a subsisting cause of action can be set off; nothing can be pleaded as a set-off on which a separate action cannot be maintained.¹ A claim, in order that it may be set off, must be a legal demand.² So a claim founded upon an agree-

Notes not secured by mortgage may be set off against such as are thus secured. Spencer v. Chrisman, 15 Ind. 215.

Under a statute providing that debts may be set off "although such debts are of a different nature," the cross-demands do not have to grow out of the contract or cause of action upon which plaintiff sues; it was held that a claim for pasturing plaintiff's cattle might be set off against plaintiff's claim for services rendered. *McCum v. Under a statute providing that "if any inn-holder or tavern keeper shall trust any person (other than travelers) above the sum of $1.25 for any sort of strong or spirituous liquors, or other tavern expenses, he shall lose every such debt, and be incapable of suing for the same or any part thereof," a tavern bill, unless against a traveler, cannot be set off. Evernghim v. Ensworth, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 326.

Under the Massachusetts act of 1808, regulating manufacturing corporations, no action can be maintained by a manufacturing corporation, either against a stockholder or his executor, to enforce the payment of assessments laid on his shares; and, consequently, such corporation cannot set off a claim for unpaid assessments, in an action against it by such executor, for a debt due to the stockholder. Cutler v. Middlesex Factory Co., 14 Pick. (Mass.) 483.

Where A, the maker, paid a note held by B, although the note had not been indorsed by the payee to the holder, A being ignorant of this fact, he was not, in a subsequent action, on the principle of recovering money paid by mistake, allowed to set off the sum thus paid. This was not a case where there could have been a recovery as of money paid by mistake or ignorance of facts; it appeared conclusively that, although not indorsed, the note was transferred to the holder before maturity for a valuable consideration, and that the omission to indorse happened by inadvertence. Franklin Bank v. Raymond, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 69.

Under a statute which, after enumerating the demands that may be set off, provided that "no debt or demand shall be set off as aforesaid, unless a right of action existed thereon at the commencement of the plaintiff's action," a tax assessment was held not to be a debt or demand which might be set off, since the right which the collector of taxes had to collect a tax assessed in his list was considered not to be a right of action under this statute. Hibbard v. Clark, 56 N. H. 155; 22 Am. Rep. 442.

2. Kelley v. Garrett, 6 Ill. 649.

So, there cannot, where the common law disability of the wife to contract has not been altered by statute, be set off a debt claimed to be due on a contract with the wife after marriage, for, during coverture, she can do no act which will operate as a contract to charge either herself or her husband. Norris v. Booth, 8 Ala. 907.

The plaintiff, being a joint owner with the defendants, of a vessel, proceeded with her from the United States to the port of one of two belligerent nations with whom the United States were at peace, and there fitted her out as a privateer, and cruised with her against the subjects of the other belligerent. In a suit in chancery for the application of a proportion of the expenditures of the plaintiff, in such enterprise, to a debt due from him to the defendants, it was held that, the object for which these expenditures were made being illegal, a court of chancery would leave the parties, with respect to them, where it found them. Pond v. Smith, 4 Conn. 297.

The general rule being that no right of contribution exists between wrongdoers (see CONTRIBUTION, vol. 4, p. 12, n. 1) it was held that a judgment recovered against the plaintiff and defendant as tortfeasors, and paid in full by ment without a consideration cannot be set off;¹ nor one the defendant, cannot be set off. Percy v. Clary, 32 Md. 245.

After a specific performance of a contract for the sale of land had been decreed in a suit for that purpose, the plaintiff refused to complete the contract. It was held that he could not, in an action for the rents of the property, offset the amount paid by him upon the contract. Clark v. Hale, Clark's Ch. (N. Y.) 349.

If, under a contract for the purchase and sale of real and personal property, the seller delivers the personal property to the purchaser, and fails to carry out the residue of the contract, but the contract is not rescinded, the seller cannot set off the value of the property delivered in an action upon an independent debt from him to the purchaser. Wheeler v. Purks, 15 Gray (Mass.) 527.

On the principle that no person can make another his debtor without that person's knowledge or consent (see DEBTOR AND CREDITOR, vol. 5, p. 180, notes 6 & 7), it was held that the defendant in assumpsit could not be permitted to set off a quantity of yarn, which he had delivered to the plaintiff without the plaintiff's knowledge. Broughton v. Dyson, Cheves (S. Car.) 208.

Payment by A of the debt of B, without his consent, cannot be allowed as a set-off in a suit by B against A on a due-bill. Patillo v. Smith, 61 Ga. 265.

In an action for willful trespass for carrying away plaintiff's wheat, the jury cannot deduct from the damages the probable expense that the plaintiff would have incurred in harvesting the wheat. Bull v. Griswold, 19 Ill. 631. For a similar case, see Chicago, etc., Branch Dock Co. v. Dunlap, 32 Ill. 207.

A compromise of an outstanding claim by the grantee of land without the knowledge or consent of the grantor gives the grantee no claim to a set-off in an action for the purchase money. Taggart v. Stanbery, 2 McLean (U. S.) 543.

The payment of an outstanding incumbrance by the purchaser of land, with a covenant that the land is free of incumbrances, cannot be the subject of offset in an action for the purchase-money. Dunn v. White, 1 Ala. 645.

On the principle that no claim to compensation can arise from the performance of services as a mere gratuity or gift, it has been held that where a defendant did not intend to charge the plaintiff anything for various items when they were furnished, he cannot, after an action has been commenced, make charges for them in set-off and recover thereon. Collins v. Martin, 43 Kan. 182.

A defendant is not at liberty, for the purpose of turning the plaintiff out of court, to set up and claim the benefit of a contract which he concedes he refused to regard and expressly repudiated. McQueen v. Gamble, 33 Mich. 344.

Where A holds an assignment of a claim against B, which is not enforceable against the latter without his acceptance of the assignment, a note made by A to B, and transferred by the latter to C, will not be subject to set-off of the first-mentioned claim. Stanbery v. Smythe, 13 Ohio St. 495.

When a man makes a will, all prior advancements are considered as merged, and, therefore, a writing given by a child to a father, acknowledging the receipt of an advancement, was not allowed to be used by way of set-off in a suit by the child to recover a legacy given to him in a will afterwards made by his father. Jones v. Richardson, 5 Met. (Mass.) 247.

A, being employed as overseer on a plantation, was conscripted by the confederate military authorities. The owner of the plantation, by his influence, and by the payment of money and provisions secured the release of the conscript from active duty, and had him detailed as overseer of the plantation. In an action by A for services rendered by him as overseer, it was held that the defendant's claim for such money and goods paid out could not be pleaded in reconvention, for the reason that the arrangements and treaties entered into with the confederate government, looking to the exemption of the plaintiff from military service, were not binding on the plaintiff, who was not legally bound to the so-called confederate states, and consequently no right of action was acquired against him in consequence of such payment. Callehan v. Stafford, 18 La. Ann. 556.

founded upon a gaming consideration;¹ nor a debt not actionable under the Statute of Frauds.² Nor can a debt which was contracted by the plaintiff during infancy and has not been ratified by him after full age, and hence is not actionable, be so employed.³ But if a part of a divisible demand be legal, and a part illegal, that which is legal may be set off accordingly.⁴ It is incumbent upon the person claiming the set-off to separate the part admissible from the part objectionable; otherwise the whole will be rejected.⁵

A demand which is only conditional or contingent cannot be set off;⁶ it must be due and payable.⁷ Where a contingent liability on the part of the defendant on behalf of the plaintiff is shown to exist, it, nevertheless, cannot be set off unless it is also shown that it has actually been discharged by the defendant.⁸

In an action by the payee of a promissory note the defendant cannot set off a demand against a third person, in consequence of the payee's having made a valid engagement that the maker shall receive such demand out of the payee's estate after his decease. Foot v. Martin, 1 Met. (Mass.) 273.

In an action upon a promissory note the defendant cannot set off a bond given to him by the plaintiff conditioned for the delivery of a certain quantity of metal to a third person or order "at any time when called on" without first proving that the delivery of the metal had been demanded. Leas v. Laird, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 129.

A surety paying a claim before it is due cannot set off the sum paid before the debt has become due. Jackson v. Adamson, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 597.

In an action by executors against a legatee to recover a claim which was held by the testator against him, it seems to have been held that the defendant can set off the amount of a legacy which the testator had bequeathed to him, if the time has not arrived when by statute it is demandable. Sorrelle v. Sorrelle, 5 Ala. 245.

Where suit is brought by executors against a legatee under the will of their testator, on an account for money alleged to be due, he cannot plead as a set-off the amount of his legacy, unless he shows the estate to be solvent and in a condition to be distributed. Dobbs v. Prothro, 55 Ga. 73.

In an action to recover the hire of a slave, it was held that the defendant could not set off a physician's account for attending the slave when sick, though the owner might be liable therefor; it not appearing that the defendant had paid the bill. Brooks v. Cook, 20 Ga. 87.

An incumbrance of unpaid taxes upon land must be paid before the vendee can plead the same in set-off to an action for the recovery of the purchase money. Mills v. Saunders, 4 Neb. 190.

Where the plaintiff sold land to the defendant, and the defendant gave a note for part of the price and agreed to pay the costs of a suit against the plaintiff, and that the costs so paid were to be credited on the note, it was held in an action to enforce the purchase-money note against the land, that the defendant could not reduce a recovery on account of such costs, except by showing payment thereof; the fact that he had suffered judgment to be entered against him therefor was considered immaterial. Hembree v. Glover, 93 Ala. 622.

One who purchases real property, taking a warranty deed therefor and giving back a mortgage to secure purchase money, cannot, on foreclosure of such mortgage, set off the amount of a prior incumbrance which he has not paid, if he has not otherwise been damaged. Griggs v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 10 Mich. 117; 12 Mich. 45.

Liability of Surety.—(See SURETYSHIP).—A surety until he pays the money for his principal, has no demand against him available as a set-off. Jenkins v. Neal, 52 Ark. 418; Walker v. McKay, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 294; Backus v. Spaulding, 129 Mass. 234.

It was held that a surety who has made a note for the purpose of raising money to satisfy a judgment recovered against him for the default of his principal, but who has not paid any money on account of such judgment, is not entitled to set off the judgment against a debt due from him to the principal. Jones v. Wolcott, 15 Gray (Mass.) 541. But it has also been held that if a principal brings an action against his surety on a money demand, the surety may set up in defense the fact of the recovery against him of a judgment on his contract of suretyship. Hannay v. Pell, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 432.

A gave his note to B, who assigned it to C, who sued A on it. A was security for B, on two notes to other parties, which A had taken up by giving his own notes to those parties, which were unpaid and were not commercial paper. It was held that these facts would not give the defendant a right to set off this liability as security for A in an action against him, and hence could not be set off against the plaintiff. Judah v. Potter, 18 Ind. 224. Where A obtained credit from B upon an agreement to pay and take up, as they should become due, certain notes made by B, and indorsed by C, but failed to do so, it was held that B might recover the amount due, and that A could not avail himself of his liability as a set-off. Colvin v. Carter, 4 Ohio 354.

But where land is conveyed subject to a mortgage for which the grantor is personally liable, and the deed declares that the grantee is to pay the mortgage as a part of the purchase money, the contract made by the assumption in the deed is not one of indemnity merely; it is a contract to pay, and the grantor in the deed may set it off against him in a suit brought by the legal representatives of the grantee upon a contract for the payment of money. Rawson v. Copland, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 251; aff'd 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 166. But it seems that this case has been practically overruled on the ground that there was a want of mutuality of the debts. Patterson v. Patterson, 59 N. Y. 574; 17 Am. Rep. 384; Jordan v. National Shoe, etc., Bank, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 512.

Where there is Absolute Liability.—But it seems to be otherwise where the defendant's liability becomes absolutely fixed. In Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Kelly, 26 Ill. App. 394, a buyer, who had given two notes for the purchase price of a reaper, rescinded the sale for breach of warranty. The seller had assigned one of the two notes before maturity. It was held in an action on the other, that the defendant could set off his liability on the assigned note, although payment was not made until after suit brought. The court by Wall, J., said: "It is also objected that the set-off should not prevail because the money was paid upon the note assigned to Mosher after the suit was brought. It is said that the plea of set-off is in the nature of a cross-action, and that the subject-matter thereof must have existed when the principal suit was begun. Admitting this to be sound as a general proposition we think it has no application here. If the action of the appellee was warranted by the terms of the contract and by what occurred subsequently, the return or offer to return operated as a rescission of the contract so far as he was concerned, and he had a right to the immediate return of his notes. If appellant failed to make such return, appellee then had a cause of complaint. If one of the notes was then in the hands of the assignee for value, the

A defendant cannot, of course, set off a debt which has been discharged.¹ A debt, the collection of which has been enjoined,² or which has become barred by the principle of res judicata,³ by the statute of limitations,⁴ or other-liability of appellee to pay it was fixed. Lee v. Pennington, 7 Ill. App. 247; Pollock v. McClurken, 42 Ill. 370. He could not escape, and there was no hardship in permitting him to recover on his plea of set-off the amount he was bound to pay when the suit was commenced, although he did not discharge the liability till afterward. By thus transferring the note appellant imposed the liability upon appellee. The act of appellant was complete before the suit was brought and the legal obligation thereby caused was perfect and unavoidable. Being absolutely bound for this amount, appellee might set it off in this action."

1. A bond which has been canceled cannot be set off. Williams v. Crary, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 368.

It was held that a defendant was not entitled to plead a debt from which the plaintiff had been discharged under the insolvent debtors' act, as a set-off to an action brought by the plaintiff for a demand which had accrued since the discharge. Francis v. Dodsworth, 4 C. B. 202; 56 E. C. L. 201. So, as to a debt for which a prisoner was in execution, and has been discharged on a compromise, though the security taken for the amount afterwards proved to be void. Jacques v. Withy, 1 D. & E. 557. A debt cannot be set off which has been satisfied in law in consequence of the debtor having been taken in execution upon a judgment by which it was recovered. Taylor v. Waters, 5 M. & S. 103; but see Peacock v. Jeffery, 1 Taunt. 426; Simpson v. Hadley, 1 M. & S. 696; Drake v. Mitchell, 3 East 258.

Where an order, drawn by the plaintiff on the defendant, and accepted by the latter, was given for a debt, but not paid, and was thereupon surrendered to the maker, who gave his notes in lieu thereof, it was held that the drawee could not set off such order in an action against him by the maker. The order had not been paid by the defendant, and, on the facts, was considered to have been discharged by plaintiff. Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Key, 86 Ala. 212.

2. Key v. Wilson, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 405.

3. Jones v. Richardson, 5 Met. (Mass.) 247; Harpstrite v. Vase, 3 Ill. App. 121. See Ault v. Zehring, 38 Ind. 429.

In accordance with the rule that a suit brought for one portion of a demand, or for one of several demands, arising out of the same transaction, is a bar to a subsequent suit for the residue of such demand or demands, if they were all due when the suit was commenced, such unrepresented claim may not be subsequently made use of by way of set-off. Miller v. Covert, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 487; Hopf v. Myers, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 270.

To a writ of scire facias directed to a defendant to show cause why money received by virtue of a judgment in the supreme court in his favor, which had been reversed in the court of appeals, should not be restored to the plaintiff, the defendant cannot set up, by way of set-off, the original cause of action upon which the judgment in the supreme court had been obtained. Conover v. Scott, 11 N. J. L. 400.

In an action on a restitution bond executed by a defendant in error in pursuance of the Ohio Code, § 522, the claim on which the original action was brought cannot, by dismissal or otherwise, be made an available set-off. Bickett v. Garner, 31 Ohio St. 28.

But, in Indiana, the statute (2 Rev. Stats. p. 77, § 214) provides that "a wise,¹ cannot be set off. The rule that a defendant can set off a claim against the plaintiff only when he could bring an independent suit thereon, is well illustrated in the rule, founded upon the common-law doctrine that the sovereign cannot be sued in his own courts without his consent, that, when the government is plaintiff, a set-off cannot be allowed.²

party to an action may plead or reply a set-off or payment, to the amount of any cause of action or defense, notwithstanding such set-off or payment is barred by the statute." And this statute has been construed literally. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, vol. 13, p. 767, n. 1.

It was held in Massachusetts, in an action by the assignee of an insolvent debtor on a debt due to the insolvent, that debts due and payable from the insolvent more than six years before the commencement of the action, but less than six years before the commencement of the proceedings in insolvency, may be set off. Parker v. Sanborn, 7 Gray (Mass.) 191. In the decision of this case the court by Metcalf, J., said: "After the property of an insolvent debtor has been assigned under the insolvent laws, and thus sequestered and placed in the custody of the law in trust for his creditors, the Statute of Limitations does not run against their claims upon his estate in the hands of his assignee. Minot v. Thatcher, 7 Met. (Mass.) 352; 41 Am. Dec. 444; Willard v. Clarke, 7 Met. (Mass.) 437. The assignee, in bringing a suit upon a demand which is due to the insolvent before the commencement of proceedings in insolvency, represents the estate; and in such suit all claims of the defendant may be set off which existed at the time of the first publication of notice. Aldrich v. Campbell, 4 Gray (Mass.) 284. A claim against the estate of the debtor in the hands of his assignee, stands upon a different ground, in this respect, from the right of action against the debtor personally. That right is not taken away nor suspended by the proceedings in insolvency, and is therefore barred by the lapse of the usual period of limitation. Colleston v. Hailey, 6 Gray (Mass.) 519."

1. The statute of bankruptcy, in regulating the proof of claims before the register of bankrupts, recognized the right of set-off in all cases of mutual debts or mutual credits, and provided that only the balance should be allowed and paid, but also provided "that no creditor, proving his debt or claim, shall be allowed to maintain any suit at law or in equity therefor against the bankrupt, but shall be deemed to have waived all right of action and suit against the bankrupt." It was held that a creditor who, in making proof of his claim before the register of bankruptcy omitted to show that the bankrupt had an unsatisfied claim against him, cannot, when sued by the assignee for such claim, plead as a set-off the amount allowed him by the register; the party defendant, in pleading a set-off, in effect, brings an action for the amount of that set-off, and, since the creditor, by presenting and proving his claim before the register, is to be deemed as waiving "all right of action or suit against the bankrupt," it would be clearly contrary to the evident intent of the statute, to allow a creditor to do that indirectly which the law precludes him from doing directly. Russell v. Owen, 61 Mo. 185. See Brown v. Farmers' Bank, 6 Bush (Ky.) 198.

2. White v. Governor, 18 Ala. 767; Com. v. Rhodes, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 318; State v. Leckie, 14 La. Ann. 646; State v. Bradley, 37 La. Ann. 623; State v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 34 Md. 344; Com. v. Matlack, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 303; Battle v. Thompson, 65 N. Car. 416; Treasurers v. Cleary, 3 Rich. (S. Car.) 372; Moore v. Tate, 87 Tenn. 725; Borden v. Houston, 2 Tex. 594; Bates v. Republic, 2 Tex. 616; Chevalier v. State, 10 Tex. 315. The rule stated in the text forbids the court of chancery to entertain a bill by a public creditor against the State, to compel a set-off of a demand he holds due from the State against one of independent origin, which the State holds against him. Raymond v. State, 54 Miss. 562; 28 Am. Rep. 382. See BONDS, vol. 2, p. 466 §.

But, in Ohio, it seems to be held that, although a judgment cannot be rendered against the State, yet, in an action by the State, the defendant may set off a claim against it. State

As no action can be brought by one partner against his co-partner upon any partnership transaction, unless there has been a settlement of the whole concern or of the claim in question, and a promise of payment, the unsettled dealings of either partner with the firm cannot be set off in an action at law by one partner against the other.¹

The claim sought to be set-off must be one which can be recovered in an action in the same court. A sum which is greater than the court's jurisdiction cannot be set off.² And the same rule which prevents a plaintiff from dividing his claim in order to give a certain court jurisdiction³ will preclude a defendant from setting off against the plaintiff's demand, part of a cross-demand, Statutes Permitting Set-off Against Government.—There are statutory enactments which permit set-offs to be employed in an action by the government. See review of cases decided under such provisions in Moore v. Tate, 87 Tenn. 725.

A defendant must, when he desires to avail himself of such set-off, strictly comply with the statute. Biscoe v. State, 19 Ark. 559; Frier v. State, 11 Fla. 300.

See Weaver v. Rogers, 44 N. H. 112. To illustrate: if plaintiff and defendant are partners in a concern, and plaintiff sues defendant for a debt separate from the concern, the defendant cannot set off a balance due to him on the partnership account; for he could not sue for such balance while the partnership lasted, and therefore cannot set it off. Fremont v. Coupland, 2 Bing. 170; 9 E. C. L. 366.

And setting off such claim after the partnership has been dissolved, would not, under the usual provisions for set-off, be admissible, for the reason, if none other, that it is not a liquidated claim. But under a statute providing that a set-off "must consist of matter arising out of a debt, duty, or contract, liquidated or not," it was held that an unliquidated demand growing out of unsettled copartnership accounts may, the partnership having been dissolved, be pleaded in set-off (Irish v. Snelson, 16 Ind. 365), if the plea shows the balance due the defendant to be growing out of the entire partnership transaction. Hendry v. Hendry, 32 Ind. 349. In a suit by the executrix of one partner against the surviving partner on an open note, the defendant cannot set off an item arising from a single partnership transaction. McKay v. Overton, 65 Tex. 82.

Where a partner, after drawing checks upon the funds of the firm for his own personal use and charging them against himself, was succeeded by another partner, he selling out his interest to the new firm, it was held that the new firm could not sue him at law for the amount of the new checks, nor use them as offset against an action brought by him against the firm; the mutual liabilities of the old firm should be settled by an accounting. Gardiner v. Fargo, 58 Mich. 72.

But see McClain v. Kincaid, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 232; Glass v. Moss, 1 How. (Miss.) 519. It was said to be a proper practice, where the defendant in a summary process has a set-off which exceeds the summary jurisdiction of the court, and it is alleged that the plaintiff is insolvent, for the court, on being satisfied of its merits, to order the plaintiff to declare in the higher jurisdiction, so as to enable the defendant to set up his discount; and this practice was adopted in such case. Beckham v. Peay, 1 Bailey (S. Car.) 121.

the whole of which is not within the court's jurisdiction.¹ A set-off can only be pleaded in a county in which an original proceeding for the cause of action could be brought.²

While it is not necessary that the demand which the plaintiff seeks to set off should have been due at the time when the plaintiff's cause of action accrued,³ yet, it is not properly a subject of set-off unless it existed when the plaintiff brought his action and at that time belonged to the defendant; it must at that time have been a subsisting cause of action by the defendant against the plaintiff.⁴ It is not sufficient that the defendant held an unma-

It has been said that the great purpose of the statute is to effect a liquidation of mutual debts. It looks at the balance of the debt; and therefore if one of two persons having mutual dealings will sue the other instead of exchanging discharges, the party sued is allowed to set off his debt against the other as a bar to the action. In other words, the plaintiff is made to pay the costs as a penalty for his wanton and obstinate litigation. But this is applicable only where both debts existed at the time the suit was brought. The plaintiff is culpable if he sues when there is really no debt due to him, and is justly subjected to the costs. But it is the other way when the plaintiff becomes the defendant's debtor after he has brought his own suit. Haughton v. Leary, 3 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 21. In the opinion delivered by the general court of Maryland in the case of Clarke v. Magruder, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 77, the court by Chase, C. J., said: "The court are of opinion that the defendant is not entitled to the set-off claimed, as his right to the plaintiff's note accrued subsequent to the commencement of this action. If this set-off was allowed, great mischief would result from it. It would burden the plaintiff with the costs of suit, although, at the time he instituted his suit, he had a good cause of action, and against which, at the time, there was no defense, and it would encourage and sanction a practice which ought not to receive any countenance or favor from this court—the practice of buying up claims against a plaintiff, which, instead of promoting, would be a perversion of justice.”

The doctrine stated in the text is sometimes incorporated in the statutes. In Vermont it is declared by statute that “any sum not due and payable before the service of the original writ in the action” shall not be allowed in set-off. Vermont Rev. Stats. 1863, p. 335.

So the statutes of New Hampshire provided that “no debt or demand shall be set off as aforesaid, unless a right of action existed thereon at the commencement of the plaintiff’s action.” New Hampshire Rev. Stats., ch. 187, § 10, p. 375; New Hampshire Gen. Stats. ch. 208, § 8.

In Rhode Island the demands which may be set off are limited to claims “which existed at the commencement of the action and then belonged to the defendant in his own right, and for which he might maintain a suit in his own name.” Rhode Island Gen. Stats., ch. 201, § 14. Under this statute, where a voluntary assignee allowed certain bank deposits to remain in the name of the assignor, and without bringing suit for them until after the maturity of notes held by the bank on which the assignor was liable as indorser, it was held that, as the right of set-off was, by the statute, determined by the state of the claims at “the commencement of the action,” the bank could retain the deposits in set-off against the notes. Nightingale v. Chaffee, 11 R. I. 609; 23 Am. Rep. 531.

The Massachusetts Gen. Statutes declared that no demand could be set off unless it existed at the commencement of the suit, and then belonged to the defendant. Backus v. Spaulding, 129 Mass. 236.

The plaintiff’s action of assumpsit for goods sold and delivered was commenced on the first of January, 1848. It was sought to set off an order in favor of the defendant, drawn upon and accepted by the plaintiff, the acceptance being to the effect that it should be payable when four bureaux were delivered. There was conflicting evidence as to the point whether four bureaux had been delivered at the time of the commencement of the action, and this question was submitted to the jury, and they were properly instructed that if at the time of the commencement of the action, the order was not due and payable by the terms of the acceptance, it should not be set off. Toppan v. Jenness, 21 N. H. 232.

A plea which merely states that the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant “at the time of the plea pleaded” is bad. Evans v. Prosser, 3 T. R. 186.

A plea of set-off ought to allege the debt sought to be set off to have been owing to the defendant at the commencement of the action. McConnell v. Morrison, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 206.

A note made by the plaintiff which was purchased by the defendant after suit commenced cannot be set off. Rogerson v. Ladbroke, 1 Bing. 418; 8 E. C. L. 418; Reynolds v. Thomas, 28 Kan. 810; Hardy v. Corlis, 21 N. H. 356; Carpenter v. Butterfield, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 145; Jefferson Co. Bank v. Chapman, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 322; Whitaker v. Turnbull, 18 N. J. L. 172. Contra, in Maryland, Clarke v. Magruder, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 77. See Foley v. Mason, 6 Md. 51; Annan v. Houck, 4 Gill (Md.) 330; 45 Am. Dec. 133.

A defendant who, pending the action, purchases an overdue bond of the plaintiff, cannot set off such bond against the plaintiff’s demand. Riddick v. Moore, 65 N. Car. 382.

It was held that a defendant who, when sued, was in possession of a sealed note drawn by the plaintiff, but not then assigned, could not use it as a discount, although, after the plaintiff brought his suit, he obtained an assignment of the note dated back before the writ was issued. Bishop v. Tucker, 4 Rich. (S. Car.) 178.

A judgment recovered by the defendant or assigned to him after action brought, cannot be pleaded as a set-off. Evans v. Prosser, 3 T. R. 186, overruling Reynolds v. Beerling, 1 Dougl. 112, n.; Irvin v. Wright, 2 Ill. 135; Bibb v. Saunders, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 86; Hawthorne v. Roberts, Hard. (Ky.) 75; Andrews v. Varrell, 46 N. H. 17; Keith v. Smith, 1 Swan. (Tenn.) 92; Wilson v. Reaves, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 173. See Rowe v. Langley, 48 N. H. 391; Weaver v. Rogers, 44 N. H. 112.

But, where the defendant, as surety of the plaintiff, who was insolvent, had paid a certain sum on a judgment against the plaintiff and the defendant as his surety, he was permitted to set off the amount paid, although such payment was made after suit brought, the judgment having been entered and being due before the commencement of the action. Thompson v. McClelland, 29 Pa. St. 478.

A loss under a policy of insurance, in order to be set off under the statute of set-off, must be adjusted before the commencement of the action; for, until adjustment, it is unliquidated damages, and not a debt due. Cumming v. Forrester, 1 M. & S. 494; Wienholt v. Roberts, 2 Camp. 586.

Where two cross-actions were referred to arbitration, and in one, which was an action of trespass, the arbitrator found for the plaintiff for 40s. damages, with costs, whilst in the other he awarded 102*l.* to the defendant, such sum to be paid at a future day, it was held that the latter could not, before that day, set off that sum against the damages and taxed costs in the action of trespass. Young v. Gye, 10 Moore 198; 17 E. C. L. 139.

The defendant cannot set off by a plea to the further maintenance of the action, a debt which accrued after action brought, and before plea pleaded. Richards v. James, 2 Exch. 471; Houghton v. Leary, 3 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 24.

Whether Damages for Illegal Attachment May be Set Off in Trial of Principal Cause.—While it is admitted that, where attachment proceedings are instituted after the commencement of the action, a claim for damages sustained by reason of the wrongful suing out of the writ is not a claim held by the defendant at the commencement of the suit, as required by the Iowa statute, and cannot be pleaded by way of set-off in the principal suit, it was, however, held that where the affidavit and bond of attachment are filed, and the writ sued out at the commencement of the action, if the writ is wrongfully sued out, any damages sustained by the defendant therefrom, constitute "a claim held by him at the commencement of the suit," in such a sense that the same may be set off against the plaintiff's demand in the same action. Reed v. Chubb, 9 Iowa 178; Zinn v. Williams, 9 Iowa 178, n.; Stadler v. Parmalee, 10 Iowa 23. But this has been questioned. Waterman on Set-off, § 72. And in a dissenting opinion in the last-cited case the court by Wright, C. J., said: "I have never supposed that a defendant could set off, on the trial of the main action, the damages resulting to him by reason of the wrongful suing out of the attachment. It is not, in my opinion, a claim held by him at the time the suit was commenced. The language of the law is that the attachment can issue only at the commencement or during the progress of the proceedings. Section 1846, Code. Until the attachment issues there can be no damages, no claim in favor of the party defendant. Then if it has not issued and cannot issue before the commencement of the action, how can it be a claim held, within the meaning of the statute, at the time of the commencement or institution of the suit."

In a later case the court, by Wright, J., said that the court as then organized would, perhaps, have departed from these cases, but that the question was no longer left open, since section 3238 of the revision of 1860 expressly recognizes the right of a defendant to claim such damages in the trial of the principal cause. Branch Bank v. Morris, 13 Iowa 136.

In a late decision, where the question was not so dependent upon the terms of the statute as in the above-cited cases, it was held that if an attachment is dissolved by the court, the damages sustained by reason of such attachment cannot be set off in that action. Gunnis v. Cluff, 111 Pa. St. 512.

Peculiar Statutory Provisions.—Although the text states the rule under the more common statutes of set-off, this requirement is modified by some of the statutes. Thus, in Virginia, it suffices if the demand was due at the time of filing the plea or notice of set-off. 4 Min. Inst. 659; Ritchie v. Moore, 5 Munf. (Va.) 395; 7 Am. Dec. 688; Clopton v. Morris, 6 Leigh (Va.) 278. But whilst a set-off may thus accrue, or be acquired, either before or after the suit is brought, and up to the time of the filing of the plea or notice, and, possibly, even up to the time of trial, yet it is with this proviso, that if acquired after suit brought, the plaintiff will be entitled to a judgment for costs, even though the set-off extinguishes the plaintiff's claim, and leaves an excess due to the defendant. 4 Min. Inst. 659; 2 Tuck. Com. 108; Allen v. Hart, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 729; Barton's Law Pr. 147.

In Texas the statute authorizes the defendant to plead in set-off any claim which he may have acquired before pleading, though after the institution of tured claim against the plaintiff at the time of the institution of the suit, which has afterwards matured into a debt, it must have been a debt at that time.¹ Likewise a demand in the defendant's favor, accruing subsequent to the commencement of the suit from a conditional liability incurred before the suit brought, may not be set off.² So, a demand barred by the Statute of Limitations and revived by a new promise cannot be set off in an action suit by the plaintiff; but if he acquires such claim after suit brought, the plaintiff recovers the costs of the action. So the defendant was permitted to set off a note assigned to him, after the commencement of the action. Thomas v. Young, 5 Tex. 253. And it has been held that a draft acquired after the commencement of the suit may be pleaded in set-off by an amendment. Gaines v. Salmon, 16 Tex. 311. And the defendant may plead by way of set-off and in reconvention a judgment assigned to him after suit brought, but the plaintiff, upon proof of his demand, will recover the costs. Parrott v. Underwood, 10 Tex. 48.

1. So a note of the plaintiff's given before the commencement of the suit, but not due at the time the suit was brought, though before the plea pleaded, and at the time of the trial, cannot be set off. Rogerson v. Ladbroke, 1 Bing. 93; 8 E. C. L. 418; Henry v. Butler, 32 Conn. 140; Edwards v. Temple, 2 Harr. (Del.) 322. But see Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Kelly, 26 Ill. App. 394.

Where the defendant makes a conditional bargain for a note against the plaintiff, but the agreement is not executed until the suit is brought, it is not such a subsisting debt as can be set off. Shepherd v. Turner, 3 McCord (S. Car.) 249; 15 Am. Dec. 631; McDonald v. Harrison, 12 Mo. 447.

So an award published after the commencement of the plaintiff's action is not a proper set-off, although the subject-matter of the submission was a claim subsisting at the date of the suit, and the agreement under which it was made had been entered into before that time. Varney v. Brewster, 14 N. H. 49.

R was factorized as the debtor of F. At the time of the service of the process he owed F, but had at the time a contract with F upon R's performance, of which F would become largely indebted to him. This contract was not then performed and nothing was due upon it, but it had since been fully performed by R, and he had a claim upon it against F much larger than the debt originally owed by him to F. Held, that R could not set off his claim against F. Parsons v. Root, 41 Conn. 161.

But in Tennessee, the defendant may plead, by way of set-off, "mutual demands held by the defendant against the plaintiff at the time of action brought, and matured when offered in set-off." Tennessee Code, 1858, § 2918.

In Indiana, under a like statute, a demand may be set off if due when offered at the trial, although not due at the commencement of the action. Shannon v. Wilson, 19 Ind. 112. See Goldthwait v. Bradford, 36 Ind. 149.

In Iowa, under § 1740, Code of 1851, any claim which would be the subject of an action against the plaintiff, and was held by the defendant, either matured or not at the time the suit was commenced, may be set off. Dunham v. Dennis, 9 Iowa 543; Campbell v. Fox, 11 Iowa 318.

In Massachusetts, where, after a suit is commenced by an administrator, the estate of his intestate is represented insolvent, the defendant may set off a note against the intestate which falls due pending the suit, though not due and payable when the action was commenced. Bigelow v. Folger, 2 Met. (Mass.) 255.

2. Where there was only a contingency that the defendant would be compelled to pay certain claims of third persons, which would then be due him from the plaintiff, but the payment had not been made at the time of action brought, it could not be set-off. Miller v. Rigney, 16 Ind. 327.

In Carpenter v. Coit, 1 D. Chip. (Vt.) 88, it was decided that the defendant in an action on a note could not set off a liability incurred before the commencement of the action, against which the plaintiff was bound to indemnify him, unless the defendant paid the demand previous to the bringing of the action.

Where the defendant had, before the institution of the suit, entered into a brought while the bar existed.¹ But, in order to defeat a set-off under the Statute of Limitations, it must appear that the causes of set-off did not accrue within six years next before the commencement of the suit:² that the statutory period for bringing an action on the demand has expired thereafter is no objection to allowing it in set-off.³

A demand, in order that it may be set off, must not only be due at the time when the action is brought but it must continue due until pleaded⁴ and at the time of trial.⁵ And it must continue due in the same form.⁶

recognizance for the plaintiff in a suit he then had pending, in which suit the plaintiff failed, and the defendant, after the commencement of the suit against him by the plaintiff, had been compelled to pay the sum of twenty-five dollars upon the recognizance, it was held that the defendant could not set off such sum. Houston v. Fellows, 27 Vt. 634.

A mere liability as surety or indorsee, existing at the time, but not discharged till after the commencement of the plaintiff's suit, cannot be allowed in set-off. Cox v. Cooper, 3 Ala. 256; Goldthwaite v. National Bank, 67 Ala. 549; Balser v. Wood, 69 Ind. 122; Houghton v. Houghton, 37 Me. 72; Robinson v. Safford, 57 Me. 163.

1. Lee v. Lee, 31 Ga. 26; 76 Am. Dec. 681.

2. The text states the rule generally prevailing. In Alabama, a claim barred by limitation at the time when plaintiff's right of action accrued is not available in set-off as a "legal subsisting claim." Washington v. Timberlake, 74 Ala. 259.

3. Walker v. Clements, 15 Q. B. 1046; 69 E. C. L. 1046; Gilchrist v. Williams, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 235; Brumble v. Brown, 71 N. Car. 513; Jacks v. Moore, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 391; Taylor v. Gould, 57 Pa. St. 152; Turnbull v. Strohecker, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 210; Crook v. M'Greal, 3 Tex. 487; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, vol. 13, p. 767. See Stillwell v. Bertrand, 22 Ark. 375.

In Vermont, Massachusetts, Michigan and Mississippi, the statute declares that the time of limitation of debts and contracts, alleged by way of set-off, shall be computed in like manner, as if an action had been commenced thereon at the date of the plaintiff's action. Rev. Stats. of Vermont (ed. of 1863), p. 446; Genl. Stats. of Massachusetts (ed. of 1860), p. 671; Comp. L. of Michigan (ed. of 1857), p.

1409; Rev. Code of Mississippi (ed. of 1857), p. 402.

In Maine, the statute (Maine Rev. Stats. (ed. of 1857), p. 512) provides that the time of the limitation of a debt or contract, filed by way of set-off, "shall be computed as if an action had been commenced therefor at the time when the plaintiff's action was commenced, unless the defendant is deprived of the benefit of the set-off by the non-suit or other act of the plaintiff; and when he is thus defeated of a judgment on the merits of such debt or contract, he may commence an action thereon within the time limited."

But the Alabama Code, § 2682, provides that "when the defendant pleads a set-off to the plaintiff's demand, to which the plaintiff replies the Statute of Limitations, the defendant is, nevertheless, entitled to his set-off where it was a legal subsisting claim at the time the right of action accrued to the plaintiff on the claim in suit."

4. 2 Pars. Contr. 742.

A plea of set-off which states that "before and at the time of the commencement of the action, the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant" without inserting the words "and still is indebted," is bad. Dendy v. Powell, 3 M. & W. 442; 6 D. P. C. 577. A plea of set-off ought to allege the debt sought to be set off to be owing at the time of the plea pleaded; M'Connell v. Morrison, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 206; if it does not, it is demurrable. Robinson v. Mace, 16 Ark. 97.

5. If the demand has been paid, Eyton v. Littledale, 4 Exch. 159, or has been assigned to another party, New Quebrada Co. v. Carr, L. R., 4 C. P. 651, it cannot be received in evidence. 2 Whart. Contr., § 1020.

6. The merger of a note or bond in a judgment during the pendency of the suit, will preclude the right to use it as a set-off. The original demand cannot

It has been held that the defendant, since he cannot be permitted to carry on two suits at the same time and for the same cause of action, will not be permitted to set off a demand on which he has brought an action which is still pending.¹ But other authorities are to the effect that the fact that the defendant has brought a suit on a demand and the suit is still pending, is no objection to allowing it in set-off,² even though the plaintiff has paid the money into court in such former action.³

be set off because it is gone, nor the judgment because it is subsequent to the commencement of the action. Bibb v. Saunders, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 86; Mizell v. Moore, 7 Ired. (N. Car.) 255; Lowell v. Lane, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 292. To illustrate: A commenced his action against B February 26, 1862. B filed in set off a certain note, dated March 8, 1855, which had been indorsed and delivered to him for a full consideration before the commencement of this suit; he also filed a set-off of a certain judgment against the plaintiff which had been rendered March 6, 1862. The judgment was founded upon the above-mentioned note. It was held that since the note, although it was a valid claim when this suit was commenced, was then in suit and had since passed into judgment, and it was no longer a proper ground of action but became merged in the judgment and could no longer be treated as a note, either as the foundation of a suit, or in set-off. Neither could the judgment be set off in this action because it was recovered since this suit was commenced. Andrews v. Varrell, 46 N. H. 17.

If the items of the defendant's account, offered in evidence by way of set off in a cause, are, at the time, actually in judgment, such judgment will bar the right to give the items of the account in evidence, whether the suit on the items was brought, and the judgment recovered, after such cause was pending, or before. Smiley v. Dewey, 17 Ohio 156.

1. Lock v. Miller, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 13; Rankin v. Harper, 4 Ind. 585; Snodgrass v. Smith, 13 Ind. 393.

It would seem to result from the requirement that the claim must be owned by the defendant at the commencement of the suit that a debt cannot be pleaded as a set-off, if there be at the time a suit pending against the plaintiff for the same debt in favor of one who was at the bringing of said suit the true owner of the said set-off. Whitaker v. Pope, 48 Ga. 15.

It is provided by New York Code Civ. Proc., § 495, that a plaintiff may demur to a counterclaim on which the defendant demands affirmative judgment, where it appears on its face that there is another action pending between the same parties for the same cause. And it has been held that where such fact does not appear on the face of the counterclaim it may, under section 514, providing that where the answer contains a counterclaim, the reply may set forth new matter constituting a defense to the counterclaim, be shown by the reply thereto. Ansorge v. Kaiser, 3 N. Y. Supp. 785.

It was held that the defendant in an action of assumpsit might plead as a set-off a claim upon which he had already obtained a judgment against the plaintiff, from which the latter had taken an appeal which was still pending. It was considered that this could work the plaintiff's own justice, as such a plea and the offering of evidence under it would be a satisfaction of the judgment already obtained by the defendant and enable the plaintiff to enjoin its collection in the event of its affirmance in the appellate court, and that the effect of allowing the plea would be to give the plaintiff another trial in respect to the defendant's claim, the very object the plaintiff was seeking by his appeal. Gaddis v. Leeson, 55 Ill. 522; King v. Bradley, 44 Ill. 342; contra, Tomlinson v. Nelson, 49 Wis. 679.

3. 7 Wait. Act. & Def. 477, citing Evans v. Prosser, 3 T. R. 186; Naylor

A few early cases incline to the view that when the matter sought to be set off is in the form of a judgment, the fact that a writ of error is pending thereon will not defeat the right;¹ but a contrary rule has been followed in later decisions.² Yet, where the latter view was maintained, the effect of an appeal in such cases is not to extinguish, but merely to suspend the right of set-off. The remedy of a party is to obtain the stay of proceedings on the judgment against him until the appeal is disposed of.³

The defendant may set off a secured claim without surrendering security.⁴ It appears that the price of goods bargained and sold, but not delivered in consequence of the plaintiff's refusal to pay the price thereof, may be set off, notwithstanding the defendant has a lien on the goods for such price.⁵

6. The Requirement of Mutuality as to Claims in Set-off—a. GENERAL STATEMENT OF THE RULE.—The statutes of set-off, whether they extend the right to "debts," "claims," "demands," or other causes of action, commonly require that they should be mutual, i. e., exist between the parties to the action.⁶ It would seem to result no less from the construction of the terms of the statute than the

v. Schenck, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 135; Stroh v. Uhrich, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 57.

A suit having been brought upon a note, the defendant paid into court the amount of the debt and costs. The plaintiff took the money out of court, but declined accepting it in satisfaction of his claim, because he had filed the note as a set-off on a suit which the defendant had brought against him. Held, that the debt was paid, and the defendant could not rely on the note as a set-off. *Molineux v. When that claim is satisfied, he may be compelled to release or reassign the collaterals, but his right to sue the claim itself is an absolute one, not in any way affected by his possession of the securities, and he cannot, therefore, be compelled to surrender them as a condition of enforcing his legal demand. Nothing can be set off unless it could be sued upon; and on the other hand, any claim coming within the statute can be set off if it could be sued."

fact that set-off is, in effect, a cross-action by the defendant against the plaintiff, that the matters sought to be set off must be due from all the parties plaintiff to all the parties defendant in the action, and from and to those persons only who are parties to the action.¹

(1) Must be Due from the Plaintiff.—The claim which the defendant seeks to set off must be due from the plaintiff in the action.² Therefore, where a holder of a check drawn in his favor by a depositor in a bank does not have a right of action thereon against

Set-off Under Bankruptcy Laws.—The same mutuality is generally requisite to constitute a mutual credit under the bankruptcy laws which is required to make mutual debts under the ordinary statute of set-off. Stamforth v. Fellowes, 1 Marsh. 184.

Claims Payable Into or Out of Certain "Funds" of a Municipality or State.—It has been said that in an action by one against the State for any indebtedness, as for salary or otherwise, the State may set off an indebtedness of the plaintiff to the "sinking fund," since the sinking fund was the property of the State, specially set apart to be managed by the officers of the State appointed for that purpose, as trustees, for the ultimate redemption of the bonds of the State; and, therefore, the person indebted to the sinking fund is indebted to the State. State v. Dickinson, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 597.

It was held that a claim payable out of a special fund in the city treasury to an individual might be set off against the claim due by the individual to the "general fund" of the city. Eaton Rapids v. Houpt, 63 Mich. 371. So in the case of McBrian v. Grand Rapids, 56 Mich. 95, where the plaintiffs had a contract with the city for building a sewer and were to be paid out of a special fund created for the purpose, the city was permitted to set off the claim against them for water used, which was, when collected, payable into the "general fund."

In an action against a county to recover for furnishing evidence relative to swamp lands, the defendant sought to set off plaintiff's indebtedness to it for the loan of school moneys. It was fairly inferable from the agreement upon which this suit was brought that plaintiff was to be paid out of the funds which should be received for swamp lands by the county from the general government. It was held that defendant's and plaintiff's demands were in favor of and against the county as trustee for the school fund, and therefore, the set-off would be allowed; a demand due a county for money borrowed of the county school fund may be set off against a demand due by the county for services rendered on behalf of the same fund, and which, by contract, are to be paid for out of it. *Smallwood v. The debt of an ancestor cannot be set off in a suit by the heir, although the latter may have come into possession of assets by descent, which might by proper measures be made answerable, or taken in execution for the ancestor's debt. Scott v. Scott, 17 Md. 78.

A plea of set-off which shows that the defendant drew an order on a

the bank,¹ he cannot set off such check in an action against him by the bank.² So, where the payee of a note transfers it before it is due, and afterwards, on the default of the maker, takes it up and brings an action thereon, the defendant cannot avail himself of a defense which he held against an indorsee.³ The assignment of the plaintiff's claim before trial will not prevent the defendant from entering judgment upon a verdict for a balance due in his favor, where payment and a set-off were pleaded, and the trial was between the original parties to the record.⁴

(2) Must be Due to the Defendant.—It is equally essential that the claim should be due the defendant; for, though the defendant were allowed to set off a claim due a third person, the plaintiff could, nevertheless, not rely upon such recovery as a defense to an action subsequently brought by the true owner upon the same claim.⁵ In an action by a purchaser against the vendor of third person, and gave it to the plaintiff, is bad, without an averment that the plaintiff received the amount. Shearman v. Fellows, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 459.

It was held that where A sues for the use of B, a set-off against B cannot be pleaded. Orphans' Court v. Ogle, Wright (Ohio) 281.

B and C agreed with A to sell a negro belonging to A, and to apply the proceeds to a debt due by A, for which B and C were sureties, and the balance to any demands held by B against A. Amongst the demands held by B against A was a sealed note, which, after the agreement, he assigned to a third person. B died, and in an action by A against C, survivor, to recover the price of the negro who had been sold, it was held that C could not set off the amount of the sealed note. Kimberl v. Glover, 13 Rich. (S. C.) 191.

The defendant in an action on book account, will not be allowed to offset against the plaintiff's claim, a demand which accrued in favor of a third person against the plaintiff, and in which the defendant had no legal interest, notwithstanding the defendant and such third person may both have expected that it would be so applied. McIntyre v. Corss, 18 Vt. 451.

A party who has neither a general nor special property in goods placed by him in the hands of a manufacturer for finishing, who refused to redeliver them on demand, cannot set off the value of such goods, in an action of assumpsit against him by the manufacturer, for work and labor bestowed upon other goods. Collins v. Butts, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 399; 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 139.

To a suit for foreclosure promissory notes were pleaded as set-off; a replication denying title to the notes in defendant, and showing it to be in another, was held good. Reilly v. Rucker, 16 Ind. 303.

A gave a mortgage to B, who afterwards took a lease of the mortgaged premises. The premises were sold after the death of A, and B continued to occupy as tenant under the subsequent owners. In scire facias on the mortgage by B against the executor of A, the rents due by B to the subsequent owners were not payment on the mortgage debt and could not be used as a set-off; the rent due to the subsequent owners accrued under a different right from the mortgage, and was not a perception profits under it;

a defective title, the latter generally cannot, assuming that the statute extends the right of set-off to claims of such unliquidated nature, and in such actions, set off rents and profits, as the occupant is personally liable to the true owner.¹

Showing a plaintiff's indebtedness to a stranger of course is not sufficient; there must, also, be an assignment to the defendant.² The claim sought to be set off must be owned absolutely by the defendant; a person holding a chose in action assigned to him conditionally has no right to set it off.³ A claim which the defendant has borrowed for the occasion cannot be set off.⁴ So in the scire facias it was res inter alios acta. Scott v. Fritz, 51 Pa. St. 418.

Although the right of a bank to set off its claim against the plaintiff, as drawer of a protested bill of exchange discounted by it, against his demand for the undrawn deposit arising from the discount of the paper, is suspended during its ownership by one to whom the bank has transferred it, and who has a lien thereon, it was held to revive when the bank extinguishes the lien and repossesses itself of the paper. Robinson v. Howes, 20 N. Y. 84.

A set-off due to the maker of a note, by one who has become beneficially interested in it, without the legal title by indorsement, cannot be enforced to defeat the right of a subsequent holder to recover on the note. Pitts v. Shortridge, 7 Ala. 494.

It has been said that set-off is in the nature of a cross-action, and can only be good in favor of one who could maintain an action upon it in his own name. See Carew v. Northrup, 5 Ala. 367.

So where a statute provided that only the payee of a note, his indorsee, or personal representative, should have a right to maintain in his own name, an action on such note, a defendant who held a note, but which was neither payable nor indorsed to him, was not allowed to use such note in set off. Bell v. Horton, 1 Ala. 413; Carew v. Northrup, 5 Ala. 367.

An order by which A requests B to pay to C $2,000, "out of the money received on my account from the insurance office when collected," was held not to be a bill of exchange, and an indorsement of it conveys no right of action to the indorsee, and, therefore, the indorsee cannot set off such instrument in an action by the drawer against him. Hamilton v. Myrick, 3 Ark. 541.

So it was held that a defendant cannot set off a judgment for his use in another's name. Harrel v. Petty, 11 Rich. (S. Car.) 373. But see Norwood v. Norwood, 4 Har. & J. (Md.) 112.

Under the Provision in Bankruptcy Acts for Setting Off Mutual Credits.—So there can be a set-off under the statutes which authorize a set-off against an insolvent where there existed a mutual credit, only when the credit existed between the insolvent and the person seeking the set-off.

In Ex parte Hale, 3 Ves. 304, the acceptor of a bill of exchange having become a bankrupt, the indorser was compelled to take it up, and being indebted to the bankrupt ninety pounds, prayed that he might be at liberty to set off that sum against the amount of the bill which he had been compelled to pay. The Lord Chancellor said: "There was no mutual credit. There was a debt created upon the estate and due at the time of the bankruptcy, but that debt was not due to you, therefore, in that respect the set-off fails." To the same effect are Chance v. Isaacs, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 592; Tuscumbria, etc., R. Co. v. Rhodes, 8 Ala. 206.

But if the occupant is not so liable, the set-off will be allowed. Locke v. Alexander, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 412.

A plea in set-off alleged that the plaintiff "was, and still is indebted" to a stranger, and "which said sum remains due and unpaid, and owing to the defendant." It was held that the plea was defective in that it did not allege specifically that the debt to the stranger had been assigned to the defendant, and that the debt was due the assignor prior to the assignment. Dilley v. Roman, 17 Md. 337.

where the defendant has obtained possession of the demand from a third person upon the understanding that it shall be his property, or that he shall be liable to the owner, only in the event of his being able to set it off, it cannot be so employed by the defendant.¹ While it seems to be necessary when the defendant seeks to set off an assigned claim that a consideration should have been paid by him,² the amount paid for the claim is immaterial.³ If the defendant is otherwise a bona fide assignee of a demand against the plaintiff, he may set it off though he has not actually paid for it, but only agreed to pay.⁴

C, to whom O was indebted for a "balance of accounts on book," assigned the same to S, and authorized him to collect the same in his own name and requiring S to account to him for the amount collected, and reassign any balance which might remain uncollected. No consideration passed from S to C for the assignment, and the sole object of it was to enable S to make use of the same as a set-off against a suit of O, to whom S was indebted, should one be brought. O did bring a suit against S, but when S sought to make this set-off therein, it was held that the balance so assigned was not a subject of set-off, since S was not the "equitable and bona fide owner" of such balance within the meaning of Connecticut General Statutes, p. 417, § 6, allowing such owners to maintain suit in their own names, and the avails under the assignment not being to his own use and benefit if recovered. Olmstead v. Scutt, 55 Conn. 125.

A note having been assigned to enable the assignee to use it as a set-off, with the agreement that he should account for only so much as he should get the benefit of in the suit, it was held that he could not avail himself of it as a set-off in equity in case the rights of others than the maker were involved. Tinly v. Martin, 80 Ky. 463.

It was held that a claim against the plaintiff, which had been assigned to the defendant before suit brought and in contemplation of an action, in these words: "I assign this claim to you if there comes any difficulty," could not be set off. It was said that although the absence of consideration might not affect the validity of the assignment, were it otherwise full in its substance, yet the conditional character of it showed that unless there was some difficulty between the defendant and plaintiff in reference to the subject-matter of this action, the assignment was not to operate. Were the condition one which imposed some duty or obligation upon the defendant, or subjected him to any personal or pecuniary disadvantage, however slight, it might have had the effect designed; but the assignment was objected to as being a conditional assignment without consideration, and intended to further litigation. Arnold v. Johnston, 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 249.

2. A, being indebted to B in the sum of $6,000, assigned to him the note of C for $3,000, under the agreement that, on the payment of C's note for $3,000, the note of $6,000 should be given up to A. D, the agent of C, took up the note of $3,000, by substituting other securities, and also took an assignment of the note for $6,000, which he delivered to C. A, having other claims against C, secured by mortgage, filed his bill to foreclose and C offered the note of A for $6,000 in offset to A's debt. Held, that the note came to the hands of C without consideration, and that he could not set it up in offset in a court of equity. Stone v. Buckner, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 73.

But in Arnold v. Johnston, 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 249, there is a dictum that the absence of consideration might not affect the validity of the assignment.

4. In Everit v. Strong, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 585, the court by Cowen, J., said: "It is insisted that a man is not a bona fide purchaser till he has actually paid the consideration. That is sometimes so; Jewett v. Palmer, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.)

In the application of the requirement of mutuality by the common-law courts it has sometimes been held that only such claims as exist between the parties of record can be set off.¹ But a court of equity will look beyond the nominal to the real parties in interest, and adjudicate the rights of the parties accordingly.² And it has been considered that limiting the right of set-off to

65; 11 Am. Dec. 401; but not in the sense of the statute of set-off. An obligation to pay the consideration comes to the same thing. If a man buy an account or note, with intent to set it off, giving his own note, he must pay it, though he fail to effect the intended set-off. He must run his risk of collecting the assigned demand by action."

1. Rule in England.—In England, after some conflict of opinion, if not of decision, the strict rule of looking only to the parties of record has finally been settled on. In Bottomley v. Brook, cited in 1 T. R. 622, the defendant pleaded that the bond declared on was given to secure £100 lent to the defendant by one E. C., and, by her direction, was given to the plaintiff in trust for her, and that E. C., before the action brought, was indebted to the defendant in more than the amount of the bond. A demurrer to this plea was withdrawn by advice of the court. So in Rudge v. Birch, 3 Q. B. 822, a defendant in an action of debt on a bond, pleaded that the bond was given to plaintiff, in trust for A, for a debt due from defendant to A, and that A at the time of exhibiting plaintiff's bill, was indebted to defendant in more money. On demurrer this plea was held good, on the authority of Bottomley v. Brook, "where," says Ashhurst, J.: "the court suffered the defendant to set off a debt due from Mrs. C. in the same manner as if the action had been brought by her." But, in a case decided as early as 1812, the King's Bench refused to act upon these cases, where there was pleaded, as a set-off, a bond which had not been originally taken by the obligee in trust for defendant, but had merely been assignee to him; it being said by Bayley, J., that "We have nothing to do in this place with any other than legal rights." Wake v. Tinkler, 16 East 36. And similar language has been used by other judges. In 1833, Parke, J., said that "if the words of the statute had been looked to, Bottomley v. Brook, 1 T. R. 621, and Rudge v. Birch, 1 T. R. 622, would hardly have been decided as they were. At all events, the doctrine of those cases is not to be extended." Likewise Littledale, J., thought Bottomley v. Brook not properly decided, and that under the statutes of set-off, the court can only notice an interest at law. Tucker v. Tucker, 4 B. & Ad. 745; 24 E. C. L. 151.

In 1834 Tindal, C. J., observed, in regard to Bottomley v. Brook, and Rudge v. Birch, that they "go no further than this, that the courts of law will so far take notice of the existence of a trust as to let in against a plaintiff, the trustee, that which would be a valid offense against the cestui que trust. But these cases have never been extended." Bedford v. Brutton, 1 Bing. N. Cas. 408; 27 E. C. L. 433.

The cases of Bottomley v. Brook and Rudge v. Birch are both now regarded as overruled. In the court of exchequer in 1853, they were deemed entirely overruled by Lane v. Chandler, 3 Smith 77; Wake v. Tinkler, 16 East 36, and Tucker v. Tucker, 4 B. & Ald. 745. Martin, B., observed that "the case of Tucker v. Tucker goes far to show that the statute of set-off is confined to the legal debts between the parties, the sole object of the statute being to prevent cross-actions between the same parties." Isberg v. Bowden, 8 Exch. 852; 1 C. & R. 722; 22 L. J. Exch. 322.

2. Hobbs v. Duff, 23 Cal. 596. See Ferris v. Burton, 1 Vt. 439.

In equity, demands which are really mutual, but not nominally so, may be set off. Thus, where a note executed to a firm has become the separate property of one of the partners, a demand due to its maker by this partner, may be set off against the judgment obtained by him on the note in the firm name. Foot v. Ketchum, 15 Vt. 258; 40 Am. Dec. 678. It has even been held that one member of a firm will be allowed in equity to set off his own judgment against an insolvent debtor seeking to enforce a judgment against such firm. Jeffries v. Evans, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 119; 43 Am. Dec. 158.

the parties to the record in an action at law would greatly narrow down the beneficial operation of the statute. This has resulted in increased disposition, on the part of the courts and the legislature, to enlarge the right sufficiently to cover all cases where the mutuality is real, so that the rule now very generally prevails that the real parties in interest are to be looked to, and not merely the nominal plaintiff and defendant of record.¹

So, it has been held that debts nominally due between the same persons cannot be set off in equity, if, by assignment or otherwise, the real interest is different. Cotton v. Evans, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 284.

1. Ward v. Martin, 31 B. Mon. (Ky.) 18; Frazier v. Gibson, 7 Mo. 271; Andrews v. Varrell, 46 N. H. 17; Bridge v. Johnson, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 351; Driggs v. Rockwell, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 504; Caines v. Brisbane, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 9; Cowles v. Cowles, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 361; Miller v. Florer, 15 Ohio St. 148; Masterson v. Goodlett, 46 Tex. 407. As may be seen from the above-cited New York cases, the text states the present rule in that State. But, in a number of early New York decisions, it was held that, under the statute providing that in case of set-off a defendant should have judgment for the excess of his demand over the plaintiff, only the parties to the record should be considered, for otherwise the nominal party might get a judgment for a debt which he did not own. Wheeler v. Raymond, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 231; Johnson v. Bridge, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 693; Raymond v. Wheeler, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 296; Warner v. Barker, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 400.

In an action in the name of H. for money paid and advanced, wherein, though the debt was in equity transferred to H. & Co., it was considered that the action was maintainable in the name of H. for their benefit; and that the defendant might give in evidence any discounts which he might claim against H. & Co. Winchester v. Hackley, 2 Cranch (U. S.) 342.

Where, in a suit against A, B and C, on a contract, A and B answered that the contract was made with them, it was held that they might set up a counterclaim in which C had no interest. Clegg v. Cramer, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 162.

If the payee of a note indorse it as collateral security to A, who causes an action to be brought upon it in the name of the nominal plaintiff, and afterwards the payee settles with A, the defendant in such action may set off a note which he holds against the payee. Bellows v. Smith, 9 N. H. 285.

It was held that where a defendant has been defaulted and a subsequent attaching creditor has obtained leave to appear and defend the suit, such creditor may be allowed to file a claim of the defendant in set-off against the plaintiff. Woodbury v. Woodbury, 47 N. H. 11; 90 Am. Dec. 555.

Under the Massachusetts statutes (Massachusetts Rev. Stats., ch. 96, § 11) the defendant may prove that the action is brought for the use of another person than the plaintiff and set off against such person. Sheldon v. Kendall, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 217; Com. v. Phoenix Bank, 11 Met. (Mass.) 129.

And it was provided by the statute of Indiana that "if the action is brought by one person in trust, or for the use of another, the defendant may set off any demand against the person for whose use or benefit the action is brought, in like manner as if that person were the plaintiff." Indiana Rev. Stats. 709, sub-sec. 7. Under this statute, where a suit was brought by A and B, and the defendant pleaded to the declaration that the suit was brought for the use and benefit of A, B having no interest therein, it was held that the defendant could plead the set-off against A alone. Forkner v. Dinwiddie, 3 Ind. 34. So in a suit by the assignee of a note against the maker, the latter may plead and prove that the plaintiff holds the note merely as a trustee of the payee, in order to let in as a set-off an indebtedness of the payee to the defendant. Henry v. Scott, 3 Ind. 412.

Where A indemnified T, a sheriff, against selling S's goods, and S afterwards recovered judgment against the sheriff for making the sale, it was held that a judgment against S, which A had purchased and taken an assignment of in the sheriff's name, could not be set off to the judgment recovered against the sheriff. While it was said that the court will look to the real

(3) Must be Due Between Those Only Who Are Parties to the Action.—The claims sought to be set off must be due between those only who are parties to the action.¹ Thus a defendant cannot set off a joint claim against the plaintiff or plaintiffs and others who are not parties plaintiff in the action.² Hence the defendant cannot set off a claim against a firm of which the plaintiff is a partner, in a suit brought for his individual debt.³ But, where a debt is due from the plaintiff and some other person interest of the parties and protect the assignees of choses in action, so far as this can be done consistently with the forms of law, it was considered that the judgment against which the set-off sought to be made was no less a judgment against the sheriff, because A had chosen to indemnify him. Turner v. Satterlee, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 480.

1. A set-off arising out of affairs in which not only the parties to the suit, but others, are interested, cannot be made available as a defense. Wright v. Rogers, 3 McLean (U. S.) 229; Compton v. Van Hook, 26 Tex. 702; Casey v. Haurick, 69 Tex. 44; Porter v. Neker-vis, 4 Rand. (Va.) 359.

So, a judgment in favor of the defendant against the plaintiff and another cannot be set off. Snyder v. Spurr, 33 Conn. 407; Phelps v. Reeder, 39 Ill. 172. See also Blake v. Langdon, 19 Vt. 485; 47 Am. Dec. 701. In a suit by an administrator the defendant cannot set off a demand against the intestate and three other persons still living. Adams v. Ware, 33 Me. 228. Where a cause of action, arising from the wrongfully suing out of an attachment suit, is sought to be set off in the same action in which the attachment is sued out, but where the bond is a joint bond of several parties, the set-off cannot be availed of in the suit by one of the parties. Stadler v. Parmalee, 10 Iowa 23.

At law, independent of the bankrupt law of 1800 (1 Story's Laws U. S., p. 746, § 42), the defendants could not have set off against a several debt due from them to T M, a bankrupt, a joint debt due to them from the firm of H. & T. M. But upon consideration of section 42 in connection with section 6 and the proviso to section 34, the set-off was allowed against the assignees of the bankrupt, the partnership fund having passed to the bankrupt. Tucker v. Oxley, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 34.

It was held that, although the joint debt of the plaintiff and a third person cannot properly be set off against the plaintiff's separate debt, yet if the defendant pleads such set-off, and the plaintiff does not demur, but joins issue on the plea, it will be too late for him to object. Bright v. Wilson, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 122.

3. Ingols v. Plimpton, 10 Colo. 535; West v. Kendrick, 46 Ga. 526; Hilliard v. Walker, 11 Ill. 644; Mitchell v. Sellman, 5 Md. 376; Reed v. Whitney, 7 Gray (Mass.) 533; McCulloch v. Vibbard, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 227; Spofford v. Rowan, 124 N. Y. 108; McDowell v. Tyson, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 300; Jarecki Mfg. Co. v. Haymaker, 138 Pa. St. 542; Flint v. Tillman, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 202. The rule is well expressed in the statement that a defendant cannot set up as a counterclaim allegations of such a character that if they were in the form of a complaint in a separate action, another person, not a party to the jointly and severally, as where he and another are bound on a joint and several note or bond, the plaintiff alone might be sued thereon, and such debt may, therefore, be set off against him.¹

pending suit, would be a necessary defendant to such separate action. McConihe v. Hollister, 19 Wis. 269.

Where one partner is garnisheed and admits that he is individually indebted to the judgment debtor, he cannot avoid a judgment by claiming that the judgment debtor is indebted to the firm of which he is a partner. Gray v. Badgett, 5 Ark. 16.

The same mutuality is requisite to constitute a mutual credit under the bankrupt laws, which is required to make mutual debts under the statute of set-off. Thus, where three partners, A, B and C, delivered bills to D for a special purpose, and A and B became bankrupts, in an action by their assignees against D for the proceeds of the bills, it was held that C, not having become bankrupt, this was not a case of mutual credit within the bankrupt law, so as to entitle the defendant to set off, against the bills, a debt due to him from A, B and C. Staniforth v. Fellowes, 1 Marsh. 184.

A firm which owed a bank was dissolved. One of the partners continued business in the old firm's name. Held, that the bank, knowing the facts, could not offset the debt against a deposit made and drawn upon by this partner after the dissolution. International Bank v. Jones, 119 Ill. 407; 59 Am. Rep. 807.

But, in Missouri, a different rule is adopted. In that State a partnership debt is joint and several; and one to whom a partnership is indebted may maintain an action against an individual member thereof for the recovery of such debt. This fact was given as a reason for adopting the rule that a defendant may set off, against an individual demand sued on by the plaintiff, an indebtedness held by him against a partnership firm of which the plaintiff is a member. Ruddle v. Horine, 34 Mo. App. 616. Thus, in Weiss v. Wahl, 5 Mo. App. 408, which is to the same effect, the court by Bakewell, J., said: "The question is whether a firm indebtedness can be set off against a claim by an individual member of the firm. It is quite well settled that, in an action against a member of a firm for his individual debt, he cannot set off a demand due to the firm. Lamb v. Brolaski, 38 Mo. 51. But there is an obvious reason for this rule. Were it otherwise, a firm might be made to pay all the private debts of one partner, to the injury of the other partners and of the creditors of the copartnership. But we can see no reason whatever why, when a member of a firm which is indebted to B, sues B, B should not be allowed to offset against the claim the debt of the partnership to him. It is a debt of the plaintiff to defendant; he owes the whole of it, and may be sued separately, and made to pay the whole of it; and how can the right of set-off be affected by the fact that another man is also liable with him for the same debt?"

1. Fox v. Cutts, 6 Me. 240.

A joint and several promissory note may be set-off in an action by either maker. Owen v. Wilkinson, 5 C. B., N. S. 526; 94 E. C. L. 526; Pate v. Gray, Hempst. (U. S.) 155; Clark v. McElroy, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 147; Carson v. Barnes, 1 Ala. 93; Hayden v. Alton Nat. Bank, 39 Ill. App. 458; White v. Rogers, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 436; Dunwidge v. Kerley, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 501; Ferguson v. Millikin, 42 Mich. 441; Standish v. Chandler, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 511.

So the debt on a joint and several bond may be set off in an action by either obligor. Fletcher v. Dyche, 2 T. R. 32; Branch Bank v. Morris, 13 Iowa 136; Dunn v. West, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 376; Donelson v. Colerain, 4 Met. (Mass.) 432.

Where the defendant has a judgment against the plaintiff and others, and the plaintiff is liable for the payment of the entire demand, the court may, if the equity of the case requires it, set off the defendant's judgment against that of the plaintiff. Hutchins v. Riddle, 12 N. H. 464.

So, in Missouri, the fact that in that State a partnership debt is joint and several, and that an action is maintainable thereon against one of the partners alone, was treated as a sufficient ground for the holding that a defendant may set off, against an individual demand sued on by the plaintiff, an indebtedness held by him against a partnership firm of which the plaintiff is a

A defendant cannot set off a claim owned by himself and some person who has not been made a defendant.¹ So, a member of a firm cannot, when sued for his individual debt, set off a claim due from the plaintiff to the firm.² Although this is the general rule, it has been held that one sued on a debt for which he is individually liable may set off a debt owing by the plaintiff to a partnership firm of which the defendant is a member if he has the assent of his copartners thereto, and the interests of third persons will not be prejudiced thereby.³ Proof of the account and of the assent of the partners to its use are all that is required; it is not necessary that the account should be assigned to the member. Ruddle v. Horine, 34 Mo. App. 616; Weiss v. Wahl, 5 Mo. App. 408.

Cole*, 120 Ind. 102; Milburn v. Guyther, 8 Gill (Md.) 96; 50 Am. Dec. 681; Reed v. Whitney, 7 Gray (Mass.) 533; Springfield Iron Co. v. Kelley (Supreme Ct.), 1 N. Y. Supp. 351; Craig v. Henderson, 2 Pa. St. 261; 44 Am. Dec. 193; Copeland v. Young, 21 S. Car. 275. See Allbright v. Aldrich, 2 Tex. 166.

Where a bill in chancery was filed to effect a set-off of a liability on promissory notes, made by the complainant jointly with one Gaylord, against a claim due the complainant and his brother on a policy of insurance, it was held that there was a lack of mutuality even though it was true as claimed, that by the law of Illinois, which governed, all joint obligations were made joint and several, and therefore that the complainant was separately liable on the notes, and could be separately sued upon them. Granting this to be so, the debts would still not be mutual; if sued alone on the notes, the claim on the policies which he might seek to set off, pro tanto, against the notes, would be a claim not due to him alone, but to him and his brother. Gray v. Rollo, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 629.

But it has been held in Pennsylvania that, although a note jointly owned by two persons can be regularly sued upon only in a joint action, yet either of the owners of it may sever in the use of it by way of equitable defense in a suit against himself alone, each party defending a suit against himself alone to the extent of his interest in it. Smith v. Myler, 22 Pa. St. 36.

A, one of three partners, gave his note to B for his private debt. B afterwards became indebted to the firm in a larger sum than A owed him. B paid part of his debt to C, one of the firm, saying that he held A's note and intended to apply it on the balance of the account; to which C replied that if A owed him it was all right, and C supposed that the matter was to be arranged accordingly, and so stated to A, who agreed to it. But nothing was said on the subject to the third partner, nor was the note given up or credit given for it on account. It was held in an action by B's administrator against A on the note, that B's debt to the firm could not be set off against the note. Dehon v. Stetson, 9 Met. (Mass.) 341.

In an action at law by a legatee of the income to be derived from a fund against an executor, who, on the settlement of his accounts, retained the fund for the purposes of the will, the defendant was permitted to set off rent due to himself and another, on a lease made by them as executors of another estate to the plaintiff, the coexecutors assenting to such set-off. Solliday v. Bissey, 12 Pa. St. 347.

defendant.¹ This assent may be given after action brought, and the jury may, under the direction of the court, do equity as to costs.² But there is a dictum to the effect that a defendant cannot set off a claim due himself and another not a defendant, even though he has the consent of such third person.³

While, as has been said, a defendant who is sued for a separate debt cannot set off a debt due from the plaintiff to himself and another jointly, it has yet been held that, if sued solely by the plaintiff for a joint debt due of himself and another, he may set off a debt due to them jointly by the plaintiff.⁴ And it has been held that where, in an action against several, there is a discontinuance as to one, the others may avail themselves of a set-off due to all the original defendants.⁵

(4) Must be Due Between All the Parties to the Action.—It is a generally prevailing rule that those demands only can be set off which are due from and to all the parties to the action.⁶ Where a defendant is sued by several plaintiffs, he cannot set off

In a suit brought by M against W on the note, it was held that, in Alabama, W was entitled to set off the note against J W and held by P on producing the note at the trial with the consent of P to use it as a set-off. Winston v. Metcalf, 6 Ala. 756.

5. Sillivant v. Reardon, 5 Ark. 140. In the opinion rendered in this case, the court by Paschal, J., said: "It is objected that, the action being discontinued as to Ford, there was such a severance of the action as that no off-set due to Ford, Thorn and Sillivant could be pleaded by them, but that they were left to prosecute their cross-action. The argument of the defendants in error, if it proves anything, proves too much. It assumes that Ford is no longer known to the record, and that therefore the defendants below have no right to use an offset which is jointly due to him and them. But would not this argument, if carried out, exclude the covenant from the jury on the ground of variance? It is true that the contract is joint and several; and Reardon, in the commencement of the suit, might elect to sue one or all, or any intermediate number; but this serves not the contract, but the remedy; for Reardon might, at any time, have dismissed his suit and sued all, or he might sue all separately at the same time, although he might have but one satisfaction.

"The true question, then, is not as to the mutuality of indebtedness of the parties to the action, as they remain upon the record, but of the mutuality of indebtedness as it existed between the parties at the time of the commencement of the suit. If, when Reardon commenced suit against the defendants, he really owed them six hundred dollars, as pleaded in the third plea, can he avoid the set-off by abandoning his action as to one? To admit such a rule would be to admit the worst consequences of suffering a discontinuance."

6. A set-off must be a complete cross demand; it must be such that if it were sued independently it would bring identically the same parties into court. The principal is well stated in Kenedy v. Cunningham, Cheves (S. Car.) 50, where the court by Butler, J., said: "The authorities are very clear that a single defendant cannot set off a demand due to himself from one of a

a claim against one or more of such plaintiffs less than all.¹ To permit such a set-off would obviously work injustice "because that would be varying the remedy of the others without their consent, and compel them to exchange one debtor for another who might not be equally good or solvent."² So in an action by number of joint plaintiffs. It has been expressly decided in this State that, where partners sue an individual, the demand of that individual against one of the partners cannot be set off. This proceeds on the ground that the plaintiffs, as partners, had no contract with the defendant. One of the plaintiffs having made the contract, he must keep it according to its merits; for, if the plaintiffs could be defeated by such a demand, they would have to make their copartner their debtor for the debt and costs which they were compelled to pay for him.

"The same principals are equally applicable to joint defendants. If one joint defendant could set off a demand due from a single plaintiff he could defeat the plaintiff's demand by a contract which the plaintiff had never made with the parties to the record. Success would enable the defendant, who pleaded the discount, to defeat one person by making others his creditors; for he would have a right to look to his codefendants for remuneration for paying their debt if they had been jointly liable with him. But, taking another view, suppose that the defendant, setting up the discount, makes an issue which results, by failure, in costs and expenses beyond those otherwise incident to the action. Who are to pay them? Not that defendant alone, but all are subjected to the costs of the suit.

"The rule, analyzed and reduced to simplicity, is this: To an action by two persons, the defendant cannot set off a debt due to him from one of them; nor can one of several joint defendants set off a debt due to him alone from the plaintiff."

In Massachusetts the statute provides that, except in the case of a dormant partner: "If there are several plaintiffs, the demand set off shall be due from all of them jointly; and if there are several defendants, the demand set off shall be due to all of them jointly." Massachusetts Gen. Stats. (ed. of 1860), p. 670.

So, where A and B sued the defendant for work, etc., and the defendant pleaded a set-off for money received by A before B became a member of the firm, it was held that the plea afforded no answer to the action, although A had after the commencement of the partnership, admitted the receipt of the money. *France v. against a partnership, the indebtedness of plaintiff to one of them cannot be set off.¹ This rule will prevent the setting off of their several claims against the plaintiff by each defendant.² While the foregoing states what is clearly the general rule, a different rule has been laid down by some courts; in some States it is held that, where there are two or more defendants jointly sued by one plaintiff, one of the defendants, if there be no conflicting equities, may set off a debt due him by the plaintiff, the other defendants being assumed to assent.³ And, where this rule is

The two above-cited Pennsylvania cases to the effect that in an action against two there might be set off a debt due to one of them, are not alluded to in Henderson v. Lewis, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 383, decided in 1823, by adopted, the separate debt of each defendant may of course be unitedly pleaded as a set-off to the plaintiff's joint demand.¹

Gibson, J., when he said: "If both obligors had appeared, this separate debt of one of them could not, according to the English statutes, have been set off against the plaintiff's joint demand; and I am not aware of anything in our act of assembly to create a difference." But in 1824, in an action against two, a debt of the plaintiff to one of them was allowed as a set-off. Stewart v. Coulter, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 252; 14 Am. Dec 680. And the assertion by Gibson, J., above quoted, that the set-off would have been inadmissible even had both been parties, was retracted by him in a later case; "for," he said, "the objection might certainly have been obviated by the concurrence of him whose separate property it was proposed to apply to their common debt." Stuart v. Com., 8 Watts (Pa.) 76. See Montz v. Morris, 89 Pa. St. 392.

The decisions of the Pennsylvania courts were followed in Missouri, and it was held, where several defendants were sued jointly, that one of them might plead in set-off a demand due him by the plaintiff. Austin v. Feland, 8 Mo. 309. This was affirmed in Kent v. Rogers, 24 Mo. 307, where an indebtedness of Kent to Dillon was set off against his claim against Dillon and Rogers.

So also in Kentucky, it has been held that in an action on a joint bond against several defendants by a single plaintiff, one of the defendants may set off a separate demand against the plaintiff. Powell v. Hogue, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 443. The court, by Simpson, J., in the opinion rendered in this case said that he could not see that any possible injury could arise to the plaintiff in the action by the application of a debt due by him to one of the defendants to the payment of his demand, and that there is no imaginable reasons why such a set-off should not be allowed. In the answer to the argument that it might result in an injury to the plaintiff by the payment of his debt by a claim asserted against him by an insolvent obligor, the others being solvent, he having at the same time another and separate demand against the defendant relying on the set-off which he might not be able to collect, the court said that this argument was founded on a misconception of the law governing the right of set-off. And it was said that in the case supposed, the separate demand of the plaintiff would itself be a fair and legitimate set-off against the one admitted to be relied upon by the defendant, and the balance only, if any, due by the plaintiff, could be discounted against the debt sued for.

Since the argument advanced in this case against allowing such set-off cannot be similarly answered under those statutes which do not permit the plaintiff to plead a set-off against a defendant set-off, the adoption of this decision as authority should be accordingly limited.

And perhaps a similar view should be taken of the decisions in Missouri; where, in a suit against several defendants, one of them is permitted to offset the demand of plaintiff by a debt due to him separately, it was held that, by way of reply to such offset, plaintiff might set up a debt additional to the one sued on, due by this separate defendant to himself. Mortland v. Horton, 44 Mo. 58. The court, in this case, by Bliss, J., said: "If one defendant may so offset his individual claim, it would seem that the plaintiff ought to be permitted to set up against it any debt such defendant may be owing him. One proposition follows the other, and such offset must be permitted, unless forbidden by the statute."

Upon the adoption of the Kentucky Code of Practice, a set-off in favor of defendants, "or some of them," was authorized, by the express terms of the statute, to be set off. Kentucky Code of Prac., ch. 4, § 152; Tinsley v. Tinsley, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 454.

Set-off of Partner's Individual Debt Against the Firm Debt.—It has been said that as a partner may pay a firm debt out of his individual funds, it would seem that he may set off against a firm debt his individual debt. McConnell Trust. Proc., § 313. See Goodenow v. Buttrick, 7 Mass. 140.

Limitation to the Rule.—According to the rule laid down in Alabama, while one of two or more joint defendants may plead his individual claim in set-off, a judgment over in favor of such defendant against the plaintiff for the excess cannot be rendered. Locke v. Locke, 57 Ala. 473.

1. Whaley v. Cape, 4 Mo. 233.

And, since one defendant, in an action against several on their joint liability, may plead his separate and individual demand in set-off, one of several defendants, severally, or jointly and severally liable, may of course set off a debt due himself alone from the plaintiff.¹

A set-off by one of several joint defendants may be allowed where an agreement to that effect is shown to have been made between the plaintiff and either of the defendants.² It may, however, be doubted whether this is in reality set-off; it would seem rather to be payment by one of the defendants, or it might be considered as a new agreement which has been fully executed.³

It would seem, as a matter of course, that in an action against several defendants upon a joint obligation, one of the defendants has no right to claim, as a set-off, a debt of the plaintiff to one of his co-defendants.⁴ A debt due from the plaintiff to a coobligor not sued, cannot be set off against the plaintiff's demand on the obligor who is sued.⁵

It has been held that, in an action against several defendants as partners, where there is a discontinuance as to part of them, the remaining defendants may plead a set-off due to themselves, which was not admissible as the case originally stood.⁶

court by Breese, J., said: "We do not, however, incline to consider the plea as technically a plea of set-off, but as setting up an agreement executed by one of the defendants, to the benefits of which all the defendants are entitled, as going to reduce the amount of the recovery against them. The agreement was a valid one, and founded on a valuable consideration, and of which the defendant in error has had the full benefit. The facts stated in the plea, if not available as a set-off, must be available as a payment, by one of the defendants, of the sum stated, or it must be considered as a new agreement, which has been executed fully."

comes payable from or to one person the question of mutuality is to be determined upon the new relations.

On the death of one of two or more joint creditors or debtors, the legal right or liability survives and vests in law exclusively in or against the remaining creditor or debtor. As a result, there may be set off in an action by or against one, or his assignee, the joint obligation of, or claims by, persons of whom that one was the survivor.¹ And, therefore, a debt due to the defendant as surviving partner may be set off against a debt due from him in his own separate character.² On the other hand, a surviving partner sued upon a debt owing by the firm, may set off a debt due him in his individual capacity from the plaintiff.³ And so a debt due from the plaintiff as surviving partner may be set off against a debt due from the defendant to the plaintiff in his own right.⁴ So far, at least, the rights of the representatives of the deceased partner and of the partnership creditor are not affected.⁵ But it has been doubted whether, when the suit is for a debt due to the partnership, the defendant can set off a debt separately due by the plaintiff.⁶ There are, however, good authorities which go the whole length and hold that, in an action by one as surviving partner, the defendant may ordinarily offset a demand due from the plaintiff individually.⁷ By the death of the copartner the debt is considered as owing to the survivor in his own right, and

A judgment against two persons may be pleaded in set-off to an action by the survivor against the judgment plaintiff. Robinson v. Burton, 2 Houst. (Del.) 62.

A statute provided that the assignee of all such notes as are made assignable by it, shall allow all just set-offs, discounts and defenses, not only against himself, but against the assignor, before notice of such assignment shall have been given to the defendant. A suit was brought by the assignee of the payee of a promissory note, against the maker, and a note executed by the assignor and a third person, which the defendant had obtained before notice of the assignment, was sought to be set off by him. It was considered that, although the note could not, in view of the requirement of mutuality, be set off if such third person were living, yet, since he was dead, the right of action on the note was against the survivor, and it could properly be set off. 6. In Wain v. Hewes, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 471, a case decided in 1820, the court by Gibson, J., observed, "there is no case to show that where the suit is for a debt due to the partnership, the defendant can set off a debt separately due by the plaintiff. For though a surviving partner may choose to treat a partnership debt as due to him in his own right, it does not follow that a defendant, sued for a debt separately due, has a corresponding right. And even if he had such a right at law, a court of equity, if the surviving partner were insolvent, would doubtless interfere to prevent it from being exercised; and this on the same ground that it interferes to prevent an insolvent surviving partner from disposing of the stock or getting in the outstanding debts."

so in none of these cases is the set-off open to the objection that it is a demand held in autre droit.¹

The same principle that applies in the case of surviving partners holds good, where, by contract, one of the members of the firm becomes the owner of, or has the exclusive right to settle and control the partnership effects.²

(2) In Suits By and Against Assignees—(See also ASSIGNMENTS, vol. 1, p. 842).—It is a general rule that the assignee of property may use it as a set-off to any claim against him, provided it was due and payable in the hands of his assignor, and was assigned to him before action brought.³

It is further a general rule that the assignee of property or rights of property takes it, or them, subject to all set-offs which existed at the time of the appointment of the assignee in favor of the assignor.⁴ This is true although the assignee takes the property for valuable consideration and without notice.⁵ This rule is subject to a modification in the case of negotiable instruments endorsed in good faith before due;⁶ and to the further modification that no excess can be recovered against the assignee by the defendant.⁷

(a) By and Against Assignees of Choses in Action Not Negotiable.—The assignee of a chose in action may use it as a set-off against any claim against him, in case it was a subsisting cause of

In the case of Holbrook v. Lackey, 13 Met. (Mass.) 132; 46 Am. Dec. 726, though decided in 1847, the Pennsylvania case, cited in the next note above, does not appear to have been noticed. In an action by plaintiff as surviving partner of Holbrook & Houghton, defendant was allowed to set off a claim for money lent by him to the plaintiff Holbrook alone, notwithstanding it was strongly pressed by plaintiff's counsel that to allow this set off would be to authorize the appropriation of partnership funds to pay the private debt of one of the partners, to the injury of partnership creditors. The court, by Shaw, C. J., said: "It was strongly pressed by the plaintiff's counsel, that to allow this set off would be to authorize the appropriation of partnership funds to pay the private debt of one of the partners, to the injury of partnership creditors. But this argument is specious rather than sound. We are not to presume, necessarily, that there are outstanding partnership debts, or that the funds are not ample to meet them."

"But how does it affect partnership creditors? If the surviving partner could recover the whole, without the deduction of the demand, which the defendant seeks to set off, he would be liable, indeed, to pay the partnership debts, if there are any. But he would be equally liable without; and in either case, these creditors must look alone to his personal liability, and would have no means of compelling him to appropriate the specific money, so recovered, to the payment of their debts."

If a claim offered as a set-off belonged to all the defendants jointly at the commencement of the suit, it is no objection that one of the defendants has derived his title by assignment from a co-defendant. Bell v. Davis, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 210.

In an action by A, on a sealed bill drawn by the defendants, payable to A, as the "agent of the creditors of B," the defendants cannot set off a sealed bill drawn by B in favor of A, and assigned to them before the commencement of the suit. Stryker v. Beekman, 8 N. J. L. 209.

A defendant, who, when sued, is in possession of a sealed note drawn by the plaintiff, cannot use it as a discount, though after he is sued he gets an assignment of the note which is dated back before the writ was issued. Bishop v. Tucker, 4 Rich. (S. Car.) 178.

An action was brought by A for the use of B against C. It appeared on the face of the declaration that the suit was brought for the use of B, and C acknowledged service and waived a copy of the declaration before the writ was filed. Held, that the acknowledgment of service and waiver of copy so charged C with notice of the equitable rights of B, that he could not afterwards, before the writ was actually filed, buy up a debt against A and plead it as an offset, unless he, in some way, affirmatively made it appear that when he did so acknowledge service he did not know the suit was for the use of B. A mere general statement that when he bought the offset he did not know of the transfer to B was insufficient. Whitaker v. Pope, 48 Ga. 15.

Borrowed Set-off.—While the statement of the text is true and the debtor has as good a right to purchase a cross-demand, to extinguish a claim against himself by set-off as he has to accomplish the same object by a direct payment, yet if the security offered as a set-off has been merely borrowed for the purpose, it will not be allowed. Russell v. Spear, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 230.

In Reeves v. Hatkinson, 3 N. J. L. 751, it was held that an assigned judgment could not avail the defendant by way of set-off.

A judgment by default in favor of J. against defendant for $245 was assigned to plaintiff in consideration of $1. The default was opened, and plaintiff afterwards recovered a judgment against defendant for $407, which he reassigned to J. After the default was opened and before the recovery of the judgment by plaintiff, defendant became the assignee of a judgment against plaintiff. Held, that defendant, having purchased the judgment against plaintiff in the belief that plaintiff owned the judgment against him for $407, was entitled to set off his judgment against plaintiff, and his right was not affected by the fact that J assigned the judgment to plaintiff only for collection. *Cormier v. An obligor in a bond cannot defalcate against the assignee of an assignee of a bond a claim or set-off which he holds against the first assignee. Blair v. Mathiott, 46 Pa. St. 262.

In a suit on a promissory note by the assignee of the payee against the maker—held that a debt due from the payee to one of the defendants, or from the payee and another person to the defendants before the assignment, was not a good matter of set-off. Woods v. Harris, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 585. Compare

Hurdle v. Hanner, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 360.

A, having a separate demand against B, B and C being joint creditors of A, assigned his demand to a third person. After such assignment, B became the sole owner of the debt due by A to B and C. Held, that B could not maintain a bill against the assignee of A for an offset without showing that the original consideration of the debt of A to B and C proceeded from B alone. Barber v. Spencer, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 517.

A purchaser of personal property sold with a warranty of soundness executed his note for the purchase money to the vendor, and the latter assigned the note. Pending a suit by the assignee, the maker sued the payee for a breach of his warranty and recovered judgment; he then pleaded the judgment as a set-off. Held, that the judgment was a proper set-off, the note not being negotiable by the law merchant. Herod v. Snyder, 48 Ind. 480.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage securing promissory notes, the mortgagor cannot set off demands against an intermediate holder of the notes and mortgage, unless founded on an agreement supported by a new consideration, in pursuance of which the intermediate holder procured the notes, or which was entered into by the parties while the notes were in his hands. Brown v. Scott, 87 Ala. 453.

Where a person becomes indebted to an assignee or administrator by reason of a wrongful seizure and appropriation of property belonging to the estate, it is abundantly evident that, in an action brought to recover for the wrongful act, the right of set-off should not be allowed. Van Sandt v. Dows, 63 Iowa 594; 50 Am. Rep. 759; Nicoll v. Mumford, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 522.

The plaintiff in equity sought to set off a note assigned to him by his debtor upon the plaintiff having a judgment against him, which note was assigned before judgment, on the ground of insolvency and non-residence of the plaintiff, the judgment being assigned to a third person. Held, that the plaintiff's equity was older and superior to that of the assignee of the judgment, though the note was assigned upon condition that the assignee should be able to procure the set-off. Dorsey v. Reese, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 127.

A claim, on which an action at law might have been sustained, cannot be used as a set-off in equity against an assignee of another legal claim. Hutchins v. Hope, 7 Gill (Md.) 119.

The vendor of a lot, sold at public sale, of which an entry was made at the time by the clerk of the sale, in the sale-book, afterwards tendered a good conveyance in fee to the vendee, if he would pay the purchase money, or allow the same on a note held by him, signed by the vendor. The tender was refused. Held, in a suit on the note by the assignee of the vendee (the assignment having been made after the tender), that said purchase money was a legal matter of set-off. Hart v. Woods, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 568.

In an action by the assignee of a bankrupt partner, a debt due to the defendant from the partnership may be set off. Bean v. Cabbaness, 6 Ala. 343.

A plaintiff, after bringing suit, cannot assign the demand to his attorney, so as to defeat a legal right of set-off which the defendant had when the suit began. Norwich Printing Co. v. Kloppenberg, 50 Conn. 295.

A bank has no lien upon the deposits of an insolvent firm for the amount of a discounted bill which has not matured as against an assignee of the firm for the benefit of creditors, and no notice is necessary to perfect the right in the assignee. Beckwith v. Union Bank, 9 N. Y. 211.

In a suit by the assignee of an insolvent debtor on a covenant of warranty in a deed of land made to such debtor, the defendant may set off notes and accounts due to him from such debtor; and he may also set off such notes and accounts in a suit on such covenant brought by the purchaser of the land at the assignee's sale thereof, if the purchaser, when he bought the land, had notice that the defendant claimed such set-off. Bemis v. Smith, 10 Met. (Mass.) 194.

Where the defendant could not have set off the demand against the assignor for lack of mutuality, it was held that he could not use such claim as a set-off against the assignee. Walker v. Hall, 66 Miss. 390.

A made, upon the execution, an assignment to M of A's judgment against R, and sent the same by express to be delivered to M on M's paying $60. At M's suggestion H bought the judgment solely in his own interest, and paid the sum to the expressman, M, assigning the execution to H, who thereupon, by A's authority and in A's name, brought of the assignment.¹ However, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that the assignment was made before the demand intended to be set off was due.² The subject assigned an action against R on the judgment. Before M's assignment to H, M was notified by R of a set-off arising from a breach of a bond which M had executed to R. Held, that R's demand against M could not be set off in the action on the judgment. Avery v. Russell, 125 Mass. 571.

Fraud.—Two persons indebted to one another, executed, each to the other, notes of hand for the full amounts of their respective indebtedness, with the understanding between them that the notes might be used to pay precedent debts, or to raise money by negotiation. One of the payees assigned one of the notes, and failed. In a suit by the assignee against the maker, the latter pleaded a note of the same date executed to him by the assignor, as a set-off. Held, that the set-off could not be allowed, as it would be a fraud on the plaintiff. Barbaroux v. Barker, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 47.

The plaintiff, as the assignee of an insolvent firm, sought to recover from the defendant's moneys held in trust for one of the partners, to the possession of which he had become entitled after the date of the assignment. The individual debts of the partners had been paid out of their private property. At the time of the assignment the firm was indebted to the defendants for trust moneys deposited with it. It was held that the defendants were entitled to set off the amount due from the firm against the amount due to the said partner. Shipman v. Lansing, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 290.

In an action by the assignee of a debt, which by law is subject to all equities existing against it, at the time of the assignment, in favor of the debtor, a plea of a claim against the assignor, in set-off, which does not show that the claim existed at the time of the assignment, is bad. Brisban v. Caines, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 45.

Where the set-off consisted of a claim which was not originally a cause of action, but was made so by statute after the assignment, it was held that the defendant might set it up. Taylor v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 82 N. Y. 10.

Where a banker failed and made a general assignment of his property, including the notes of a depositor, whose deposit was not then due, and directed his assignee to pay his debts in the same order and manner in which the estate of a bankrupt is required to be used and applied for the payment of debts proved and allowed under the provisions of the bankrupt act, it was held that the depositor was entitled to his set-off, and that the assignee could only recover the balance after deducting the deposit. Fort v. McCully, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 87.

A negotiable promissory note, purchased for a valuable consideration, without notice that an action had been commenced on a debt due from the purchaser to the maker, and before the first publication of notice of the issuing of a warrant in insolvency against the maker, may be set off in such action, when prosecuted by the maker's assignee in insolvency, even though not yet payable. Aldrich v. Campbell, 4 Gray (Mass.) 284.

Equity.—A partnership became insolvent, and made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, including therein a note past due, and the maker of the note held the acceptance of the partnership not then due. Held, that the insolvency of the acceptors was not, of itself, sufficient to authorize a set-off in equity of the acceptance against the note in the hands of the assignee, in the absence of evidence that the acceptance was based upon the note, or that the maker of the note trusted to it, at the time, as a means of discharging his obligation. *Lockwood v. A bond due by the bankrupt to the defendant cannot be set off against the defendant's note to a third person assigned to the assignee of the bankrupt's effects after commission issued. McIver v. Wilson, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 423.

Where an assignment was made, by A, of all his property, to be sold by the assignees for the payment of his debts, held, that his creditors could not offset their demands, in payment of articles purchased by them at the public sale of the goods by the assignees; and this is true, though one of the assignees invited the creditors to purchase, telling them that they might offset their demands to their purchases, if the terms of sale, as declared at the auction, contained no such stipulation. *Bateman v. A purchased and actually paid for a judgment against his creditor B, before B transferred his demand against A, but the written instrument was not made until afterwards. Held, that A was equitably entitled to offset such judgment against B's debt in the hands of a third person. Barber v. Spencer, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 517. Compare Watson v. Mid Wales Mfg. Co., L. R., 2 C. P. 593.

In an action by the assignees for creditors of an insolvent banker on a note made by one partner and indorsed for partnership purposes, held that the amount of the partnership deposit with the banker was a proper equitable set-off, although the note was not due at the time of the assignment. Smith v. Felton, 43 N. Y. 419.

In an action by an assignee of a note, not payable in bank, the defendant may set off a joint note made by the payees of the note in suit, as principal for his individual debt, and by another as his surety, and held by the defendant as assignee thereof, before notice of the assignment of the note in suit. Hoffman v. Zollinger, 39 Ind. 461.

A failed and made an assignment. At the time of his failure, he had money on deposit in a bank, where a bill of exchange, on which he was in-assignment, yet if he obtained it with the knowledge of the approaching insolvency of the assignor, he will not be allowed to set it up.¹ Where the set-off consists of negotiable paper, it must have been due the defendant at the time he received notice of the assignment.² But the defendant, even though his demand dorser, had been discounted for him. This bill matured a few days after the assignment, but before the bank had notice of it, and was protested for non-payment. In an action by A's assignee against the bank for the money on deposit, held that the bank could not, either at common law or by the Code of 1849, § 112, set off the amount of the bill against the deposit. Beckwith v. Union Bank, 9 N. Y. 211.

J, being solvent, assigned his property to trustees, on the 16th of January, 1793, for the benefit of his creditors; a debt due from B was included in the assignment, and in an action brought by the assignees against B, he offered as a set-off a note of J, which he stated to have been purchased in the year 1793, after it was due; and it was held that the note was to be presumed to have been purchased after the assignment, and could not be set off against the debt due to the insolvent. Every presumption is to be made against the purchaser of a note after it is due. Johnson v. Bloodgood, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 51; 1 Am. Dec. 93.

The maker of a note not negotiable transferred to the payee an account, to be applied, when collected, to the payment of the note. After the note was assigned, the payee collected the account. Held, in Alabama, that the account could not be offset by the maker in an action by the assignee of the note. Chilton v. Comstock, 4 Ala. 58.

It is provided by statute in Massachusetts that a claim obtained after notice of the assignment will not be allowed as a set-off against the assignee. Pub. St. Massachusetts, ch. 168, § 10.

In an action on a judgment by the judgment creditor, for the use of his assignee, testimony that the attorney for defendants in the action in which the judgment was recovered was notified of the assignment, at a time when he was assuming to act for them in settling the amount to be paid in satisfaction of the judgment, is sufficient to warrant a finding that they had notice of the assignment, so as to preclude them from setting off a judgment thereafter recovered by them against plaintiff, and notice of the assignment to one of the defendants is notice to his co-defendant; they being liable as joint contractors. Smith v. Brown, 151 Mass. 338.

The assignees of A, an insolvent, brought an action against B on a note given to A. B pleaded as a set-off a sum paid by him, after the assignment, on a note given by A, and protested before the assignment, on which B was indorser. Held, that the set-off should be allowed. Morrow v. Bright, 20 Mo. 298.

In a suit in favor of the estate of an insolvent debtor, in Pennsylvania, the defendant cannot set-off a debt against the insolvent, purchased by him after the insolvency. Long v. Penn. Ins. Co., 6 Pa. St. 421.

If, after a creditor has filed his petition in bankruptcy, his debtor, with full knowledge of the fact, purchases a claim against him, he cannot set it off in an action brought by the assignee in bankruptcy to recover the original indebtedness. Smith v. Brinckerhoff, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 519; Smith v. Brinckerhoff, 6 N. Y. 305.

A debtor cannot set up, in compensation of a debt, a claim acquired against the creditor, with knowledge of the creditor's notorious insolvency, and to obtain an undue preference, even though the insolvency had not been judicially declared. Kennedy v. New Orleans Sav. Inst., 36 La. Ann. 1.

If a bankrupt on the eve of his bankruptcy, fraudulently deliver goods to one of his creditors, the assignee may disaffirm the contract and recover the value of the goods in trover; but if he brings assumpsit, he affirms the contract, and then the creditor may set off his debt. Benoist v. Darby, 12 Mo. 196.

exceed that of the plaintiff, cannot recover the excess above the assignee's demand.¹ The fact that the assignor has removed from the State,² or is insolvent,³ will not be a ground for setting off a demand against the assignee which could not otherwise have been set off. The defendant may, by his conduct upon receiving notice of the assignment, waive his right to a set-off against the assignee.⁴

(b) By and Against Assignees of Negotiable Paper.—It is a general rule that the assignee of negotiable paper may set it off against any claim which the plaintiff in an action against him may have against him.⁵ And this rule applies as well to an instrument indorsed overdue, as to one indorsed before due.⁶

A debtor may set off against the assignee a draft drawn by the assignor in his favor before he received notice of the assignment, although the liability of the assignor did not become complete until after he received notice of the assignment. *Northampton Bank v. 3. Watham v. Chamberlin, 8 Dana (Ky.) 164.

The insolvency of an assignor, at the date of the assignment of a note, is a good ground in equity to authorize the obligor in the note to set off demands which he held on the assignor, due by note before the assignment, acquired by purchase. Colyer v. Craig, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 73.

The surety on an administrator's official bond, being indebted to his principal by promissory note, on which a judgment at law has been rendered in favor of an assignee, may come into equity to enjoin the judgment and to establish an equitable set-off against it, on account of moneys which he had been compelled to pay as surety since its rendition, on averment and proof that the administrator is insolvent, and that the note was transferred with intent to defraud his creditors. Wood v. Steele, 65 Ala. 436.

4. Waiver.—Where, on receiving notice from the assignee of a bond of the assignment, the obligor paid to the assignee $100, and promised to pay the balance without mentioning any demand or set-off against the assignor, in an action afterwards brought on the bond, it was held that the defendant could not set off any demand against the assignor existing prior to the bond, but that it was to be presumed from the promise of the defendant and his silence on the subject of the set-off, that his claim against the obligee had been previously settled. Henry v. Brown, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 49. See also Gould v. Chase, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 226; Eels v. Finch, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 193; Wiggin v. Damrell, 4 N. H. 69; Albee v. Little, 5 N. H. 277.

A owed B for work; B assigned the debt to C; C gave notice to A, and A promised to pay it, though it did not appear to whom. Held, that A could not set off a note of B to a third person which was held by A when notified of the assignment, but of which he then gave no notice. Trow v. Braley, 56 Vt. 560.

In order to entitle the defendant in an action of assumpsit to plead in offset a promissory note executed by the plaintiff to a third person, it is rendered essential by statute that the note should have been transferred to the defendant and notice thereof given to the plaintiff previous to the commencement of the suit. Bragg v. Fletcher, 20 Vt. 351. See Call v. Chapman, 25 Me. 128.

A defendant in an action for labor done, may set off notes of the plaintiff purchased by the defendant, without a written assignment of such notes by the payee to such defendant. Allen v. McNew, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 46.

6. Cook v. Mills, 5 Allen (Mass.) 36.

Where a negotiable instrument is assigned before due without notice of fraud or other matter of defense, the assignee takes it free from any set-off,¹ but when he takes it overdue, a different rule prevails. The fact that the note is overdue should put the indorsee on his inquiry, and any set-off may be used against the holder which could be allowed against the payee.² But a set-off

In California, it was held that where promissory notes were signed after maturity, they were taken by the assignee subject to existing equities between the maker and payees, and under those circumstances could not be pleaded as a counterclaim. Lyon v. Petty, 65 Cal. 322.

1. In Fisher v. Leland, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 456; 50 Am. Dec. 805, the court by Shaw, C. J., said: "When an indorsee takes a bill or note by indorsement before it is due and without notice of fraud or other matter of defense, he takes it on an independent title by the indorsement, and will not be affected by any payment, set-off, fraudulent consideration, or other matter of defense which the acceptor or promisor might have had against any previous holder or prior party. And in order to give the highest credit and freest circulation of negotiable securities transferred by indorsement in favor of commerce, this principle is held with great firmness and strictness, and, by a series of recent decisions the rule upon the subject, instead of being relaxed, is held with greater strictness than formerly." Citing O'Keefe v. Dunn, 6 Taunt. 305; Dunn v. O'Keefe, 5 M. & S. 282; Gill v. Cubitt, 3 B. & C. 466; 10 E. C. L. 154; Goodman v. Harvey, 4 A. & E. 870; 31 E. C. L. 212; Foster v. Pearson, 1 C. Vermont.—In Vermont it was held under the statute of 1797 that the maker of a promissory note had a right to the same set-off against the indorsee that he would have against the payee. Martin v. Trobridge, 1 Vt. 477. But that statute was repealed, and it was held that after such repeal, the defendant in an action on a negotiable promissory note, which was sued in the name of the indorsee, could not plead in offset a claim in his favor against the payee of the note, notwithstanding it appeared that the indorsee held the note in trust for the payees, and that the suit was for their benefit for the purposes of collection only. Adams v. Bliss, 16 Vt. 39; Phelps v. Bulkely, 20 Vt. 17; Leavenworth v. Lapham, 5 Vt. 204.

The statute of New Jersey entitling the maker of a promissory note to be allowed all its offsets and discounts as well against indorsees as the payee, and whether indorsed before maturity or not, unless made payable "without defalcation or discount," leaves a note containing these words subject to be governed and regulated by the same rules as a note in the ordinary form before the statute. Youngs v. Little, 15 N. J. L. 1.

Notice.—In an action on a bill of exchange by the assignee, the court properly charged, as to set-off, that unless the defendant owned the note sought to be set off before the indorsement of the bill to plaintiff, and that at or before the transfer plaintiff knew the same, defendant would not be entitled to set it off against the bill. Manning v. Maroney, 87 Ala. 563.

Note Negotiable at a Bank.—If a note is made negotiable at a bank, the bank is authorized by the maker to advance on his credit to the owner of the note the sum expressed on its face. It would, therefore, be a fraud upon the bank to set up offsets against this note, in consequence of any transactions between the parties. Mandeville v. Union Bank, 9 Cranch (U. S.) 9.

In Fisher v. Leland, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 456; 50 Am. Dec. 805, the court by Shaw, C. J., said: "It seems, therefore, that the indorsement of a note after it is due, is, per se, such as to render the note void, or to defeat the right of the plaintiff. But if there are anterior circumstances, such as fraud in obtaining the note, the fact that the indorsee takes it when overdue is a circumstance of suspicion which should put him on inquiry, and leads to a presumption that he knew or by inquiry might know of such fraud, and is deemed constructive notice of it."

Under the Alabama statute of set-off where A and B make a note jointly to C, which he assigns to D, who brings an action upon it against A alone, a note made by C and assigned to B before notice of the assignment of the former note, can be used in set-off. Winston v. Metcalf, 7 Ala. 837.

Damages sustained by the makers of a promissory note, in consequence of the breach of an agreement by the payees to apply the proceeds of a consignment of wheat to the payment of such note, cannot be set off nor made the subject of a counterclaim, in an action brought upon a subsequent note, given by the same makers, to the payees of the first, and transferred to the plaintiff after maturity; the first note having been collected, and the second being a new and independent security and resting on a distinct consideration. Titus v. Himrod, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 581.

The maker of a note transferred after maturity, cannot set off against it a claim against the payee obtained before the transfer, when he was indebted to the payee at the time of such transfer, on other demands exceeding the amount of this claim against the payee. Collins v. Allin, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 356; 27 Am. Dec. 130.

In a suit against the maker of a promissory note, brought by an indorsee who received it from the payee after maturity, to secure a debt of the payee to him, and with the obligation to account to the payee for the balance of the note after the discharge of the debt, the defendant cannot set off a claim against the payee. Trafford v. Hall, 7 R. I. 104; 82 Am. Dec. 589.

In New Hampshire it is held that no set-off will be allowed against an indorsee of a negotiable instrument even though he takes it overdue. Chandler v. Drew, 6 N. H. 469; 26 Am. Dec. 704.

A set-off, bona fide acquired by the maker against the payee of a note before notice of its assignment to a third person, is not defeated by the subsequent discharge of the payee as a bankrupt. Harwell v. Steel, 17 Ala. 372.

In an action on a promissory note by a certain indorsee or transferee against the maker, a promissory note made by the plaintiff's immediate indorsee and another person payable to a stranger, is not available to the defendant as a set-off. Bostick v. Scruggs, 50 Ala. 10.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage securing promissory notes, the mortgagor cannot set off demands against an intermediate holder of the notes and mortgage unless founded on an agreement supported by a new consideration in pursuance of which the intermediate holder procured the notes, or which was entered into by the parties while the notes were in his hands. Brown v. Scott, 87 Ala. 453; Goldthwaite v. National Bank, 67 Ala. 549.

In a suit by an indorsee against the maker, a note given by the indorser to the defendant not mentioned in the defendant's statement cannot be allowed lowed in many of these States, is that the indorsee of an overdue note takes it subject only to those set-offs which arise out of the note transaction itself.¹ Only such claims against the indorser can be allowed against the indorsee of an overdue bill as were due the defendant at the time of the indorsement.² And

In an action by indorsee, the maker may set off a note of plaintiff's indorser indorsed to defendant with notice to plaintiff before his suit brought. Snow v. Conant, 8 Vt. 301. See Bliss v. Houghton, 13 N. H. 126.

In Massachusetts the indorsee of a promissory note overdue takes it subject to any payments made to any prior holder and to any right of set-off which the maker had against it in the hands of any prior holder. Bond v. Fitzpatrick, 4 Gray (Mass.) 89; Baxter v. Little, 6 Met. (Mass.) 10; 39 Am. Dec. 707; Sargent v. Southgate, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 312; 16 Am. Dec. 409.

It has been held that in a suit against the maker of a promissory note, who took it overdue as collateral security for a smaller debt, evidence that the plaintiff's assignor, while holding the note, received money towards its payment, the amount of which is not exactly proved, and after assigning the note to the plaintiff, declared that it was paid, is competent to prevent a recovery of a greater amount than the plaintiff's own debt, and any payments specifically proved to have been made to such assignor while he held the note, are admissible in further reduction of the amount to be recovered. Bond v. Fitzpatrick, 8 Gray (Mass.) 536.

In Missouri, the defendant may, under Wagner's Statutes, 1274, § 2, set off any claim which he may have had against a prior holder. Munday v. Clements, 58 Mo. 577.

But this case was overruled in part in Cutler v. Cook, 77 Mo. 388, and the defendant's right of set-off was limited to claims connected with the note itself.

The defendant may, in an action by the assignee of a negotiable note, transferred after it was due, under Iowa Code, § 2546, set up as a counterclaim a note executed by the assignor of the note sued on, and assigned to the defendant before he had notice of the transfer of his note to the plaintiff. *Downing v. Upon a suit in equity to redeem land from a mortgage given to secure negotiable promissory notes brought against one to whom the notes were indorsed and mortgage delivered before the notes became due, but to whom the mortgage was not assigned until afterwards, the plaintiff cannot set off against the defendant claims upon the mortgage acquired by the plaintiff after such indorsement and delivery and before maturity of the notes or assignment of the mortgage. Breen v. Seward, 11 Gray (Mass.) 118.

Where the maker of a promissory in such case no recovery can be had against him of any excesses above the amount of the instrument upon which he sues.¹ When a bill or note is obtained by the indorsee without valuable consideration, any set-off may be used against it in his hands which would have been available against the payee.² The rule as to negotiable paper assigned without indorsement is that it stands upon the same footing as paper not negotiable.³

(3) In Suits By and Against Receivers—(See also RECEIVERS, vol. 20, p. 135; NATIONAL BANKS, vol. 16, p. 197).—The general principle governing set-off against receivers seems to be that the receiver takes the property over which he is appointed receiver, subject to any set-offs which the defendant

note is sued by the indorsee, after maturity, he cannot set off the payee's note which he purchased before the indorsement of his own note, unless the latter note were due when he received notice of such indorsement. Chambliss v. Matthews, 57 Miss. 306.

The insolvency of the principal at the time he assigned a note held by him against the surety does not entitle the latter to an equity against the note in the hands of the assignee, he not having paid the debt for which he was surety until after he had notice of the assignment. Walker v. McKay, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 295.

In an action upon a note brought by the payee for the use of his assignee against the maker, the note having been assigned but not indorsed after due, and it not appearing that the payee was insolvent when he made the assignment, the maker cannot set off money paid by him as surety for the payee after he received notice of the assignment, although the money paid was upon a liability entered into before the assignment, but which had not been reduced into judgment against the surety before notice of the assignment was given. The maker had no demands upon the payee when he received such notice, but was only contingently liable for him. Follett v. Buyer, 4 Ohio St. 586.

The maker of a sealed promissory note before notice to him of the assignment thereof, acquired by assignment an interest in a bond given by the payee of the note to a third person. It was held in a suit by the assignee of the note against the maker, that the latter might set off his interest in the bond. Rider v. Johnson, 20 Pa. St. 190.

In Baxter v. Little, 6 Met. (Mass.) 7; 39 Am. Dec. 707, it was held that the defendant would not be allowed to set off a claim acquired after the assignment, even though he acquired it before he had notice of the assignment. But compare Anderson v. Van Alen, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 343.

The defendant pleaded that the note in suit was given for a debt due a third person, and for his benefit, and prayed that a claim since acquired against him might be set off. Held bad, for not alleging that the property of the note was not in the plaintiff, but the third person, either at or after the defendant's purchase of the claim set off. Bullock v. Dunbar, 17 Tex. 243.

1. Norton v. Foster, 12 Kan. 44.

2. Bone v. Sharp, 63 Iowa 223; Ryan v. Chew, 13 Iowa 589.

Plaintiff sued defendant on a note made by him to her husband and indorsed by the latter to her; defendant alleged that the transfer was fraudulently made to enable the husband to avoid paying money owed by him to defendant, and asked to set off his claim against the note; plaintiff demurred. Held, that the demurrer confessing the truth of the answer, plaintiff would be regarded as holding the note in trust for her husband, and defendant would be allowed to make the set-off. Hillhouse v. Adams, 57 Conn. 152.

Where the indorser of a promissory note has only a lien upon a part of the amount as collateral security for money due from the promisor, a debt due from the promisor to the maker of the note may set off against the residue upon motion, though such debt consists of a judgment recovered in another court. Moody v. Towle, 5 Me. 415.

The assignment to the receivers passes the rights and property of the corporation precisely in the same plight and condition, and subject to the same equities, as they were held by the corporation. Van Wagoner v. Paterson Gas Light Co., 23 N. J. L. 283.

In an action by an assignee for benefit of creditors of a bank to recover a balance due from another bank, a check drawn on the insolvent bank, which came into the hands of defendant prior to the assignment, and to which no defense is set up, should be allowed as a set-off, though defendant is not the owner of the check, but holds it for collection. Penn Bank v. Farmers' Deposit Nat. Bank (Pa. 1889), 20 Atl. Rep. 150.

In adjusting the concerns of a bank, by receivers of its assets appointed pursuant to the provisions of Massachusetts Stats. 1838, ch. 14, the bank tax imposed by Rev. Stats., ch. 9, § 1, and ch. 36, § 45, and due from the bank, may be set off against money due from the commonwealth to the bank on loan; so of money deposited in the bank by the agent of Charles River Bridge, in his capacity as such agent. Com. v. Phoenix Bank, 11 Met. (Mass.) 129.

Where a bank becomes insolvent and a receiver is appointed or its assets are placed in the hands of commissioners for liquidation, the depositor may still set off his deposit against his indebtedness. New Amsterdam Sav. Bank v. Tartter, 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 385; Clarke v. Hawkins, 5 R. I. 219; Finnell v. Nesbit, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 351; Platt v. Bentley, 11 Am. L. Reg. 171.

And where a depositor is indebted to a bank on a note, and before the note is due, the banker makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the depositor may insist that the note be paid out of the deposit. McCagg v. Woodman, 28 Ill. 84.

A debtor to a bank, whose charter is repealed, has an equitable right to offset every demand which he had against the bank at the time of the repeal of its charter, but not demands which he afterwards purchased. McLarm v. Pennington, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 102.

An assignee for the benefit of creditors, who sells the assigned stock on credit, cannot create an offset or payment in reduction of the price by incurring liabilities to his vendee, who knew of the trust, for articles knowingly furnished for his personal use and not on account of the trust fund. Paige v. Stephens, 23 Mich. 357.

It is said by Mr. High in his work on Receivers, that where the receiver is appointed in behalf of the creditors, a debtor cannot set off a claim against the receiver because this would give him a preference over the other creditors. High on Receivers, § 252. But although the above doctrine is upheld by Mr. High, in which he seems to be countenanced by the opinion in Clark v. Brockway, 3 Keyes (N. Y.) 13, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 351, yet it is doubtful whether it is the true doctrine, because there does not seem to be any such distinction in the functions of receivers. See RECEIVERS, vol. 20, p. 13. And it seems to be discountenanced by the case of Jordan v. Sharlock, 84 Pa. St. 366. It would seem that where the claim which the defendant sets up was due and payable before the receiver was appointed it would be a vested right which the appointment of the receiver could not take away. The case of common funds such as savings bank deposits, constitutes an exception to this rule, for then the defendant is entitled to a pro rata share of the fund after all claims against it are satisfied; and as he is entitled to this, even though it exceeds the amount originally deposited by him, so he is only entitled to this, though it should fall below the amount originally invested. But see Eastern Bank v. Capron, 22 Conn. 639; Haxtun v. Bishop, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 13. A receiver of an insolvent corporation, suing on a cause of action, on which the company itself could not have sued — e. g., to set aside a transfer or recover back payments made by the corporation in fraud of creditors — represents the creditors, not the corporation; and the

must have accrued in favor of the defendant before the proceedings for the appointment of a receiver were begun.¹ The fact however, that the claim for which suit is brought has not become due at the time that the receiver is appointed, will not prevent the defendant from using his set-off;² though the claim must be one in favor of the original owner.³ When the claim against which the set-off is attempted to be made is in the nature of a common or trust fund—as, for example, a deposit in a savings bank, or the capital stock of a stockholder—no set-off can be used against it in the hands of a receiver.⁴

In this case the defendant became the owner of a set-off after the insolvent had made an assignment but before the receiver was appointed. Held, that in an action by the receiver, the defendant could not set it up.

In an action by an assignee for the benefit of creditors to recover from the bank a balance to the credit and subject to the check of the assignor at the date of the assignment, the bank cannot set off notes or drafts indorsed by and discounted for the assignor before, but maturing after the assignment. Chipman v. Ninth Nat. Bank, 120 Pa. St. 86.

The debtor of an insurance company cannot, after the insolvency of the company, purchase a claim against the company and set it off to the full amount against his debt to the company, but only to the amount to which he would be entitled in dividends from the assets of the company. Long v. Penn. Ins. Co., 6 Pa. St. 421.

A made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors and among the assets assigned was a note by B to himself. B had paid a debt after the assignment, for which they were equally bound before the assignment. Held, that in an action by A's receiver, B might plead A's aliquot part of said debt as an offset against his individual note to A in the hands of his assignee. Chenault v. Bush, 84 Ky. 528.

One who rendered legal services to a corporation upon an employment by its officers during the pendency of an action for the appointment of a receiver for its property, and before the property passed under the control of the receiver, was held to be entitled to set off the value of such services against an account due by him to the corporation and which also accrued prior to the receivership, but not against a further account which accrued during the administration of the receiver. *Cook v. (4) In Suits By and Against Trustees—(See TRUSTEES).—The defendant in an action by a trustee, in his capacity as such, has the same rights, as regards set-off, that he would have against the cestui que trust.¹ A claim which the defendant has against the plaintiff individually cannot be set off against a claim due to the plaintiff as trustee.² Neither can a claim held by the defendant as trustee be set off against his individual debt;³ but he may set off a claim due him, individually, against a claim due by him as trustee.⁴ The trustee, when called upon to account for the property intrusted to him, cannot set off an independent debt due him from the cestui que trust.⁵

that in a court of law, in an action by one, in his own name, for a debt due to him in trust for another, the defendant could not set off a demand against the cestui que trust. (5) In Suits By and Against Executors and Administrators—(See also EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 7, pp. 372, 388).—In an action against an executor or administrator in his official capacity, the defendant may set off all claims against the plaintiff which his testator, or intestate, might have set off against him.¹ Therefore, the claim to be set off must have been due the testator or intestate.²

Where land was conveyed subject to a mortgage which the grantee by the terms of the deed was to pay, it was held that the mortgage constituted a demand against the grantee in favor of the grantor which might be set off in an action by the personal representatives of the grantee, after his decease, against the grantor, on a contract for the payment of money. *Rawson v. Where a judgment was rendered against an intestate in his lifetime, as principal and his security, which judgment was paid by the security, after the death of the intestate, it was held that such security could set off such judgment in a suit against him by the administrator on a demand due the intestate. Ray v. Dennis, 5 Ga. 357.

The defendant in an action by an administrator may use his set-off though the action is brought within the time during which the administrator is protected by statute from suits. Cunningham v. Baker, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 399.

Insolvency.—Where, after a suit is commenced by an administrator, the estate of his intestate is represented insolvent, the defendant may set off a note against the intestate which falls due pending the suit, though not due and payable when the action was commenced. *Bigelow v. A person in debt to an insolvent succession cannot plead, in compensation, judgments which he subsequently acquired against it. His claim must be paid in the same proportion with those of the other creditors and according to its rank. Dwight v. Carson, 2 La. Ann. 459.

A debtor to an insolvent estate cannot set off, against the claim on him, a note of the intestate's transferred to him after the intestate's death, for the full amount due on the note, but only for the percentage on that amount which the creditors of the estate would receive. Happoldt v. Jones, Harp. (S. Car.) 109.

A claim for funeral expenses may be pleaded as a set-off in a suit brought by the personal representative for a

A defendant in a suit by an administrator, in his capacity as such, cannot set off a demand of his against the intestate for money paid after his death by the defendant upon an obligation entered into in his lifetime as security for him. Such claims look to the general assets for satisfaction. Granger v. Granger, 6 Ohio 35.

Under the New Hampshire statute of set-off, where A gave a note payable to B and C, and B, having died, C received the amount of the note, in an action by B's administrator against C to recover one-half of the money, it was held that C could not set off a claim which he had against B's estate. Woodman v. Barker, 2 N. H. 479.

A purchaser of land at an administrator's sale, who, after his purchase, bought a claim due from the testator in his lifetime, which had been allowed against the estate, the amount payable on which was not then determinable by reason of the unsettled condition of the estate, was held not entitled to set off the claim in a suit for the purchase price of the land. Harding v. Shepard, 107 Ill. 264.

But it has been held that to entitle a defendant to a set-off against an executor or administrator, it is not necessary that the defendant's debt should have been actually due or really liquidated, at the death of the testator or intestate, provided it has become due and payable at the time the suit is brought against him by the executor or administrator, so that, if the decedent had lived, and had brought the suit himself at the time, the demand would have been a proper subject of offset. Rawson v. Copland, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 166. See also Bosler v. Exchange Bank, 4 Pa. St. 32.

Where the defendant had gone security for the plaintiff's intestate and had paid about twenty dollars for him since his death, he may set off such payments when sued on a debt he owed the estate of the principal. Burtley v. Hollenback, Wright (Ohio) 168.

present his claim to the personal representative and have it refused before pleading it as a set-off.¹ Conversely to the proposition that the set-off must have existed against the testator or intestate in his lifetime, in order to enable the defendant to set it up, the claim for which suit is brought must have been due the testator or intestate in his lifetime.²

Where a person is sued for a claim due by him personally, he cannot set off a debt due him in his representative capacity;³ nor

In Richardson v. Parker, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 529, the court by Caruthers, J., said: "The objection taken to it (the set-off) is that the debt against the defendant was a part of the assets to be distributed pro rata among all the creditors, and that the defendant's account must be filed and be subject to a ratable deduction if the estate turned out to be insufficient to pay all the debts. That if he is allowed to plead his account as a set-off, he will, in that way, get the whole of it to the prejudice of other creditors. Though this reasoning is plausible, it is not sound. The notes and accounts of the deceased are not assets if they have been discharged by payment, the creation of adverse accounts or otherwise. It is only what remains, after all just settlements with the debtors of the estate, which goes into the fund for distribution."

Administrators.—In a suit by an administrator for a debt due the estate of the decedent, which accrued after the death of the intestate, the defendant cannot set off a debt due him by the intestate before his decease. Much less can the husband in an action against him set off a demand which remains the separate property of his wife.¹

And, in an action by him alone, there cannot be set off a debt due by her before marriage.² Nor will the requirement of mutuality permit a set-off of a claim for damages (the statute permitting such matter to be set off) resulting from the tortious act of the plaintiff's wife, but for which the husband is not liable.³

The wife's choses in action do not by marriage become the property of the husband. While the husband may make them his by reducing them to possession, until this is done they remain the property of the wife. So with regard to the right of set-off, it seems that in an action by the husband and wife for a debt due to the wife before marriage, the defendant might, at common law, set off debts due the wife while single.⁴ But, as long as such debt is not reduced to possession by the husband, there cannot, in an action thereon by the husband and wife, be set off a debt due from the husband.⁵ If the husband should

2. 5 Rob. Prac. 969; 2 Chit. Contr. 1280. See Wood v. Akers, 2 Esp. 594. In this case Eyre, C. J., said: "For a debt of the wife dum sola, the action must be against husband and wife, and therefore cannot be set off against a claim made by the husband alone, and for which the action was brought." But, it appearing, in this particular case, that the husband, after the marriage, had ordered the debt to be paid, and thereby made it his own, the set-off was allowed. Eyre, C. J., continued: "But if it appeared that the husband, after the marriage, had ordered the debt to be paid; he thereby made it his own, and it could be set off."

It has, therefore, been laid down, as a general rule, that if the husband has, on some new consideration, made the debt due from his wife, dum sola, his own, so that the wife would not be a necessary party to an action for the recovery thereof, it may be set off in an action by the husband alone. 2 Chit. Contr. 1280; Wood v. Akers, 2 Esp. N. P. 594. See Norris v. Booth, 8 Ala. 907. See also, Mitchinson v. Hewson, 7 T. R. 348.

In Actions by Husband and Wife for Legacy to Debtor's Wife.—At common law a legacy to a debtor's wife was regarded as a legacy to her husband.

die before reducing the wife's choses in action to possession, such choses remain the property of the wife. Accordingly, in an action by the widow upon such choses, the defendant cannot set off a debt due from the deceased husband of the plaintiff.¹

In an action on a note made payable to a married woman after coverture, the right to set off may depend on whether the husband treats it as joint property or as several. If he chooses to treat it as several, he may deal with it as his own, and the consequence of his so treating it will be to let in by way of set-off to

But in equity it was held that the wife was entitled to a support for herself and her children out of such legacy before the husband's debt could be applied in extinguishment thereof, and therefore the executor could not set off the debt against the legacy except subordinate to this right of the wife to her own and her children's support. Elibank v. Montolieu, 5 Ves. 737; Carr v. Taylor, 10 Ves. 574. But if the wife's equity was discharged, as by her death, the legacy became the absolute property of the husband subject to his debt. Ranking v. Barnard, 5 Madd. 32. But at the present time, under statutes which have been enacted in most of the United States, a bequest to a married woman becomes her own separate property, and, therefore, these questions do not ordinarily arise. Crosswell on Ex. & Adm., § 484.

Where, in an action by the husband and wife to recover a legacy bequeathed to the wife, a judgment was rendered in their favor jointly, this was held not to be such reduction to possession by the husband as to authorize the set off of another judgment recovered by the defendant against the husband alone. Crittenden v. Alexander, 15 Gray (Mass.) 432. The court by Merrick, J., said: "The amount recovered by the plaintiffs was upon a claim on a legacy bequeathed to the wife; and although her husband had such interest in and right to it, that he might by reducing it to possession make it his own, yet, until he did that, her right to it was not extinguished. In fact, he never did reduce it to possession; for a suit in the name of himself and wife, and a judgment thereon jointly in their behalf, will not have such an effect. If the husband should in such case die before collecting the money or enforcing the judgment, the wife would as survivor take the whole benefit of it, and hold it to her own sole use; for her interest and right remain until the husband has, by some competent and sufficient act, reduced the demand to his own possession.

"A legacy to the wife may indeed, under our statutes, be taken by an attachment in a suit against the husband, and transferred by virtue of it in payment of his debts. But even in that case it is held to be a chose in action, which survives to the wife if the husband die pending the suit or before levy of the execution. Upon his decease, the lien created by the attachment is necessarily dissolved; and the wife will then, as survivor, hold and recover the legacy to her own use. If there be no collection of the money due, and no legal assignment or transfer of the legacy, nothing short of a judgment in a suit by the husband in his own name for its recovery, which he might undoubtedly successfully prosecute, will amount to such a reduction to possession as will bar the wife's right of survivorship." But see Tillett v. Com., 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 438.

On scire facias by husband and wife, on a recognizance, to recover the wife's distributive share of an estate, it was held that money lent to her husband before the recognizance might be set off. Wishart v. Downey, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 77.

1. In an action by a widow for her distributive share of an estate, the administrators cannot set off a debt due from the husband of the plaintiff, he never having reduced her distributive share into possession during his life. Flory v. Becker, 2 Pa. St. 470.

The debt of a husband, during coverture, cannot be set off, after divorce, against the wife's distributive share in his claim any debts due from him.¹ As a result of such election, a debt due from the wife before marriage cannot be set off against his claim.² But if, on the other hand, he elects to treat it as joint property of himself and his wife in her right, debts due her in her own right will be let in.³ But both classes of debts cannot be set off. There cannot, where the wife is joined with the husband in an action on a promissory note made to her, be set off a debt due by the husband.⁴ Nor can there at common law be set off a debt due by the husband and wife jointly.⁵

Where the action is to recover claims owned by the wife, there can be no set-off of claims due by the husband, although he is nominally a party plaintiff with his wife.⁶ The husband's liability cannot be set off against the claim of husband and wife in her her father's estate, though the decree of divorce is subsequent to the intestate's death. Fink v. Hake, 6 Watts (Pa.) 131.

And it was held that, in an action brought by the original obligees of a bond to the use of a feme plaintiff and her husband, an account may be set off for medical services rendered her before her marriage. Gary v. Johnson, 72 N. Car. 68.

4. If, under the general rule that a wife may join her husband in a suit when the cause of action will survive to her, the wife is joined with the husband in an action on a promissory note made to her, there cannot in such action, be set off a debt by the husband; for the reason why a husband may join his wife with him in the action is, that if he dies before judgment, the right of action will survive to her, and this right might be defeated if a set-off against a husband alone could be pleaded. Norris v. Booth, 8 Ala. 907.

But in the opinion delivered in this case, the court by Ormond, J., said: "He [the husband] might, if he had so elected, have brought the suit in his own name, and if he had done so, a set-off against him would have been good, but a set-off against his wife, when sole, could not have been received, because, by bringing the suit in his own name, he had elected to treat it as his separate property, and therefore a set-off not due in the same right would be inadmissible."

5. Norris v. Booth, 8 Ala. 907. The court by Ormond, J., said: "It is difficult to conceive of a joint debt due from husband and wife, which could be enforced at common law. A joint promise by them would in any conceivable case be void at law as it regards the wife, and would, in effect, be the promise of the husband, . . . which, we have seen, would be inadmissible as a set-off."

Beckwith*, 31 Conn. 596.

It was held that a bond for purchases made at an estate sale cannot be set off against the distributive share of the purchaser's wife in the estate. Farrow v. Farrow, 12 S. Car. 168.

right as executrix or administratrix.¹ And where the husband is joined as a technical party, but the cause of action is only against the separate property of the wife, debts due from the plaintiff to the husband cannot be set off.² So where the action is against husband and wife for the husband's individual debt, there cannot be set off a claim of the wife against the plaintiff.³ And where an action in the name of both husband and wife is really to recover a claim due the wife, there can be no set-off of the husband's indebtedness.⁴

Where a suit is brought by husband and wife for a debt due them jointly, a claim against one of them cannot be set off.⁵ So in an action by husband and wife on a note executed by the defendant to them as joint payees, a defendant cannot set off a debt due to him by the husband.⁶

In a suit by a wife alone to enforce a demand due her as her separate property, there can, of course, be no set-off of a debt due from the husband.⁷

Under the statute of Iowa, a husband has no common or joint interest in a right of action accruing to the wife on account of a tort inflicted against her. Hence, in an action against husband and wife jointly, they cannot set up by way of set-off or cross-demand, a claim against the plaintiff for a malicious prosecution of the wife, nor a claim for damages accruing to the husband for a malicious prosecution of his minor children or himself by the plaintiff. Musselman v. Galligher, 32 Iowa 383.

But where A, an unmarried woman, boarded with B, a married woman, and loaned her money to assist her in improving her separate estate, and, subsequently marrying, together with her husband, filed a bill against B and her husband for the payment of a note given by B, praying that this note might be paid out of her separate estate, it was held that a judgment of the husband of B against the complainants recovered for the board of A, might be set off. *Lane v. So, in a suit to recover rent due to the separate estate of a wife, a demand against her husband cannot be set off although he had been authorized by her to receive the rent without accounting, and although he has offered to allow a part of the claim against him toward the debt for rent. Naglee v. Ingersoll, 7 Pa. St. 185. And see Ferguson v. Lothrop, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 625.

(7) In Suits By, Against, and Between Principal and Agent.—Where a person deals with one whom he knows is acting as a mere agent in the transaction, he cannot, in an action by the principal, set off a claim due him by the agent in his personal capacity.¹ Where, therefore, a factor sells goods as factor, whether he discloses the name of his principal or not, the purchaser cannot, in an action by the principal, set off a debt due to him from the factor.² And this is so, although it is clear that the defendant made the purchase bona fide.³ A fortiori, such set-off will not be allowed if there are circumstances showing collusion between the factor and buyer.⁴ In the case of sale of goods, it is sufficient if notice of agency is given the purchaser before delivery and acceptance thereof.⁵ A person, who buys goods of an agent, and, under a misapprehension that the goods belong to the agent, gives the agent credit in his individual capacity, will, nevertheless, not be permitted to make such set-off, if the misapprehension is not induced by the principal.⁶ So, it was held that where an agent has authority to sell personal property, but having neither possession nor the indicia of ownership, sells in his own name without disclosing his principal, the purchaser may not set off a debt due him from the agent in an action by the principal for the

The defendant was a person whose business it was to receive money, for cattle sold in Smithfield, from the purchaser. To an action brought by the owner of the cattle sold, for the money so received by the defendant, the latter claimed to set off a debt due from the salesman to himself. Evidence was offered to prove that, by the universal custom of the market, the defendant was considered as the debtor of the salesman, and not of the owner, with whom he had no connection. But Lord Kenyon refused the evidence, remarking, that no custom could deprive the plaintiff of that which, by the law of the land, he was entitled to receive; and he dwelt upon the defendant's knowledge that he received the money for the use of another; which, he said, distinguished the case from that of a banker receiving money from a factor whose principal he had never heard of. *Goode v. contract price.¹ It has been stated, as a general rule, that if the buyer has such opportunities of knowing that the seller is but an agent as to put him, the buyer, on his inquiry, then he is precluded from making any set-off against the agent personally.²

If a person knows that he is dealing with a mere agent, it is no matter that he does not know whose agent he is; a person who contracts with an agent, knowing him to be only an agent, but not knowing whose agent he is, cannot, in an action brought by the principal, avail himself of a set-off good against the agent.³

On a sale by the known factor of a house, the principal may immediately maintain an action against the vendee. Browne v. Robinson, 2 Cal. Cas. (N. Y.) 341.

So, in Baring v. Corrie, 2 B. & Ald. 137, Coles & Co., who were brokers and also merchants, sold to Corrie & Co., in their own names, sugar belonging to Baring Bro. & Co., who brought this action for the price. The true nature of the contract was entered by Coles & Co., in their broker's book, which the defendants might, if they pleased, have seen; nor had Coles & Co. possession of the goods, which were lying in dock, whence, by usage of the docks, they could not have been taken without the order of the plaintiffs, whose principal clerk signed the delivery order. Under these circumstances, the court held that the defendants had no right to set off against the plaintiff's demand for the price of the goods, a debt due from them to Coles & Co. "It is to be observed," said Bayley, J., "that the plaintiffs did not trust the brokers with either the muni-ments of title or the possession of the goods. There is another circumstance by which the defendants might easily have ascertained whether Corrie & Co. acted as brokers or not. According to the usual course of dealing, a broker is bound to put down in his book an account of the sales made by him in that capacity, so that if the defendants had asked to see the book, they would instantly have discovered whether Coles & Co. acted as brokers or not. I therefore think that the plaintiffs did not, by their conduct, enable Corrie & Co. to hold themselves out as the proprietors of these goods, so as to impose on the defendants; that defendants were not imposed on; and even supposing that they were, they must have been guilty of gross negligence."

3. Whart. Ag., § 405; Miller v. Lea, 35 Md. 396; 6 Am. Rep. 417; Ilsley v. Merriam, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 242; 54 Am. Dec. 721; Bliss v. Bliss, 7 Bosw. (N. Y.) 339.

So a plea by the defendants that they did not know, and had not the means of knowing, that the person of whom they bought the goods was agent for the plaintiffs, was held a bad plea for not averring that the defendants did not know, and had not the means of knowing, that such person sold the goods to them as a mere agent. The court, by Willes, J., said: "Upon the true construction of this plea, taking all the averments together, it is quite consistent that the seller, Moll, was a factor, and sold the goods in his own name, as is usual with factors, and yet that the defendants may have bought the goods, well knowing that Moll was not the owner, but that he had a principal, though they did not know who that principal was. This would satisfy all the averments in the plea. Indeed, the plea studiously avoids averring that which is the gist of a defense of this sort, viz., that the defendant knew nothing of any principal." Semenza v. Brinsley, 18 C. B. N. S. 478; 34 L. T. C. P. 161; 114 E. C. L. 467.

cumstances, set off the broker's debt in a suit on the contract by the undisclosed principal.¹

As a person dealing with one as agent cannot set off claims against such agent in a suit by the principal, so, on the other hand, where the principal is sued by such person, he cannot avail himself of a claim by the plaintiff to the agent who transacted the business.²

Even though suit is brought by a factor, instead of the principal, for the price of goods ostensibly sold by him as agent, the purchaser, if he has a set-off against the principal, may generally employ it in such suit with the same effect as if it were brought by the principal.³ Thus, if a sale of goods is made by an auctioneer, who sues for the price of goods sold by him as such, the defendant may set off a debt due him from the principal vendor.⁴ It may be stated, as a general rule, that an agent, if he sues in his own name for a claim due the principal, sues as trustee for the principal, and is therefore subjected to those set-offs that apply against the principal.⁵ But where the agent conducting the dealings is not merely the representative of the principal, but has

The distinction between a factor and a broker is noticed by Abbott, C. J., and Bayley, J., in Baring v. Corrie, 2 B. & Ald. 137. Abbott, C. J., says: "The distinction between a broker and a factor is not merely nominal, for they differ in many important particulars. A factor is a person to whom goods are consigned for sale by a merchant residing abroad, or at a distance from the place of sale, and he usually sells in his own name, without disclosing that of his principal; the latter, therefore, with full knowledge of these circumstances, trusts him with the actual possession of the goods, and gives him authority to sell in his own name. But the broker is in a different situation; he is not trusted with the possession of the goods, and he ought not to sell in his own name. The principal, therefore, who trusts a broker, has a right to expect that he will not sell in his own name." And referring to the cases cited in which set-off had been allowed, the chief-justice said that "in all the cases cited, the factor was in actual possession of the goods, and the purchaser could not know whether they belonged to him or not, and at all events, they knew that he had a right to sell the goods." Bayley, J., said: "It is besides to be observed that the plaintiffs did not trust the brokers with either the muniments of their title, or the possession of the goods, as was done both in the case of Rabone v. Williams (reported in a note to George v. Claggett, 7 T. R. 339), and that of George v. Claggett, 7 T. R. 339."

2. Thus, the maker of a note, who put it into the hands of a broker for sale or advances, when sued by one who has advanced money upon it, cannot set off a debt due from the plaintiff to the broker. Carman v. Garrison, 13 Pa. St. 158.

Where an insurance was affected by an agent, for the benefit of whom it concerned, and the agent brought an action on the policy, in his own name, against the underwriters, for the benefit of the owners of the ship, it was held that the underwriters could not acquired some interest, or lien, or other claim in virtue of his agency, he is entitled to protection to the extent thereof against both the principal and the other contracting party. Thus, for example, a factor, or other agent, has a lien for his commissions and advances upon the goods intrusted to him for sale, and when he has sold the goods, this lien will attach upon the price in the hands of the purchaser. In such case, the purchaser cannot set off against the principal so as to defeat the agent's claim.¹ But the rule is otherwise where the purchaser had no notice of the agent's claim, and made the purchase in reference to his claim against the principal; to entitle the factor, or other agent, in such case, to this privilege, he must give notice of his claim to the purchaser before the right of set-off attaches.²

Where a person who, as agent for another, has had dealings with the defendant, sues for a claim due him in his own right and not as the representative of a principal, the defendant cannot set off his claims against the principal.³ And where such person is himself sued for a claim against him in his own person, he cannot set off a debt due his principal.⁴

After having stated the application of the rule of mutuality respecting set-off where a person has dealt with an agent as such, the right of set-off where a person has dealt with an agent supposing him to be the sole principal, may be considered. In general, if the agent is the supposed principal, the person dealing with him has a right to consider him to all intents and purposes the principal, and is entitled to the same right of set-off as if the agent were the true and only principal.⁵ It is immaterial whether the suit be brought in the name of the principal or of the factor or agent.⁶ Where a factor dealing for a principal conceals that fact and sells and delivers goods in his own name, it is now a well-established rule that, though the real principal may bring an action upon such contract against the purchaser, the latter may set off debts or demands due from the agent, in his own right, against the amount claimed for the loss. Hurlbert v. Pacific Ins. Co., 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 471.

It appeared that the plaintiff made advances to the company on the goods, and was to be reimbursed out of the proceeds of sale; "he was consequently," said the court, "not simply the agent of the company, but he had an interest of his own in the proceeds of the sale, and there would be no equity in allowing his vendees to retain out of the proceeds of the goods thus consigned to and sold by him, and upon which he had a right to rely for the reimbursement of his advance independent of claims which his vendees might have against his consignors." *Young v. set off any claim he may have against the factor, in answer to the demand of the principal.¹ This rule is to prevent the hardship under which a purchaser would labor, if, after being induced by peculiar considerations, such, for instance, as the consciousness of possessing a set-off, to deal with one man, he could be turned over and made liable to another, to whom those considerations would not apply, and with whom he would not, perhaps, willingly have contracted. As may be seen from what has been above stated, this right of set-off has been restricted to those cases where this reason will apply. It has been enunciated as a general rule by good authority, that, in order to entitle the defendant to the benefits of the above rule, the defendant's plea, if special, must show that the contract was made by a person whom the plaintiff had intrusted with the possession of the goods; that that person sold them as his own goods in his own name as principal, with the authority of the plaintiff; that the defendant dealt with him as and believed him to be the principal in the transaction, and that before the defendant was undeceived in that respect the set-off accrued.²

In explanation of the statement that the agent must have made the sale in his own name with the authority of the plaintiff, it may be said that constructive authority is sufficient; if the goods are intrusted to a factor, who has by custom an implied authority to sell in his own name, the right to set off is not affected by the fact that the factor, in selling in his own name without

1. The rule given in the text was stated by Lord Mansfield as early as the year 1738. Rabone v. Williams, 7 T. R. 360, n. After having been frequently acted upon at Nisi Prius, this principle was at length, in the year 1797, confirmed by the full Court of King's Bench in a case where it was decided that if the factor sells goods as his own and the buyer knows nothing of any principal, the buyer may set off any demand he may have on the factor against the demand for the goods made by the principal. George v. Claggett, 7 T. R. 359; Peake's Add. Cas. 131; 2 Sm. L. C. (8th Am. ed.) 118. So it was held that, if an agent employed to collect money and remit it to his principal, should lend it to a person to whom he is indebted in a larger amount, the latter, if he has no knowledge that the money does not belong to the agent, may retain it as a set-off, and may resist a suit therefor by the principal, although notice of the claim of the principal is given to him before the suit is brought. *Lime Rock Bank v. disclosing the agency, is acting in contravention of the express directions of his principal.¹

It seems to be sufficient if the plea states that the defendant did not know that the person with whom they dealt acted as a mere agent; it is not necessary, in such plea, to state that the defendant had no means of knowing that he acted in such capacity.²

Where an agent does not disclose his agency, and thereby becomes liable on a contract made for the benefit of a third person, he cannot, in a suit on such liability, set off a debt due by the plaintiff to the undisclosed principal.³ But it has been said by good authority that, as a result of his liability, he has the right to set off, in such action, his own claim against the plaintiff's.⁴ It has been said that if a factor is employed to sell goods, and he sells them in his own name, not disclosing the fact of the agency, he may set off the price of the goods against a debt personally

1. Where no limitation of an agent's authority was disclosed to the buyer a set-off of a debt due from the agent was held a good defense to a claim by the principal against the buyer, even though the agent was under an agreement with his principal not to sell in his own name. Ex parte Dixon, In re Henley, 4 Ch. Div. 133; 46 L. J. Bank. 20; 35 L. T. N. S. 644; Borries v. Imperial Ottoman Bank, L. R., 9 C. P. 38.

2. Borries v. Imperial Ottoman Bank, L. R., 9 C. P. 38; 43 L. J. C. P. 3; 7 Moak's Rep. 138. In this case there was an account for goods sold and delivered. To this the defendants pleaded that the goods were sold and delivered to them by Scheitlin & Co., then being the agents of the plaintiffs, and that Scheitlin & Co. sold the goods in their own name, and as their own goods, with the consent of the plaintiffs; that, at the time of the sale, the defendants believed Scheitlin & Co. to be the owners of the goods, and did not know that the plaintiffs were the owners of or interested therein or that Scheitlin & Co. were their agents; and that before the defendants knew that the plaintiffs were the owners of the goods, or Scheitlin & Co. were agents in the sale thereof, Scheitlin & Co. became indebted to the defendants, who claimed a set-off. The plaintiffs replied that before the sale the defendants had the means of knowing that Scheitlin & Co. were merely apparent owners of the goods, and that the same were indorsed to Scheitlin & Co. merely as agents, and that Scheitlin & Co. were agents, and as such, sold the goods to the defendants. The court held that the plea was good, and the replication no answer to it. Coleridge, C. J., said: "The essence of the defense is, the real state of the defendants' minds when they bought the goods of Scheitlin & Co. They assert that it was this, that they believed the goods to be the goods of Scheitlin & Co., and did not know or believe that the plaintiffs were the owners of or interested in them. That brings the case distinctly within the rule in George v. Claggett, 7 T. R. 359; and that is the form of plea which has been commonly in use to raise a defense of this kind. I observe that in two cases—Purchell v. Salter, 1 Q. B. 197; 41 E. C. L. 501; and Semenza v. Brinsley, 18 C. B. N. S. 467; 34 L. J. C. P. 161; 114 E. C. L. 778,—where the plea contained an averment that the defendant had no means of knowledge, no notice is taken of that allegation in the judgment. If it be necessary to aver that the defendants had not notice that the plaintiffs were the owners of the goods, I think that is substantially averred in this plea by the statement that Scheitlin & Co., with the consent of the plaintiffs, sold the goods as their own, and that the defendants believed them to be the owners of them, and did not know that the plaintiffs were the owners."

due from himself to the purchaser, at least if the principal does not interpose against it.¹

Where an undisclosed principal in a certain transaction, is sued on another matter by the person who had dealt with the agent as principal, the defendant can probably not set off a claim arising out of such dealings.²

It has been held that there is nothing in the doctrine of agency which forbids an attorney, when sued for money collected by him for the plaintiff, to set off a note held by him, executed by the plaintiff.³

(8) In Suits By and Against Partnerships; Ostensible and Dormant Partners.—Set-off in suits by or against partnerships or partners has been treated elsewhere.⁴ With regard to set-off in the case of dealings with an ostensible partner in ignorance of the existence of a dormant one, which is also treated elsewhere,⁵ it may be pointed out that it is in the main governed by the same principles that are applied in the case of agency.⁶

(9) *In Suits By and Against Principal, Surety, and Principal and Surety.*⁷—While it is a rule, under the requirement that a set-off must be between all the parties to the action, that a matter can be set off only when it is due to all the defendants, yet, when there are several defendants, one or more of whom are the principal debtors and the rest merely sureties, this does not prevent a debt due to those of the defendants only who are principals from being set off against the plaintiff's demand against the principals and sureties together. Though the right has been denied,⁸ that this may be done, is clearly established by the weight of authority and principle.⁹ The principle upon which such a set-off is

In an action upon a promissory note given by a principal and surety on a contract of the principal, it is competent to recoup the damages of the principal growing out of the contract, to the same extent as if the note had been given by the principal, and he alone were sued. Waterman v. Clark, 76 Ill. 428.

It was held that where a plaintiff in a judgment against two defendants—against one as principal and the other as surety—is a non-resident of the State, a debt due from him to the principal may, in equity, be set off against the judgment. Livingston v. Marshall (Ga. 1889), 11 S. E. Rep. 542. And in Downer v. Dana, 17 Vt. 518, the court by Redfield, J., said: "Although a court of equity will not, any more than a court of law, allow a set-off of joint debts against separate debts, yet there are many exceptions. One important exception is where the debts are in reality mutual, as where one of the joint debtors is a mere surety." To the same effect in Brewer v. Norcross, 17 N. J. Eq. 219. See also Wagner v. Stocking, 22 Ohio St. 297.

In Indiana, the rule as stated in the text is, in substance, declared by statute. Indiana Code, 1852, § 58; Ind. Rev. Stat. 1888, § 349. See Larrimore v. Heron, 16 Ind. 350. In an action on contract against two or more defendants, a claim in favor of one of the defendants may be pleaded by him as a set-off, if he alleges that he is the principal in the contract, and that his co-defendants are sureties therein, but not otherwise. Harris v. Rivers, 53 Ind. 216. So in an action upon a promissory note against a maker and surety, a claim in favor of the maker may be set off. Slayback v. Jones, 9 Ind. 470. Indiana Rev. Stat., 1881, also has a provision relating to this matter. Under the provision of section 349 of this statute, which allows a debt due the principal defendant from the plaintiff to be pleaded as a set-off against a note sued on, the "principal defendant" means the person who, according to the relations existing between the makers of the note at the time of the commencement of the suit, sustains the character of principal debtor, or the one then primarily liable for the debt. Sefton v. Hargett, 113 Ind. 592.

In Virginia, the Code provides that, although the claim of the plaintiff be jointly against several persons, and the set-off is of a debt not to all, but only to a part of them, the set-off shall be allowed, if it appear that the persons, against whom such claim is, stand in the relation of principal and surety, and the person entitled to the set-off is the principal. Virginia Code, 1849, p. 654. So, it has been held under the Virginia Code, in an action of debt on a bond against the principal and two sureties, that the principal may set off a judgment recovered by a third party against the plaintiff and assigned to the principal. Wartman v. Yost, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 595.

In Iowa, "a comaker or surety when sued alone, may, with the consent of his comaker or principal, avail himself by way of set-off of a debt or liquidated demand due from the plaintiff at the commencement of the suit to such comaker or principal; but the plaintiff may meet such set-off in the same way as if made by the comaker or principal the plaintiff, for which a third person, not a party to the suit, is surety.¹

Where, in an action against principal and surety, the principal's claim is allowed to be set off, it seems that if the set-off exceeds the plaintiff's claim, judgment should be rendered in favor of the defendant only by whom it was pleaded; it was held to be error to render judgment for any amount against the plaintiff in favor of the principal and his surety jointly.²

A cause of action in favor of the surety alone cannot be set off in an action against a principal and surety.³

himself." Iowa Rev. Stats., 1860, p. 524.

1. See Hoffman v. Zollinger, 39 Ind. 461. There are cases which in effect hold that the debt of the principal, although there are sureties thereupon, may, for the purpose of set-off, be regarded as the sole debt of the principal. It is regarded as the debt of the plaintiff alone, since he is bound to reimburse his surety, and may therefore be set off against a demand claimed by him. In Ex parte Hanson, 18 Ves. 232, it was said that "the joint debt was nothing more than a security for the separate debt; and upon equitable considerations a creditor, who has a joint security for a separate debt, cannot resort to that security without allowing what he has received on the separate account, for which the other was the security."

Under a statute providing that "in all actions upon a note or other contract against several defendants, any one of whom is principal and the others sureties therein, any claim upon contract in favor of the principal defendant, and against the plaintiff, or any former holder of the note or other contract, may be pleaded as a set-off by the principal or any other defendant," it was held that in an action by the assignee of a note, not payable in bank, the defendant may set off a joint note made by the payee of the note sued on, as principal, for his individual debt, and by another as his surety, and held by the defendant as assignee thereof, before notice of the assignment of the note sued on. While it was admitted that this case was not within the letter of the statute above set out, it was considered to be clearly within its spirit and should be governed by it. Hoffman v. Zollinger, 39 Ind. 461.

It has been held that, against a note executed to a husband, a note executed by him and by his wife as surety may be set off. Abshire v. Corey, 113 Ind. 484. In another case, it was held that, as a note signed by a principal and surety may be set off against a note due to such principal alone, so a judgment against two, while it is admitted or proved that one is principal and the other surety, would stand on the same ground as an offset, as a note against the same person in the same capacity. Andrews v. Varrell, 46 N. H. 17.

2. G brought suit on an appeal bond against C and his surety S, and C, the principal on the bond, pleaded a set-off consisting of money claimed to have been paid by C for the benefit of plaintiff. And at his request a judgment was entered against the plaintiff for one cent damages and for costs, from which judgment the plaintiff appealed. The court, upon appeal, by Pleasants, J., said: "The judgment is technically erroneous in being for damages in favor of both defendants, upon a cross-demand of one only. The case of Himrod v. Baugh, 85 Ill. 435, seems to establish the right in this State to set off a claim of the principal debtor alone in a joint action against him and his surety. We can feel the force of the position that the surety has an interest in such claim to the extent necessary for his own complete protection, and in such application of it to that extent, but are unable to perceive any reason for allowing him to participate in a judgment against the plaintiff for any excess. Such a practice would seem to be in violation of principle, and therefore such a judgment, though for only a nominal amount, is not within the protection of the rule de minimis." Gillian v. Coon, 10 Ill. App. 43.

3. Corbett v. Hughes, 75 Iowa 281. This decision was under a statute which limited the right of set-off to matter "constituting a cause of action in favor of the defendant, or all the defendants if more than one,

The rule allowing the principal's demand to be set off in an action against both principal and surety, by no means establishes that the surety on a joint and several obligation can, when he alone is sued thereon, plead as a set-off any demand due from the plaintiff to a person not a party to the suit, even though that person stands in the relation of principal to the defendant as a surety.¹ It has been denied that a surety, when so sued, is entitled to set off a claim due from the creditor to the principal; for the principal is interested in such claim to as great, and possibly to a greater extent than the defendant, and it cannot be disposed of without bringing him before the court, so that his rights, as well as those of the defendant, may be protected.² But a contrary view has been taken, and it has been held that a person who is sued on his against the plaintiff, or all of the plaintiffs, if more than one." Iowa Code, § 2659, sub-div. 3. The court by Reed, J., after quoting this provision of the statute, said: "There is no room for argument as to the effect of that provision. Under it a cause of action which arises out of matters independent of the contract sued on must be in favor of all the defendants and against all of the plaintiffs, or the parties must seek their remedy thereon in a separate action. It cannot be pleaded as a counterclaim. True, we held in Reeves v. Chambers, 67 Iowa 81, when a principal and surety were sued jointly on the contract, that they were entitled to plead as a counterclaim a cause of action arising in favor of the principal alone, out of matters independent of the contract sued on.

"But the grounds of that holding are clearly set forth in the opinion. Under the law the surety has the right to have the property of the principal first appropriated to the satisfaction of the debt, and the courts will enforce that right. The application of the debts due from the plaintiff to the principal to the satisfaction of the secured debt is but a mode of enforcing it. And that right creates in favor of the surety an exception to the rule prescribed by the statute quoted. But when the cause of action is in favor of the surety alone, the case is not within the exception, but is governed by the rule."

Where an action is brought against the sureties on an administration bond, after the death of their principal, to recover the amount due the estate, the sureties cannot plead as a set-off, an indebtedness of the intestate to the principal on the bond; nor a debt paid by the widow of the principal for which the intestate's estate was liable. Vastine v. Dinan, 42 Mo. 269.

This question was considered by the court of appeals of New York in the case of Gillespie v. Torrance, 25 N. Y. 306; 82 Am. Dec. 355. There an accommodation indorser sought to avail himself, in a suit upon the note, of a breach of warranty as to the quality of the goods for which the note was given. The court, by Selden, J., after showing that the defense was not failure of consideration for the note, but setting up a counterclaim of the principal maker against the payee of the note, says: "In the case which was shown on the trial there would seem to be a strong equity in favor of the defendant to have the note canceled or reduced by applying toward its satisfaction the damages which appear to be due to Van Pelt (the principal in the note) for the breach of warranty. It is, however, an equity in which Van Pelt is interested to as great, and possibly to a greater extent than the defendant, and cannot be disposed of without having him before the court, so that his rights, as well as those of the defendant, may be protected." The claim sought to be set up by the surety in that case was more strictly in the nature of a recoupment than of a set-off.

obligation as surety is entitled to set off any claim of the principal against the creditor which would have been available to his principal had the action been against him.¹ And, even in those jurisdictions where the surety's general right when sued alone, to set off his principal's claim against the creditor is denied, such set-off will, in certain cases, be allowed in equity; where the principal has a valid claim against the creditor and is insolvent, the surety will not be compelled to pay the claim and seek a doubtful remedy against his insolvent principal, but on being sued on his contract will be allowed in equity to prove the insolvency of his principal and set off the claim against the creditor.² But this set-off is only for the protection of the defendant, and is allowed only for the purpose of reducing the plaintiff's claim.³

Of course, if the debt sought to be set off by a surety who is sued alone on his liability, has been properly assigned by the principal to the defendant before the commencement of the action, it will be allowed in set-off.⁴ This is not a debt due the principal, but is due to the defendant himself, and one who is sued on his obligation as surety may, of course, set off a debt due himself by the creditor in reduction of the principal indebtedness.⁵

It would seem to go more toward a reduction of the liability on the note, by showing a failure to perform the undertaking which was the consideration of the note. Such a defense by the surety presents a stronger basis than does an attempt to use a distinct claim of his principal as a set-off.

In the case of La Farge v. Halsey, 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 171, where the sureties on a lease claimed the benefit in and sought to set off in a suit against them for rent due a claim of the lessee against a lessor for damages, the court, by Woodruff, J., said: "If by reason of any fact stated as part of this defense, Laura Keene (the principal in the lease) might have set up a counterclaim or recoupment, these defendants cannot. She has assigned no such claim to them, and without that they have no right to use what is in her a distinct cause of action, nor to use any part of it for their own benefit. If they are compelled to pay the rent they must seek reimbursement from her, and she will have her recourse to the plaintiff for any damages she has sustained. That claim for damages these defendants have no right to diminish nor impair; and if she were to prosecute such claim, nothing done or proved by these defendants could be permitted to diminish her recovery."

1. Jarratt v. Martin, 70 N. Car. 459. In Indiana it seems that this was expressly authorized by section 58 of the Code, 2 G. & H. 89. It was held, thereunder, that the sureties on the bond of a guardian, in a suit upon the bond, might plead by way of set-off an indebtedness of the relator to the guardian. Myers v. State, 45 Ind. 160.

A bond was executed to E by S as principal, and with H as surety. E owed a partnership, consisting of S and N, on an account, and N assigned his interest in the debt to S. E became bankrupt, and S proved the account in the register in bankruptcy and afterwards became bankrupt. The assignee in bankruptcy of E sued H on the bond, and H pleaded the account as a set-off. It was held that, under the Virginia Code, ch. 168, par. 4, the account was a valid set-off for H, in an action against him on the bond. Edmunds v. Harper, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 637.

And a surety cannot set off a demand which his principal would not be entitled to set off. Gentry v. Jones, 6 J. Marsh. (Ky.) 148.

5. Ex parte Stephens, 11 Ves. 24.

It has even been held sufficient to authorize this set-off, that the plea of set-off alleged that it was with the concurrence and assent of the principal, and the note which constituted the set-off, was in the plea offered to be produced in court.¹ But it is probable that such concurrence and assent may be evidenced in such manner as to bind the principal.²

The principal debtor may sometimes intervene for the purpose of making a set-off of this kind.³

3. That a principal debtor might intervene for the purpose of defeating the recovery by the creditor against the surety, by means of a set-off consisting of a claim by such principal against the plaintiff, was established by the construction of the Minnesota statute which allows "any person who has an interest in the matter in litigation, in the success of either of the parties, or against either or both," to intervene and either prosecute or defend. Minnesota Gen. Stat. 1878, ch. 66, § 131. The construction placed upon this statute is that the interest must be of such a direct and immediate character that the intervenor will either gain or lose by the legal operation and effect of the judgment. The court by Gilfillan, C. J., said: "If, in the action as originally brought, judgment had gone against the defendant and had been enforced against him, the intervenor might have to reimburse him; but, had it discharged the defendant of liability to the creditor, it would have terminated the intervenor's obligation as indemnitor. Indeed, we can hardly conceive a case more within the spirit and intent of the statute than one in which the intervenor stands in the relation of indemnitor to one of the parties." Becker v. Northway, 44 Minn. 61.

6. See FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGES, vol. 8, p. 231, n. 1.

It has been held that on foreclosure of a mortgage the mortgagor may set off a demand due him for money advanced to the complainant. Chapman v. Robertson, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 627; 31 Am. Dec. 264. But on foreclosure of a mortgage by an assignee thereof, the mortgagor cannot set off the amount of payments made by him for the benefit of the mortgagee prior to the assignment, under a general understanding that such payments were to be credited on the mortgage debt, when they were not so credited in fact. Post v. Carmalt, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 70; 37 Am. Dec. 484. Compare Lofland v. Maull, 1 Del. Ch. 359; 12 Am. Dec. 106.

7. It has been held that in a suit to redeem land sold under a power in a mortgage, the plaintiff may make use of a set-off which exists in his favor; the plaintiff's right of set-off not being defeated by the fact that the mortgagee sold under the power instead of filing a bill to foreclose, and thus forcing the mortgagor to take the initiative. Conner v. Smith, 88 Ala. 300.

Upon a suit in equity to redeem land from a mortgage given to secure negotiable promissory notes, brought against one to whom the notes were indorsed and the mortgage delivered before the notes became due, but to whom the mortgage was not assigned until afterwards, it was held the plaintiff cannot set off against the defendant claims upon the mortgagee, acquired by the plaintiff after such indorsements and delivery, and before maturity of the notes or assignment of the mortgage. Breen v. Seward, 11 Gray (Mass.) 118.

(13) *In Actions Against Stockholders of Corporations.*¹

(14) *In Suits By and Against Public Officers.*²—In a suit by a public officer in his official character, the defendant cannot set off a claim against him personally.³ It would seem to follow that in a suit by one who is a public officer, in his private character, a claim which the defendant could recover against him as the representative of the public, cannot be set off.⁴

(15) *In Suits By and Against Guardian.*⁵—The courts will not allow, much less aid, a guardian to apply the estate of his ward to the discharge of his individual indebtedness. Therefore, the debt due a defendant as guardian cannot be set off against a demand owing from him individually.⁶ This rule is also supportable by the application of the requirement of mutuality. So, claims due the defendant from the plaintiff as guardian cannot be set off against a claim of the plaintiff in his own right.⁷

7. Pleading and Practice—a. IN GENERAL.—It was provided by the statute of 2 Geo. II, ch. 22, § 13, that the debts which could be set off under the statute, might be given in evidence on the general issue, or pleaded in bar, as the nature of the case should require. It was, in decisions under this statute, said that if, at the time of action brought, a larger sum was due from the plaintiff to the defendant, it was more proper to plead the set-off, but that where the sum intended to be set off was less than that for which the action was brought, a notice of set-off should be given;⁸ but an eminent authority has said that these statutes did not seem to warrant this distinction.⁹

3. In an action by a constable to recover the price of property sold by him, the defendant cannot set off the individual debt of the plaintiff. Coffman v. Hampton, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 377; 37 Am. Dec. 511.

Property attached by an officer was replevied from him. In the replevin he recovered judgment for a return of the property, and, no return being made, he brought an action on the replevin bond. It was held that damages against the officer personally for a false return on the writ in the original action, could not be recouped or set off against the damages recoverable by him in the action on the bond. Wright v. Quirk, 105 Mass. 44.

In an action to recover a penalty for violating the excise law, it was held that defendant could not set off a claim for money loaned plaintiff, who was an overseer of the poor and had no authority to borrow money. Denniston v. Trimmer, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 393.

4. In a suit upon a note given by the committee of a school district for the erection of a school-house, damages sustained by the district, by a failure to perform the contract, cannot be set off against the note, where they are held personally liable thereon. Bayliss v. Pearson, 15 Iowa 279.

5. In Suit Against Ward.—It was held, that a garnishee might set off against the amount that he owed, notes taken by and payable to his guardian, a feme covert, for money belonging to him, the notes having come into his possession upon his coming of age. *Merriman v. 9. 1 Chitt. Pl. 600; 5 Rob. Prac. 686. With reference to the use of plea and notice, Mr. Chitty says: "In general a notice of set-off was less expensive

When the set-off is not pleaded, this statute (2 Geo. II, ch. 22, § 13) provided that the defendant's demand might be given in evidence under the general issue, so as, at the time of pleading such plea, notice should be given of the particular debt intended to be insisted upon by the defendant, and upon what account it became due. But as there is no general issue in an action on a specialty, and a plea of non est factum to an action of covenant on an indenture for non-payment of money only puts in issue the deed, such plea is not a general issue within the meaning of this act, and therefore it was required that, in an action of covenant or debt on a deed, though no penalty be proceeded for, a debt should be specially pleaded.¹

The above-mentioned statute was supplemented by that of 8 Geo. II, ch. 24, § 5, which provided that in all cases where either the debt for which the action was brought, or the debt intended to be set off against the same, accrued by reason of a penalty contained in any bond or specialty, the debt intended to be set off should be pleaded in bar; that in the plea should be shown how much was truly and justly due on either side.² But by the English statutes at present in force, set-off must, in all cases, be specially pleaded.³

The provisions respecting pleading in the statutes of set-off generally adopted in the United States show a considerable similarity to the provisions in the English statutes. Common to a number of States is the provision that the defendant may plead a set-off or give notice thereof with the general issue; in yet other States a notice under the general issue is the prescribed mode; and in a few States notice of set-off may be given under the plea of payment; in others the provisions are peculiar to their particular State, though they bear a general resemblance to the above-mentioned enactments.⁴

than a plea; but where the plaintiff in his replication must necessarily have admitted a part of the defendant's case, a plea was preferable, and a set-off was usually pleaded in country causes, to save the trouble and expense of proving the service of notice. 1 Chitt. 2. In Attwooll v. Attwooll, 2 E. & B. 23; 75 E. C. L. 23, it was said that the plea, in that case, could not be supported under the statute of 8 Geo. II, ch. 24, § 5, requiring such plea to show "how much is truly and justly due on either side."

4. Statutory Provisions Governing the Pleading of Set-off.—A setting forth of the provisions of some of the statutes will, perhaps, best serve to elucidate the subject.

In New Hampshire, the statute (New Hampshire Gen. Stat., ed. 1867, p. 426) provides that the defendant may plead a set-off or give notice thereof with the general issue.

In North Carolina "one debt may be set off against the other, either by being pleaded in bar, or given in evidence on the general issue, on notice given of the particular sum intended to be set off, and on what account the same is due." North Carolina Rev. Code (ed. 1855), p. 176.

In New York, by the Revised Laws of 1813, which were in force in that Unless the set-off be pleaded or notice given, either of these modes of setting it out being prescribed by the statute, the State at the time of the adoption of the Revised Statutes, a set-off could not be pleaded. It could only be taken advantage of by notice, with the general issue. 1 New York Rev. Laws 315; Alsop v. Caines, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 399; 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 24; Wheeler v. Raymond, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 231; Williams v. Crary, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 368. But the Revised Statutes provide that "to entitle a defendant to a set-off he must plead or give notice of the same."

In Mississippi the statute requires that the set-off shall be filed at the time of pleading, or be set out in the plea with so much particularity as to apprise the opposite party of the nature of it. See Smith v. Winston, 2 How. (Miss.) 601.

In Virginia, "in a suit for any debt, the defendant may at the trial prove and have allowed, against such debt, any payment or set-off which is so described in his plea, or in an account filed therewith, as to give the plaintiff notice of its nature, but not otherwise." Virginia Code 1849, p. 655.

In Georgia and Florida the statutes (Cobb's Dig. Georgia Laws (ed. 1851), p. 487; Florida Dig. Stats. (ed. 1847), p. 348) provide that "in all actions to which the defendant or defendants may intend to plead a set-off, he, she, or they shall, at the time of filing the plea, file therewith a true copy or copies of the subject-matter of such set-off."

In Michigan, the statute (Michigan Comp. L. (ed. 1857), p. 1152) provides that "to entitle a defendant to a set-off, he must annex a notice thereof to his plea of the general issue." That notice of set-off must be given with the plea. See 2 Michigan C. L., 1871, § 5797; 2 How. Ann. Stat.; Brennan v. Tiersort, 49 Mich. 397.

In Rhode Island, the defendant may plead the general issue and file the account in set-off with the plea. Rhode Island Rev. Stat., ch. 185, § 11.

In Illinois, under the twenty-ninth section of the practice act, in actions ex contractu, the defendant having claims against the plaintiff "may plead the same, or give notice thereof, under the general issue, or under the plea of payment."

In Colorado, "Where the defendant has a demand against the plaintiff, he may plead it specially, or give notice under the general issue, or prove his demand under the plea of payment." Colorado Stat. 1867, p. 507.

In New Jersey, a plea of payment with notice of set-off seems to be authorized by the statute. "If the defendant or defendants cannot gainsay the deed, bargain, contract, or assumption upon which he, she, or they is or are sued, it shall be lawful for such defendant or defendants to plead payment of all or any part of the debt or sum demanded, giving notice in writing with the said plea, of what he, she, or they will insist upon at the trial for his, her, or their discharge, and to give any bond, bill, receipt, account, bargain, or contract, so given notice of, in evidence." Elmers New Jersey Dig. (ed. 1855), p. 747.

Under the early statutes of Indiana, it was necessary that a plea of set-off should be in the form of a plea of payment, setting out, in the conclusion, the special matter of set-off. Indiana Stat. 1817, p. 38; Indiana Stat. 1823, p. 294. Hamilton v. Noble, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 187; Coe v. Givan, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 366; Young v. Harry, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 167. See Indiana Rev. Stat. 1852, p. 39.

By the terms of the Pennsylvania Defalcation act of 1705, matter may be set off under the plea of payment. No other plea than payment is necessary to let in a set-off. Balsbaugh v. Frazer, 19 Pa. St. 95; Calvin v. McClure, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 385. It has been said that the defendant may at his election either plead a set-off specially or give it in evidence on notice, under the plea of payment. Henderson v. Lewis, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 382; 11 Am. Dec. 733. But there must be one or the other. The positive words of the act of February 14 1729-'30, § 10, have prevented the court from admitting in evidence a set-off of which there was no plea or notice. Boyd v. Thompson, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 217.

The plea of "set-off," is improper, under the Pennsylvania statute, and is only warranted by long practice. Coulter v. Repplier, 15 Pa. St. 211. And there is this difference between the plea of payment with notice of defalcation, and that of payment with leave to give an equitable defense in evidence, that under the former, the defendant may recover a balance against the plaintiff, whilst under the latter he can only have a general verdict. King v. Diehl,

It has been held that a set-off is not a defense to an action, and it is not to be confounded with the defense, but should be pleaded separately.²

b. CONTENTS OF PLEA AND NOTICE OF SET-OFF.³—Since a set-off is, in effect, as has been often said, in the nature of a cross-action, a plea of set-off must state facts which would constitute a good cause of action if the party pleading were the plaintiff in the prosecution of the suit therefor.⁴ So, likewise, when it is necessary to file a notice of set-off, such notice takes the place and performs the office of a declaration in an independent action, and should be in fact and substance, if not in form, as full and clear and definite as a declaration, in order that the plaintiff may have the same opportunity of knowing precisely what claim is made against him, that he would have if it were made by an original action.⁵ The plea or notice must describe the debt intended to be set off with the same certainty as in a declaration for the like demand.⁶ And it must do more; not only must it contain Set-off must be pleaded or notice given. A defendant cannot reduce a plaintiff's demand for goods sold by producing a debtor and creditor account in the handwriting of the plaintiff's clerk, showing goods sold by defendant to plaintiff, unless he has pleaded or given notice of set-off. Fothergill v. Jones, 1 C. & P. 133; 11 E. C. L. 345.

2. Bowen v. Hale, 4 Iowa 430; Freeman v. Fleming, 5 Iowa 460.

3. Form of Plea of Set-off.—In England the form of a plea of set-off given by the first common-law procedure act was as follows: "The plaintiff at the commencement of this suit was, and still is, indebted to the defendant in an amount equal to the plaintiff's claim, for (here state the cause of set-off as in a declaration) which amount the defendant is willing to set off against the plaintiff's claim." Broom's Com. 203.

McCracklin*, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 322; Morrison v. Hart, Hard. (Ky.) 157; Coleman v. Coleman, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 14; Chauvrand v. Maillard, 4 N. Y. Supp. 126.

Where an action accrues by virtue of a statute, and a general form of declaration is thereby given, a plea of set-off founded on such statute should bring defendants within its terms. Moore v. Metropolitan Sewage Manure Co., 3 Exch. 333.

5. 2 Pars. Contr. 746, citing Barb. on Set-off; Babb. on Set-off (6 Law Lib.). The notice should contain the substance of a declaration. Brady v. Hill, 1 Mo. 315; 13 Am. Dec. 503.

The notice must describe the demand intended to be set off with reasonable certainty. Gogel v. Jacoby, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 120; 9 Am. Dec. 339. See Lewis v. Culbertson, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 48; 14 Am. Dec. 607.

6. The New Hampshire Pub. Stat. 1891, p. 619, § 11, required that the plea all the requisites essential to the validity of pleas in bar, but must, of course, show that the debt is of a nature which entitles the defendant to set it off against the plaintiff's claim.¹

Where the demand would have been recoverable under the common money counts in a declaration, the amount may be set off under a similar description of the debt, however particular the circumstances may have been.² A plea of set-off so much resembles a declaration, that two parts of a plea of set-off, stating distinct debts, are considered as two counts in a declaration, and if one part be good, a demurrer for the misleading in the other part must be confined to the defective statement, and a general demurrer to the whole is not sustainable;³ though it is a general rule that, if one part of a plea in bar be bad, the whole is insufficient.⁴ So, in a plea of set-off, an imperfect statement of one debt intended to be set off will not prejudice a sufficient allegation of another ground of set-off.

A separate plea of set-off stands on the same ground with other special pleas and must not profess to be an answer to more than it really does answer. Therefore, a special plea of set-off which professed to answer the whole cause of action, but answered only a part, was held bad on general demurrer.⁵

It has been said that it seems that if the defendant desires to obtain a judgment for the balance of his claim, beyond the set-off under the statute, he must demand such judgment in his plea.⁶ But it has, on the other hand, been held that a notice of set-off need not expressly claim a balance in the defendant's favor, in order to warrant his recovering one; that it is enough if it set forth his demand in the usual form.⁷

c. PARTICULARS OF SET-OFF.⁸—Shortly after the enactment of the statute of 2 George II, ch. 22, the court adopted the rule, that in all cases where the defendant pleads or gives notice of set-off generally, without specific particulars, the plaintiff had the right to call upon him for the particulars of such set-off, or preclude him from giving evidence.⁹ This practice has been adopted in or notice of set-off shall describe the debt or demand "with the same certainty as is required in a declaration." It was held that a plea of set-off need not specify any particular sum; and if it does, the party is not bound to prove that precise sum. Crump v. Hubbard, Litt. (Ky.) Sel. Cas. 222. But it has been held that a defendant cannot set off more than the sum pleaded. Prior v. Jacobs, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 169; Fugit v. Ewing, 9 Ind. 345.

9. 2 Archibald's Pr. 197; Graham's Pr. 439; 1 Burrell's Pr. 180, 193, 433. In regard to this practice it was said by Tindal, C. J., in Bartholomew v. Carter, 3 M. & G. 131; 42 E. C. L. 75, that the United States.¹ It has been said in effect that, as the defendant has a right to call on the plaintiff for the particulars of his demand,² equal justice seems to require that the plaintiff, also, should be allowed to demand of the defendant the particulars of his set-off, when they are not specified in the plea or notice.³ Under a judge's order for particulars, the defendant or his attorney should deliver a particular account, in writing, of the items of his demand, and when and in what manner it arose.⁴

While the demanding and granting of particulars undoubtedly facilitate the trial of a cause, they will not be permitted to obstruct the justice of it. The party who objects to the particulars as insufficient must make the complaint at the proper time. He cannot wait until the trial of the cause, and then raise an objection which, if earlier made, might have been disposed of.⁵

"when 2 George II., ch. 22, gave the power of pleading a set-off, no one surmised that the practice, shortly afterwards adopted by the courts, that unless a particular of the set-off was delivered, no evidence of set-off should be given under the plea, was an excess of jurisdiction on their part, or a repeal of the enactment. It was a matter of practice only, subsidiary to the full and complete execution of the intention of the act." Colorige, J., in Rankin v. Hamilton, 15 Q. B. 192; 69 E. C. L. 185, which was decided in 1850, observing that when the statute first authorized the practice of setting off the cross-demand, instead of suing for it in a cross-action, or having recourse to a court of equity, it made notice at the time of pleading a condition precedent, thought that "the judges may well have held that the condition was not performed by a bare notice specifying no particulars."

As early as 1811, it was, according to Heath, J., "every day's practice where a defendant gives notice of a set-off, for the judges at chambers to make an order that the defendant shall not be at liberty, upon the trial, to give evidence upon the set-off, unless he delivers to the plaintiff a particular of the items of set-off." Bateman v. Phillips, 4 Taunt. 163. To the same effect see Young v. Geiger, 6 C. B. 541; 60 E. C. L. 540; Ibbett v. Leaver, 16 M. & W. 770. See also Wallis v. Anderson, 1 M. & M. 291; 22 E. C. L. 310.

1. See Peden v. Mail, 118 Ind. 556.

In New Jersey, the statute provides that, "If the defendant plead or give notice of a set-off, he shall annex to his plea a copy of the account, and a bill of particulars of the demand, and a copy of the note or other writing so intended to be set off, with the names of the subscribing witness or witnesses, if there be any; and if in the plea or any subsequent pleading, profert be made of any writing, a copy thereof shall be annexed to such pleading, with the name of the subscribing witness or witnesses, if there be any; and no evidence thereof shall be given on the trial unless so annexed; and the same shall be copied as a part of the circuit record, and recorded with the pleadings." Elmer's New Jersey Dig. ed. 1855, p. 639.

Under the New Hampshire statute a plaintiff is entitled to one continuance in case of set-off, unless a particular statement of the debt or demand, with a notice that a defendant will set off the same, has been served on the plaintiff ten days before the sitting of the court. New Hampshire Gen. Stats. (ed. 1867) p. 426.

2. That this may be done, see BILL OF PARTICULARS, vol. 2, p. 246.

3. See Mercer v. Sayre, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 248.

4. Tidd's Pr. (6th ed.) 622; Young v. Geiger, 6 C. B. 541; 60 E. C. L. 540; Mercer v. Sayre, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 248.

5. Lovelock v. Cheveley, 1 Holt N. P. 552; 3 E. C. L. 218; Ibbett v. Leaver, 16 M. & W. 770.

So, in Barnes v. Henshaw, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 426, it was said that it will not avail a party to object to the generality of a bill of particulars at the trial, if the cause of action or matter of defense be embraced in the bill, even in the most general terms. The party, if dis-

Between the particulars and the evidence there should be no variance calculated to mislead.¹ And the party delivering his particulars must be considered as having confined himself to the proof of the subject-matter comprised in those particulars.² When the particulars of the defendant's set-off are delivered, they are, at the trial, considered as incorporated with the plea or notice; and, on production of the order and proof of the delivery of particulars, the defendant will not be allowed to give evidence of any demand not included in them.³ Where, however, the plaintiff puts in evidence his books of account, the defendant may claim the benefit of any credits to him found therein, though not contained in his set-off filed.⁴

d. REPLICATION TO SET-OFF.—So long as the defendant pleading a set-off is considered in respect to his plea in the light of a plaintiff, and is bound to produce the same testimony to support it that would be required to enable him to recover in that character, it follows that the plaintiff against whom the set-off is pleaded ought to be permitted by way of replication to make the same defense which the law would allow him to enter by way of plea had he been sued as defendant in an independent action.⁵ The plaintiff may avail himself in his replication of any fact which shows that the set-off is groundless. If to a plea of set-off the plaintiff reply "that he was not nor is indebted, etc.," he may under this replication prove that he has paid the amount claimed as a set-off.⁶ So the plaintiff may show under this replication that the amount claimed to be set off has been paid by a third party, and that he had ratified such payment at the time of trial.⁷ To an answer interposing promissory notes as a set-off, a reply denying the defendant's title to the notes and setting forth facts showing the title to be in another is good.⁸

So it is a good replication to a plea of set-off that after plea pleaded, the plaintiff paid the debt.⁹

So if there be an action against two or more to recover a joint debt, and the defendant's plea is set-off, it is a good replication to such plea that before plea pleaded one of the defendants had become bankrupt.¹⁰ satisfied with the bill, should have applied for further particulars.

It was held that evidence offered under a plea of set-off, to which no bill of particulars or copy of the cause of action was attached, would not be excluded from the jury by reason of the absence of such bill of particulars. Farwell v. Tyler, 5 Iowa 535.

5. Holding v. Smith, 1 Murph. (N. Car.) 154; Worth v. Fentress, 1 Dev. (N. Car.) 419; Watts v. Greenlee, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 87.

In Indiana, a set-off may be replied to a set-off. Blount v. Rick, 107 Ind. 238. But in Maryland, "there can be no such thing." Spencer v. Almony, 56 Md. 551.

6. Stockbridge v. Sussams, 3 Q. B. 239; 43 E. C. L. 716.

9. Eyton v. Littledale, 4 Exch. 159.

10. New Quebrada Co. v. Carr, L. R., 4 C. P. 651.

So the plaintiff may prove under nil debet that the debt sought to be set off is due from himself and a third party.¹

But the plaintiff cannot give in evidence under the replication of nil debet to a plea of set off his discharge under the bankruptcy act;² or that the debt sought to be set off is barred by the Statute of Limitations;³ and he must, therefore, reply the same specially. While the plaintiff may, in general, reply the Statute of Limitations to the defendant's plea of set-off,⁴ yet, and this is in accordance with what has already been said,⁵ if both the demands of the plaintiff and defendant accrued more than six years before the time of pleading, and the plaintiff issued process to prevent the Statute of Limitations affecting his demand, it will equally prevent the statute from barring the defendant's set-off, although the latter issued no process.⁶

c. PROOF.—The defendant must in general give the same evidence in support of his set-off as he would be bound to give if he were suing for the recovery of the debt claimed to be due him. The burden of proof is on the defendant to establish his set-off.⁷ He must show that the claim was acquired in proper time⁸ unless this is presumed.⁹

A receipt or assignment of a bond, offered in offset, must be proved at the trial. Turberville v. Self, 4 Call. (Va.) 580.

It was held that an instruction that the burden of proof was on the defendant to establish his set-off, was fatally defective for leaving out of view that the burden of proof in the first instance was on the plaintiff to show the original indebtedness, and a new promise to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Nolan v. Vosburg, 3 Ill. App. 596.

But the rule which precludes a defendant from recovery unless he sustains his plea of set-off by a preponderance of the evidence, does not limit him to the proofs introduced by him, but he takes the benefit of the evidence in his favor introduced by the plaintiff. Laird v. Warren, 92 Ill. 204.

8. Gross v. Van Wick, Minor (Ala.) 7; Kelley v. Garrett, 6 Ill. 649; Hadley v. Wray, 76 Ind. 476; Freeland v. Man, 1 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 531; Heidenheimer v. Wilson, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 636; Smith v. Ewer, 22 Pa. St. 116.

A defendant who wishes to set off bills or bank notes issued by the plaintiffs, must show that he was the owner or possessor of the notes before the commencement of the suit. Jefferson Co. Bank v. Chapman, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 322.

So a defendant offering in evidence as set-off a promissory note payable to a third person or bearer, must show that the title to the note was in him at the commencement of the action. Godley v. Barnes, 13 Rich. (S. Car.) 161.

The mere possession of a note on its face negotiable, having on it an indorsement in blank, which is offered as a set-off, is not evidence that it belonged to the defendant at the commencement of the suit. Smith v. Ewer, 22 Pa. St. 116; Crayton v. Clark, 11 Ala. 787.

9. It is a well settled rule that every holder of a negotiable note is considered prima facie to be a bona fide holder. BILLS AND NOTES, vol. 2, p. 391, n. 1. He is accordingly presumed to have taken it before due. Chit. on

II. RECOUPMENT—1. Definition.—Recoupment is the right of the defendant, in the same action, to claim damages from the plaintiff, either because he has not complied with some obligation of the contract upon which he sues, or because he has violated some duty which the law imposed upon him in the making or performance of that contract.¹

2. Reconvention—a. DISTINGUISHED.—Reconvention is the name given in Louisiana and Texas to a species of claim which the defendant is allowed to set up. It is, like recoupment and counterclaim, more extensive than set-off. It has been defined to be a cross-bill, or something in the nature of a cross-bill—a

Bills, 248. When, therefore, a negotiable note is pleaded as a set-off, and the presumption, in accordance with the above principle, is that the defendant was the bona fide holder at the commencement of the action, the burden is upon the plaintiff to show the contrary. Griffin v. Evans, 23 Ga. 438.

A defendant may file in set-off a note made by the plaintiff, and payable to the defendant or bearer, without proof that he received it before the commencement of the action. Clark v. M'Elroy, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 147.

1. Bouv. L. Dict.; And. L. Dict.

It has also been defined to be a keeping back of something which is due, because there is an equitable reason to withhold it. Ives v. Van Epps, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 155.

In Barber v. Chapin, 28 Vt. 413, the court by Redfield, J., said: "It will not aid the clearness of our perceptions to go into the cases upon the subject of recoupment, or recouper, as it was one time called. The modern use of this term is confessedly so indefinite as to afford no reliable grounds upon which it is safe to proceed." And in Davenport v. Hubbard, 46 Vt. 200, 206, the court, by Ross, J., said: "It is sometimes difficult to discriminate set-off from reduction or recoupment. . . . When the claim of the defendant is for a breach of a stipulation in the contract other than, and independent of, the one relied upon by the plaintiff, we are not aware of any authority which holds that he is barred from prosecuting his claim in an independent action, if he fails to avail himself of it as a defense to the plaintiff's suit. We think he is not barred; for the reason that his claim may exceed that of the plaintiff, so that he could not have a full remedy by way of reduction or recoupment; and by set-off he might be deprived from securing only so much of his claim as might happen to be due from him to the plaintiff." But see infra, this title, Counterclaim, provisions of the New York Code and others, for judgment in such case.

In Merrill v. Everett, 38 Conn. 40, 48, the court, by Butler, C. J., said: "The right to recoup arises where the action is upon the contract, or some obligation arising out of it, and there has been a breach of some divisible part of it, or of such obligation."

In Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 108, 113, the court, by Searls, J., said: "If a defendant failed to recoup damages where he might do so, he was afterward precluded from maintaining an action therefor, as he is now by our code for counterclaims arising under subd. 1 of § 438, . . . which includes a case of action arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action. . . . A contract is a 'transaction,' but a 'transaction' is not necessarily a contract." Citing Xenia Branch Bank v. Lee, 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 372.

And in New York, in 1831 (prior to the present code), in Reab v. McAlister, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 109, 117, the court, by Walworth, Ch., after reviewing the civil and the English law as to recoupment, said: "Indeed, if one of the parties is insolvent and the other responsible, it is the only way in which justice can be done; at least as to small demands, which will not bear the expense of a suit in chancery to obtain an equitable set-off."

cross-action by the defendant against the plaintiff in the same suit.¹

b. MATTERS OF PRACTICE—(1) In Louisiana.—Those cases of reconvention which illustrate the general principles of recoupment will be considered in the proper places for comparison with the decisions of other States upon the various branches of the subject. Those, however, which turn upon the peculiar provisions of the codes of these two States for the pleading and practice, may better at once be here presented.

The Louisiana Code declares: "In order to entitle the defendant to institute a demand in reconvention, it is requisite that such demand, though different from the main action, be nevertheless necessarily connected with, and incidental to the same; as, for instance, the demand instituted by the possessor in good faith, against him who sues in order to evict him, for the purpose of obtaining payment for the improvements made on the premises." La. Code, art. 375.²

1. See Black's L. Dict.; Burrill's L. Dict.; And. L. Dict. The term is derived from the reconventio of the civil law.

2. The Louisiana Code has not changed the civil law as to reconvention; unliquidated demands may be pleaded therein. Agaisse v. Guedron, 2 Martin N. S. (La.) 82; Montgomery v. Russell, 7 Martin N. S. (La.) 290.

A claim for unascertained damages may be pleaded in reconvention, if arising out of the same transaction which is the subject of the suit. Thus, in an action by a surety for money paid the defendant can reconvene for damages from fraudulent conduct at an execution sale under the bond. Wilcoxon v. Bufford, 10 La. 183.

In a superintendent's action for wages, his employer may reconvene for money delivered to pay the hands and retained unaccounted for. Bayne v. Fox, 18 La. 80.

If A in his individual name, but for the benefit of B, a non-resident, sues C, C may reconvene without citing B. Smith v. Atlas Steam Cordage Co., 41 La. Ann. 1. Compare State Bank of N. O. v. Evans, 32 La. Ann. 464; Spinney v. Hyde, 16 La. Ann. 250.

A reconventional demand must be necessarily connected with and incidental to the main action. A demand for damages from the attachment as illegal is not such incident. Coco v. Guyral, 36 La. Ann. 293. Nor, in a landlord's proceeding, a tenant's claim for buildings erected. D'Armond v.

Pullen, 13 La. Ann. 137. Compare Harris v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 16 La. Ann. 140; Knox v. Thompson, 12 La. Ann. 114.

If A sues B for a commission on a collection, B may reconvene for the amount in A's hands on which the commission is charged. Hynson v. Wheeler, 15 La. Ann. 409.

A plea in reconvention must be established with legal certainty. So held in a suit for specific performance, where there had been a delay of two months to ascertain the damaged condition of perishable goods. Frank v. Hollander, 35 La. Ann. 582.

A reconventional demand need not be equally liquidated with the one to which it is opposed. Cain v. Pullen, 34 La. Ann. 511.

Such demand must be tried and appealed with the main suit. Crescent City Live Stock, etc., Co. v. Larrieux, 30 La. Ann. 740. Compare Sientes v. Odier, 17 La. Ann. 153.

The Supreme Court cannot revise a judgment upon a reconventional demand of less than $1,000. Stevenson v. Whitney, 33 La. Ann. 655. But where the plaintiff's claim is for less and the defendant's for more than $1,000, the court will pass upon the latter and not upon the former. Lamorer v. Avery, 32 La. Ann. 1008.

A plea in reconvention need not be put in issue by answer or default. Bayly v. Stacy, 30 La. Ann. 1210.

A reference to the answer in a former suit, without more, is not an adequate

(2) In Texas.—The Texas Code declares: "In every action in which a defendant shall desire to prove any payment, counterclaim or set-off, he shall file with his plea, an account stating distinctly the nature of such payment, counterclaim or set-off and the several items thereof; and, on failure to do so, he shall not be entitled to prove the same, unless it be so plainly and particularly described in the plea as to give the plaintiff full notice thereof."¹ allegation of a reconventional demand. Teal v. Lyons, 30 La. Ann. 1140. Further as to the requisites of specification, see Winthrop v. Jarvis, 8 La. Ann. 434.

As to the credit to be given by a Louisiana court to a reconventional demand set up by one of the parties before judgment in a Texas court, see McFarland v. White, 13 La. Ann. 394.

As to the necessity of a distinct verdict on a reconventional demand, see Collins v. Graves, 13 La. Ann. 95.

A suit cannot be brought against a State indirectly by way of reconvention. State v. Leckie, 14 La. Ann. 646.

Where both parties to an action in which there is a plea of reconvention fail to make out a case, each must pay his own costs. Peniston v. Somers, 15 La. Ann. 679.

The plaintiff against whom a plea of reconvention is filed cannot discontinue his action. Lanusse v. Pimpienella, 4 Martin N. S. (La.) 439; Barrow v. Robichaux, 15 La. Ann. 70; Smith v. Amacker, 15 La. Ann. 299.

1. Tex. Rev. Stat. 1889, art. 1266.

The courts are justified in recurring to the Spanish system of jurisprudence to ascertain the objects and extent of the plea of reconvention. Walcott v. Hendrick, 6 Tex. 406.

A plea in reconvention, the matter of which is connected with one of two contracts, on which the plaintiff sues, cannot be dismissed by the discontinuance of the suit as to the contract connected with the matter of the plea, and it cannot be inferred that the defendant consented to the dismissal of his plea because the record does not show that he objected to the discontinuance. Slaughter v. Hailey, 21 Tex. 537.

A plea in reconvention against the plaintiff and a co-defendant, non-resident and not served, does not prevent the plaintiff from dismissing the suit as to the one not sued, if he does it before any steps have been taken by either to bring in that non-resident. Horne v. Black, 24 Tex. 293.

A plea of a former suit, pending in abatement of a plea in reconvention, is bad, if such former suit has already been discontinued at the date of the plea in abatement, although it was pending at the date of the plea in reconvention. Oldham v. Erhart, 18 Tex. 147.

Where a plea in reconvention is well pleaded, the plaintiff cannot claim a non-suit. Egery v. Power, 5 Tex. 101.

And so sometimes when the matter is not well pleaded. It was so held where the plea was not such that it could be disregarded or treated as a nullity by the court, without exception to its sufficiency and the opportunity being afforded to amend, but such that, if excepted to as not having been pleaded with sufficient certainty and speciality, it might have been amended so as to obviate that objection. Cunningham v. Wheatly, 21 Tex. 184.

Although after a plea in reconvention the plaintiff may take a non-suit the defendant may proceed to judgment. Marshall v. Shueber, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. 441, § 370; Peck v. McKellar, 33 Tex. 238.

But compare Ewell v. Anderson, 49 Tex. 697; Harris v. Whitfield, 53 Tex. Brown v. Pontius, 53 Tex. 221.

In an action of trespass to try title, the defendant may by plea of reconvention, claim that the land be decreed to him, that the title of the plaintiff be annulled, and that he have judgment from the mesne profits. Egery v. Power, 5 Tex. 501. And this, though his claim be for a larger number of acres than set out in the plaintiff's petition. Pearson v. Boyd, 62 Tex. 541.

As to the requisites of specification, see Carothers v. Sharp, 21 Tex. 358.

3. Origin of Recompment. — Recompment is of common-law origin.¹ It was invented and allowed in order to avoid circuity of action.²

In New Jersey, it is of statutory origin. Price v. Reynolds, 39 N. J. L. 171; Wakeman v. Illingsworth, 40 N. J. L. 431; Bozarth v. Dudley, 44 N. J. L. 304; 43 Am. Rep. 373.

In Hunter v. Reiley, 43 N. J. L. 480, it was held that the lessee, in an action for rent under a sealed lease, could not recoup damages for the lessor's breach of covenant. Otherwise, now, by Rule 83 of the Supreme Court.

In Arkansas, in Wheat v. Dotson, 12 Ark. 699, the court by Scott, J., said: "The doctrine of recompment has not grown up in the common-law courts upon the ground that the express contract upon which the suit is brought is to be considered void and that the recovery is allowed as upon a quantum meruit or quantum valebat upon an implied contract; or that such express contract has been rescinded, and thus a return of an offer to return or its equivalent, must be required as a prerequisite to the admission of the defense. On the contrary, it has grown up under the auspices of quite another and distinct principle of the common law that has been always operative, and of late years has not only been a great favorite of the courts both of law and equity, but of the legislature, that of the law's abhorrence of multiplicity and circuity of action, which can never legitimately tolerate a second litigation on the same matter, where a fair opportunity can be afforded by the first to do final and complete justice between the parties."

In Illinois, in Streeter v. Streeter, 43 Ill. 155, an action on notes executed contemporarily with the payee's agreement to deliver up a certain farm in good condition, the court by Breese, J., said: "This doctrine of recompment is becoming popularized in the realm of the common law. For, as was said in Stow v. Yarwood, 14 Ill. 424, it tends to promote justice, prevent useless litigation, avoid circuity of action, and a multiplicity of suits, adjusting in one action adverse claims growing out of the same subject-matter which can generally be much better settled in one proceeding than in several." This was reiterated in Peck v. Brewer, 48 Ill. 54, an action on a covenant to deliver fleeces, wherein the defendant was allowed to recoup for the plaintiff's delivery of sheep known to be infected with foot-rot.

In Massachusetts, in Carey v. Guil-low, 105 Mass. 18; 7 Am. Rep. 494, the court, by Chapman, C. J., said: "In actions of contract, the doctrine of recompment is well established in this commonwealth. It was not recognized in the case of Everett v. Gray, 1 Mass. 101, but in Taft v. Montague, 14 Mass. 282; 7 Am. Dec. 215, that decision was, in effect, overruled. The plaintiff had brought an action to recover the price of a bridge which he had built for the defendants, and they were allowed to prove in defense that it was so badly built as to be worthless. The authorities were not discussed, but Parker, C. J., said, 'It would be a reproach to the law if the plaintiff could recover.' In Harrington v. Stratton, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 510, the cases in which the doctrine has been established in New York were discussed, and the modern English authorities referred to. It is there said that the doctrine rests on the principle that it is always desirable to prevent a cross-action when full and complete justice can be done in a single suit, and it is on this ground that the courts have of late been disposed to extend to the greatest length compatible with the legal rights of the parties, the principle of allowing evidence in defense or in reduction of damages to be introduced rather than to compel the party to resort to his cross-action."

4. Recoupment and Set-off Distinguished.—In recoupment the defendant's claim must arise out of the same transaction as the plaintiff's; he can recover no excess; and his claim may be for liquidated or unliquidated damages. In set-off the claims are independent; only liquidated damages can be set off, and the defendant can recover the excess above the plaintiff's claim.¹

In Georgia the doctrine of recoupment is held to be merely an improvement upon the old doctrine of failure of consideration. In Lufburrow v. Henderson, 30 Ga. 482, Stevens, J., said: "The comparatively modern doctrine of recoupment is but a liberal and beneficial improvement upon the old doctrine of failure of consideration. It looks through the whole contract treating it as an entirety and treating the things done and stipulated to be done on each side, as the consideration for the things done and stipulated to be done on the other. When either party seeks redress for the breach of stipulations in his favor, it sums up the grievances on each side instead of the plaintiff's side only, strikes a balance and gives the difference to the plaintiff if it is in his favor."

In Tennessee the doctrine of recoupment has been introduced, but only to a limited extent. It has been declared applicable only to cases where a special contract has been partially executed, but not according to its terms. Porter v. Woods, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 56; 39 Am. Dec. 153; Crouch v. Miller, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 586. See Allen v. McNew, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 46; Overton v. Phelan, 2 Head (Tenn.) 445.

Where an engineer sued for his stipulated salary, it was held that damages sustained by his employer by reason of his unskillful performance of his duty could not be set-off against such salary either in law or in equity. Nashville, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Harrison, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 558.

1. Sedgwick on Damages (8th ed.), § 1033; 7 Wait's Actions and Defenses, 545. In Ward v. Fellers, 3 Mich. 281, the court, by Martin J., said: "The defense (recoupment) is contradistinguished from set-off in these three essential particulars: 1st, In being confined to matters arising out of, and connected with, the transaction or contract upon which the suit is brought; 2d, In having no regard to whether such matters are liquidated or unliquidated; and 3d, That the judgment is not the subject of statutory regulation, but controlled by the rule of the common law." This was repeated by Peyton, C. J., in Myers v. Estell, 47 Miss. 4.

Mr. Parsons in 2 Parsons on Contracts, p. 746, says: "Set-off should, however, be discriminated from reduction and recoupment, to both of which it bears much analogy and with either of which it may be so mingled by the facts of a case as to make it difficult to say in which of these forms the opposing demand should be brought against the plaintiff's action. In general, a defendant may deduct from the plaintiff's claim, all those demands or claims owned by him of payments made by him in the very same transaction, or even in other but closely connected transactions. They must, however, be so connected as fairly to authorize the defendant to say that he does not owe the plaintiff on that cause of action so much as he seeks, and not that he ought not to pay the plaintiff so much because on another cause of action the plaintiff owes him. If he can so present and use his claims he diminishes the plaintiff's claim by way of reduction. Recoupment, we consider to belong rather to cases where the same contract lays mutual duties and obligations on the two parties, and one seeking remedy for the breach of duty by the second, the second meets the demand by a claim for a breach of duty against the first. The word is of recent introduction and is not used with uniformity and precision. The essential difference between recoupment or reduc-

The occasionally apparent conflict of decisions between different State courts upon allowance of recoupment or set-off or counterclaim is not wholly due to the use of the three terms as if synonymous. Statutory differentiations are to be taken into account. Besides those to be presently noticed in considering counterclaim, it will be found profitable here to compare those of Kentucky, Alabama, Arkansas, Maryland and West Virginia.¹

tion on the one hand and set-off on the other, is that in set-off the character taken by the defendant is that he may owe the plaintiff what he claims; that a part of the whole of this debt is paid in reason and justice by a distinct unconnected debt which the plaintiff owes him."

Whether Recoupment is a Defense.—In so far as recoupment must arise out of the same transaction and the defendant recover no excess in his favor, it would seem to be a defense and not merely a right to a cross-action set up in this manner in order to prevent circuity of action. But the fact that the matter so set up must be such as would entitle him to a cross-action—and in some States he may elect between the two remedies—would seem to imply that recoupment is not a defense in the true sense of the term.

In Ohio, in Timmons v. Dunn, 4 Ohio St. 680, the court by Ranny, J., said: "It (recoupment) is no defense to the action but only affects the amount to be recovered by the plaintiff."

In New York, in Nichols v. Dusenbury, 2 N. Y. 286, an action of replevin, plea, taking upon distress for rent, reply, failure to complete the building as by contract to lease, the court by Bronson, J., said: "It is a matter which is never pleaded in bar. It is in the nature of a cross-action. The right of the plaintiff to sue is admitted, but the defendant says he has been injured by the breach of another branch of the same contract on which the action is founded, and claims to stop, cut off or keep back so much of the plaintiff's damages as will satisfy the damages which have been sustained by the defendant."

In McCullough v. Cox, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 386, the court by Edwards, J., said: "The meaning of recoupment is a reduction of the damages claimed and is not in theory and contemplation of law a complete bar. Neither can it be made so by election that the damages which the defendants claim by way of recoupment exceed those claimed by the plaintiffs. In all the adjudicated cases both in England and in this State in which recoupment has been allowed, it has been considered and has been generally described as a partial defense."

It is not unusual, however, for the judges to refer to recoupment as a defense. See Withers v. Greene, 9 How. (U. S.) 213; Ward v. Fellers, 3 Mich. 281; Harman v. Sanderson, 6 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 41; 45 Am. Dec. 272.

In McHardy v. Wadsworth, 8 Mich. 349, the court by Christiancy, J., said: "A defense by way of recoupment denies the validity of the plaintiff's cause of action. It is not an independent cross-claim like a separate and distinct debt or item of account due from the plaintiff, but is confined to matters arising out of or connected with the contract or transaction which forms the basis of the plaintiff's action. It goes only in abatement or reduction of the plaintiff's claim and can be used as a substitute for a cross-action only to the extent of the plaintiff's demand."

1. Kentucky.—The Kentucky Code, 1889, § 96, defines: "1, A counterclaim is a cause of action in favor of a defendant against a plaintiff, or against him and another, which arises out of the contract or transaction stated in the petition as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or which is connected with the subject of the action; 2, a set-off is a cause of action arising upon a contract, judgment, or award, in favor of a defendant against a plaintiff or against him and another; and it cannot be pleaded except in an action upon a contract, judgment, or award; 3, a cross-petition is the commencement of an action by a defendant against a co-defendant or a person who is not a party to the action, or against both; or by a plaintiff against a coplaintiff, or a person who is not a party to the action, or against both; and is not allowed to a defendant, except upon a cause of action which affects, or is affected by, the original cause of action; nor to a plaintiff, except upon a cause of action which affects, or is affected by, a set-off or counterclaim."

Ordinarily, in assumpsit for the price of merchandise unliquidated damages for non-performance of a building contract cannot be counterclaimed.

Otherwise, in case of equities arising from plaintiff's non-residence or insolvency. Forbes v. Cooper, 88 Ky. 285. In this case, the court, by Holt, J., after citing Shropshire v. Conrad, 2 Met. (Ky.) 143, and Taylor v. Stowell, 4 Met. (Ky.) 175, and referring to the practice before the Code, said: "It was then not uncommon to stay an insolvent or non-resident debtor in the collection of his claim until damages to which the complainant might be entitled against him, were liquidated under the order of the chancellor, and then apply them in satisfaction of his independent debt. In some of the States, it has been held that the resident debtor may proceed by attachment in an independent suit against his non-resident debtor, and attach the money owing by him in his own hands, and then answer his adversary by relying on the attachment.

"It has, however, been held by other courts that he could not do so, because it would bring him within the rule that a party cannot sue himself. Numerous cases, however, have been found in which it has been held that the party may by injunction stay his insolvent or non-resident adversary in the collection of his claim until damages claimed are liquidated by a judgment, and thus gotten in form to satisfy the independent demand. (For a complicated case still requiring such resort to injunction, etc., see Harrison v. Bray, 92 N. Car. 488.)

But where in absence of fraud or mistake, a defendant has neglected to plead payment, he cannot have collection of the judgment enjoined in order to make the payment a set-off. And this, even where the plaintiff is a non-resident, if also such when the judgment was rendered. Walker v. Thomas, 88 Ky. 486.

As to the earlier Kentucky decisions upon recoupment, in Wheat v. Dotson, 12 Ark. 699, 709 (in 1852), the court, by Scott, J., said: "Kentucky probably received the law, as her courts enforce it, from her mother, Virginia, where, in 1830, it was provided by statute that a defendant might allege by plea, not only fraud in the consideration or procurement of any contract, but any such failure in the consideration thereof, or any breach of warranty of the title, or soundness of personal property, as would entitle him in any form of action to recover damages at law or relief in equity."

Against a demand for money borrowed of a guardian without knowledge that it belonged to the ward, the borrower may set off a debt of the guardian. Alexander v. Alford, 89 Ky. 105.

In one's action against a railway company for the killing of his mules, damages cannot be counterclaimed for the wrecking of the train through his neglect to fence them from the track. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Simmons, 85 Ky. 151.

Where a wife, in her action for divorce, asked protection of her right to enjoy certain land, a counterclaim that the deed be reformed according to a contract that it should be made to the husband jointly with her and the children, was held not to be allowable unless the children be made parties. Grimes v. Grimes, 88 Ky. 20.

A city, taking property for a street improvement, cannot set off the tax assessed against the remaining property of the owner, nor recoup for accruing benefits. The constitutional inhibition imports payment before entry. Covington v. Worthington, 88 Ky. 206.

A party sued by the Commonwealth may so recoup as to defeat recovery, but cannot get judgment over. Commonwealth v. Ohio & N. R. Co., 81 Ky. 572.

If A wrongfully appropriates B's estate, and A's administrator sues C, C may recoup a demand due C from B's estate. McKenzie v. Pendleton, 1 Bush (Ky.) 164. Compare Finnell v. Meaux, 3 Bush (Ky.) 449.

After A has been charged in the settlement of an estate with B's note taken by A as administrator thereof, B, in A's suit thereon, can set off A's individual debt due B. Jones v. Everman, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 631.

It was once held that a set-off allowable by Kentucky law might be pleaded in an action on a note executed in another State where the set-off would not be allowed. Davis v. Morton, 5 Bush (Ky.) 160. But compare Stevens v. Gregg, 89 Ky. 461.

If A sells B an exempt cow, B, knowing that the sale was made to enable A to buy another giving milk, will not be allowed to recoup against the purchase price a debt due him by A. Mulliken v. Winter, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 256.

Recoupment.

SET-OFF.

Set-off Distinguished.

A having executed to B a note for the purchase price of an interest in the partnership of B & C, and B, having assigned the note to D but continuing in the firm, it was held that, in D's action thereon, A could recoup for damages to the concern through B's dishonest conduct. Boughner v. Black, 83 Ky. 541.

One's indorsement on his bank note of authorization to sell collateral and apply the proceeds to its payment, was held not to empower the bank, after a sale thereof made with consent of his administrator to apply the surplus to other claims; it must go for general distribution among all the creditors of his estate, and the bank could not set it off against a claim of the administrator. Masonic Sav. Bank v. Bangs, 84 Ky. 701.

An administrator cannot recoup a debt due himself against a debt due by the intestate. Commonwealth v. Bosley, 5 Bush (Ky.) 221. Nor can a demand against the intestate be pleaded to the administrator's bond. Cummings v. Williams, J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 384.

A receiver whom the court has directed to pay funds to A, cannot retain the funds collected and pay A in individual claims held against A. Johnson v. Gunter, 6 Bush (Ky.) 534.

A debt due A cannot recoup a claim due the firm of A & B. Warder v. Newdigate, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 174.

In an action against a bank's debtor, by commissioners holding the bank's funds, he can recoup a claim due him from the bank at the date of its assignment. Pinnell v. Nesbit, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 351.

Unliquidated damages for breach of warranty of the quality of a commodity for which the note sued on was executed, may be recouped against the note, when the seller is a non-resident or insolvent. Taylor v. Stowell, 4 Met. (Ky.) 175. Otherwise, when the remedy at law is adequate. Shropshire v. Conrad, 2 Met. (Ky.) 143.

In an action on a note, the defendant may recoup for a conversion of personal property. Eversole v. Moore, 3 Bush (Ky.) 49; Haddix v. Wilson, 3 Bush (Ky.) 523.

Effect of Assignment in Kentucky.—"All bonds, bills or notes for money or property shall be assignable so as to vest the right of action in the assignee; but, except in case of bills of exchange, not to impair the right to any defense, discount or offset that the defendant has and might have used against the original obligee or any intermediate assignor before notice of the assignment." Ky. Gen. Stat. 1887, p. 363, § 6.

"In case of an assignment of a thing in action, the action by the assignee is without prejudice to any discount, set-off or defense now allowed." Ky. Code 1889, § 19.

As to the equities, where a note is assigned to be used as a set-off, see Timley v. Martin, 80 Ky. 463; Graham v. Tilford, 1 Met. (Ky.) 112.

A maker, who has induced an assignee to take the note, is precluded from asserting an equity against the assignor to defeat the assignee's recovery. McBrayer v. Collins, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 833.

An acceptor, when sued by an indorser who has paid the bill, may plead that he accepted it for the sole benefit of the drawer who died insolvent, and that the indorser was indebted to the estate of the drawer in that amount. Bowman v. Wright, 7 Bush (Ky.) 375.

Where, after the making of a joint note by A and B, but before its maturity, A makes an assignment to C for benefit of creditors, and B pays the note, B may, in an action by C against B on the note executed by B to A, recoup A's aliquot part of the joint debt. Chenault v. Bush, 84 Ky. 528.

As to the prerequisite that the demand was due before notice of the assignment, see Walker v. McKay, 2 Met. (Ky.) 294.

A and B, mutually indebted, executed, each to the other, notes in full for the two debts, to be used to raise money. A assigned his note to C and failed. In C's action against B, it was held that B could not set off the other note. Barbaroux v. Barker, 4 Met. (Ky.) 47.

On A's arrival of age, his guardian, B, assigned to him a note on which usurious interest had been paid to her; and C, the maker, took it up and gave A a new note. In A's action on the new note, it was held that C could not recoup the usury paid to B. Stone v. McConnell, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 54.

Kentucky Practice as to Non-suit, Judgment, etc.—"A defendant is entitled to a trial of a set-off or counterclaim, although the plaintiff dismiss his action or fail to appear." Ky. Code 1889, § 372.

"If the set-off or counterclaim exceed the sum to which the plaintiff is entitled, judgment shall be rendered for the defendant accordingly." § 387. If in an inferior court, to "be within the limits of the jurisdiction as to the amount." § 720.

"A judgment obtained in an ordinary action . . . does not prevent the recovery of any claim which was not, though it might have been, used as a defense by way of set-off or counterclaim in the action." § 17.

"No pleading, except an answer to an original petition, or a reply to a set-off, shall present a counterclaim." § 111; subs. 3.

"Proceedings upon . . . counterclaims against new parties . . . shall not delay the trial of any issue . . ." § 97.

Alabama.—"Mutual debts, liquidated or unliquidated demands not sounding in damages merely, subsisting between the parties at the commencement of the suit, may be set off one against the other by the defendant or his personal representative, whether the legal title be in the defendant or not; and such set-off, if found for the defendant, extinguishes, either in whole or in part, as the case may be, the plaintiff's demand; but the wages or hire of any head of a family in this State, not having property liable to levy and sale under such execution, cannot be defeated or abated by any set-off of a money demand acquired by the person contracting to pay such wages by assignment or transfer, unless the parties otherwise agree in writing." Ala. Code, 1886, § 2678.

"If the debt or demand so offered to be set off exceeds the amount of the plaintiff's demand, the amount of such excess being found by the jury, judgment must be rendered against the plaintiff for costs, and in favor of the defendant for such excess." § 2679.

"The provision for recoupment must not be perverted into machinery for evading the exemption acts." Ex parte Hunt, 62 Ala. 1.

In Martin v. Brown, 75 Ala. 442, 446, an action on a foreign bill of exchange, by indorser against drawer and payee, wherein the defendants sought to set off damages from defamatory cable dispatches alleging overdrafts, the court, by Brickell, C. J., said: "Certainly, the act does not admit of a construction which will authorize the defendant, in an action ex contractu, to interpose a claim for damages, because of a libel published, or of a slander spoken by the plaintiff concerning him, though the libel or slander may relate to the contract, or to its subject-matter or breach. A statute which would work a change so radical in settled laws, introduced into such a multiplicity and diversity of issues, perplexing and confusing to juries, ought to be clearly and unambiguously expressed."

The provision that the demand must subsist at the commencement of the suit precludes a contingent liability as surety for the plaintiff. Wood v. Steele, 65 Ala. 436. So also payment by the surety after commencement of the suit. Goldthwaite v. First Nat. Bank of Montgomery, 67 Ala. 549.

In Alabama, the following may be subjects of recoupment or set-off: Witness certificates assigned after maturity. Campbell v. Conner, 78 Ala. 211. An attorney's fee, though unliquidated. Briggs v. Moore, 14 Ala. 133. Any demand in debt or assumpsit. Weaver v. Brown, 87 Ala. 533. Damages sustained through the plaintiff's disobedience of instructions to postpone a sale of cotton. Gafford v. Proskauer, 39 Ala. 264. A warehouseman's failure to deliver or account on demand. Sledge v. Swift, 53 Ala. 110. In an action for the purchase money, a defect in the vendor's title. Martin v. Wharton, 31 Ala. 637. Or payments made to extinguish incumbrances. Holley v. Young, 27 Ala. 203. A statutory cause of action for cutting down trees; "not sounding in damages merely." Rosser v. Bunn, 66 Ala. 89. Otherwise, as to damages for trespass on the land. Pulliam v. Russell, 25 Ala. 492. In one's suit for wages, damages from breach of his implied contract to be competent and careful. Krau v. Verkentoren, 90 Ala. 113. Under a bill for account and redemption, a mortgagee's illegal seizure of personal property. Conner v. Smith, 88 Ala. 300. In A's action against B and C on a joint account, a debt of A to B. Hubbleston v. Askey, 56 Ala. 218. But B cannot recover a judgment for its excess over A's demand. Locke v. Locke, 57 Ala. 473.

In a guano seller's action for the price, the buyer may recoup a loss from deficient quantity. Reynolds v. Bell, 84 Ala. 496. So also in a landlord's action for advances, etc., may the tenant recoup for a deficiency in the number of mules furnished under the lease. Horton v. Miller, 84 Ala. 537. As to injury to the crop by a landlord's cattle, see Johnson v. Aldridge, 93 Ala. 77. Or from his failure to repair fences, see Rowe v. Baber, 93 Ala. 422.

As to the "personal representative," in absence of special equities—like insolvency, non-residence, etc.—an administrator's individual debt cannot be set off against one due him in his representative capacity. Jones v. Brevard, 59 Ala. 499; Farris v. Houston, 78 Ala. 250. As to an insolvent estate, see Palmer v. Steiner, 68 Ala. 401.

As to "title," the set-off is available against the beneficial owner, though he be not a party to the record. Hooper v. Armstrong, 69 Ala. 343. The demand must be such that the defendant could maintain debt or assumpsit without bringing in the name of a stranger to the suit. Jones v. Blair, 57 Ala. 457. Neither at law nor in equity can a debt due from A to B be set off against A's demand upon the firm of B & C. Watts v. Sayre, 76 Ala. 397. But as to a case of C's consent, see Huckaba v. Abbott, 87 Ala. 409.

In Alabama, in detinue, there can be no set-off. Whitworth v. Thomas, 83 Ala. 309.

The statute does not apply to a suit by the State. White v. Governor, 18 Ala. 767.

A judgment is not conclusive against a set-off which the defendant omitted to plead. Roach v. Privett, 90 Ala. 391.

As to the equitable set-off deducible from the English law and modified, see Tuscumbia, etc., R. Co. v. Rhodes, 8 Ala. 206, 220.

Judgments in Alabama.—"Judgments may be set off against each other." Ala. Code 1886, § 2680. An attorney's lien is an assignment of the judgment to that extent. Ex parte Lehman, 59 Ala. 631. As to a judgment against a partner, see Watts v. Sayre, 76 Ala. 397.

"On a plea of recoupment, if the claim or demand of the defendant exceeds that of the plaintiff, judgment must be rendered for the defendant;" if it exceeds that, "and the plaintiff be the party liable to its satisfaction, judgment must be rendered against him in favor of the defendant for such excess and all costs." § 2683.

Statute of Limitations in Alabama.—"When the defendant pleads a set-off to the plaintiff's demand, to which the plaintiff replies the Statute of Limitations, the defendant is nevertheless entitled to his set-off, where it was a legal subsisting claim at the time the right of action accrued to the plaintiff on the claim in suit." § 2682.

Such plea relates not to the time of its filing, but to that of the commencement of the action. Riley v. Stallworth, 56 Ala. 481. Upon a replication to the plea of set-off, it was held that the term must be computed not to the commencement of the action, but to the time the plaintiff's right accrued. Washington v. Timberlake, 74 Ala. 259; Jeffries v. Castleman, 75 Ala. 262. As to a plea setting off a penalty under a statute limiting prosecution, see Rosser v. Bunn, 66 Ala. 89.

Notes and Bonds in Alabama.—"A co-maker or surety sued alone may, with the consent of his co-maker or principal, avail himself by way of set-off of a debt or liquidated demand due from the plaintiff at the commencement of the suit to such co-maker or principal." § 2681. But not without such consent. Union & Am. Pub. Co., 71 Ala. 60.

"Paper governed by the commercial law, negotiated before maturity, is not subject to set-off or recoupment." § 2684.

In an action by assignee against maker on a note not payable at bank, nor due at the time of the assignment and notice, another note then due from the assignor may be set off. Russell v. Redding, 50 Ala. 448. A demand on an intermediate holder cannot be set off by the maker, without proof of an agreement founded on a new consideration. Brown v. Scott, 87 Ala. 453.

Where A executed a note to B, who indorsed it to C, it was held that in C's action thereon against A, a note made by B and D payable to E, was not available to A as a set-off, on proof that it was in A's possession at the time the note sued on was transferred to C. Bostick v. Scruggs, 50 Ala. 10.

Where the payee or indorsee has brought suit at law on the note, the surety cannot go into equity to enjoin suit and obtain benefit of a set-off due at commencement thereof, and available therein with no difficulty; and this, though the payee be insolvent. Bank of Mobile v. Poelnitz, 61 Ala. 147.

As to when a maker cannot set off a demand against an intermediate indorser, see Kennedy v. Manship, 1 Ala.

Recoupment.SET-OFF.*Set-off Distinguished.

A, owing a bank a debt whereof B was surety, transferred to the bank as collateral a note against C. B paid the debt, and by agreement with A, received the C note from the bank. In B's action thereon against C, it was held that C could not set off a demand against A acquired after notice of the transfer to the bank. Lewis v. Faber, 65 Ala. 460.

Arkansas.—"The counterclaim must be a cause of action in favor of the defendants, or some of them, against the plaintiffs, or some of them, arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint, as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action." Ark. Dig. Stat. 1884, § 5034.

"A set-off can only be pleaded in an action founded on contract, and must be a cause of action arising upon contract, or ascertained by the decision of a court." § 5036.

In an action for damages for an assault and battery, the injury which provoked the assault cannot be pleaded as a counterclaim. So held in an action by a keeper against the lessee of a penitentiary, provoked at escapes. Ward v. Blackwood, 48 Ark. 396. In an action on a note, the plaintiff's wrongful suing out of an attachment cannot be pleaded. Bloom v. Lehman, 27 Ark. 489.

In A's action for damages to A's house from an eaves-drip from B's, B cannot counterclaim damages from a water spout from A's wall, flooding B's cellar; this is not "connected with the subject of the action." Chandler v. Lazarus, 55 Ark. 312.

As to the right of a consignee of damaged goods to recoup damages against freight charges, see St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 53 Ark. 282. As to a case of damages by a prior carrier, see St. Louis, etc. R. Co. v. Lear, 54 Ark. 399.

If A promises to furnish goods to B, and B executes a mortgage to secure the price, but A, after delivering a portion, refuses to furnish the residue, B, in A's action for the price of the goods delivered, may recoup for loss directly traceable to A's breach of the contract, and unavoidable by any reasonable effort of B. Levy v. Sale, 52 Ark. 246.

Set-off is no defense against replevin by a mortgagee. Hudson v. Snipes, 40 Ark. 75.

For an application (to a sale of timber at a fixed price per thousand feet) of the rule not allowing unliquidated damages in set-off, even when arising from a breach of contract, see Stewart v. Scott, 54 Ark. 187.

In a landlord's action for rent, the tenant may set off the value of improvements made under the landlord's promise, express or implied, to allow deduction therefor. Gocio v. Day, 51 Ark. 46.

In an action to avoid a sale for non-payment of taxes, taxes paid pending the same cannot be set off. McVeigh v. Lainer, 50 Ark. 384. A claim against a levee district cannot be set off against a levee tax. Fitzhugh v. Cotton Belt Levee Dist., 54 Ark. 214. In the settlement of a revenue collector's account, he cannot set off a claim for county scrip alleged to be burned or lost. Craig v. Chicot Co., 40 Ark. 233. Compare Pride v. State, 52 Ark. 502.

A debt due from the plaintiff to one of several defendants, may be set off. Leach v. Lambeth, 14 Ark. 668. But not a debt from one of several defendants to the defendant. Collier v. Dyer, 27 Ark. 478.

As to pleading and practice upon recoupment in Arkansas, see Heer Dry Goods Co. v. Shaffer, 51 Ark. 368.

Judgments in Arkansas.—"Judgments for the recovery of money may be set off against each other, having due regard to the rights, legal and equitable rights, of all persons interested in both judgments," § 5173. "During the pendency of an action, the judgment in which, when recovered, could be used as a set-off against a judgment in favor of the defendants, or either of them, the court, to prevent loss by insolvency, non-residence or otherwise, may enjoin the collection of the judgment in favor of such defendants." § 5174.

A recovered a judgment against B for $380; and in the same court C recovered a judgment against A for $548. This judgment B purchased after A's recovery, and moved to set it off against A's. Thereupon A filed his schedule claiming the judgment against B among A's exemptions as head of a family, and showing the total not to exceed $500. Held, that the judgment could not be set off. Atkinson v. Pittman, 47 Ark. 464.

A judgment in the probate court may be set off, though the assets are insufficient to pay all the assets in another statutory class. Higgs v. Warner, 14 Ark. 192.

Assignees, Executors, etc., in Arkansas.—"Judgments, bills, bonds, notes or other writings assigned to the defendant, after suit has been commenced against him and the writ served, shall not be . . . set off." § 5038. In a suit by an executor, etc., a debt due from the decedent to the defendant may be set off. § 5037.

But a debt contracted by an intestate cannot be set off against one contracted by his administrator. Bizzell v. Stone, 12 Ark. 378, citing Dale v. Cooke, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 11; Fry v. Evans, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 530. The administrator cannot contract for such set-off. Bishop v. Dillard, 49 Ark. 285.

Notes and Bills in Arkansas.—The Arkansas statute of 1873 declares bills and notes to be governed by the law merchant, as to the defendant's right of set-off against the original assignor before assignment, or the assignee thereafter. Ark. Dig. Stat. 1884, § 476.

If a note executed by A to B, be by B assigned to C, B cannot, in an action by A against B, set off the note, unless B has, by payment or otherwise, recovered it from C. Jenkins v. Neal, 52 Ark. 418.

As to a case of the assignee's notice of illegality of consideration—e. g., purchase of arms or horses in aid of rebellion—see Tatum v. Kelly, 25 Ark. 209; Ruddell v. Landers, 25 Ark. 238. As to an assignee after maturity taking subject to the maker's defenses, see Sorrells v. McHenry, 38 Ark. 127. As to the effect of a material alteration without the maker's consent, see Overton v. Matthews, 35 Ark. 146. Rights of an assignee of a note under an original decree were held not to be prejudiced by a decree on review. Sayre v. Thompson, 28 Ark. 336.

Maryland.—"In any suit brought on any judgment or bond or other writing sealed by the party, if the defendant shall have any demand or claim against the plaintiff, upon judgment, bond or other instrument under seal, or upon bill of exchange, check, order for payment of money, promissory note, agreement, assumpsit or account proved, he shall be at liberty to file such demand or claim in bar, or plead the same in discount of the plaintiff's claim and judgment for the excess of the one claim over the other, as each is proved, with costs of suit shall be given for the plaintiff or the defendant, according as such excess is found in favor of the one or the other of these parties, if such excess be sufficient to support a judgment in the court where the cause is tried according to the established jurisdiction, otherwise the finding of such excess to be due shall be sufficient prima facie evidence of the fact of indebtedness for such excess, as upon an award of arbitrators in a suit. Md. Pub. Gen. L. 1888, p. 1094, § 12.

Upon A's breach of a contract to saw timber of B, B may, against A's claim of interest, recoup damages for depreciation of the timber market. Rees v. Logsdon, 68 Md. 93.

In an action on a note given for the purchase money of wood on a tract of woodland, damages from the vendor's want of title to a part of the tract may be recouped. South Baltimore Co. v. Muhlbach, 69 Md. 395.

In trover for conversion of a mowing machine, the defendant may recoup for inadequacy of the delivered machine to fulfill the contract conditions. Lee v. Rutledge, 51 Md. 311.

A and his wife executed a mortgage of her separate estate to B, who assigned it to C. Held that the wife being considered a mere surety, A could set off against the mortgage debt, a debt due him from C's estate. Spencer v. Almony, 56 Md. 551.

On bill by A to enforce a contract by B and C to pay an annuity, a debt owed by A to B alone cannot be set off. Tyrrell v. Tyrrell, 54 Md. 167.

A bought of B a sloop which B, after receiving part payment, sold to C, to whom A agreed to surrender possession on B's promise to settle therefor. In A's action on the account, it was held that B could not recoup for "loss on the sale of the sloop," or "for the use of the said sloop," these being unliquidated damages. Hearn v. Cullin, 54 Md. 533.

Virginia.—"In a suit for any debt, the defendant may at the trial prove and have allowed against such debt any payment or set-off which is so described in his plea, or in an account filed therewith, as to give the plaintiff notice of its nature, but not otherwise. Although the claim of the plaintiff be jointly against several persons, and the set-off is of a debt not to all but only to a part of them, this section shall extend to such set-off, if it appear that the persons against whom such claim is, stand in the relation of principal and surety, and the person entitled to the set-off is the principal." Va. Code, 1887, § 3298.

"The assignee or beneficial owner of any bond, note, writing or other chose in action, not negotiable, may maintain thereon in his own name any action which the original obligee, payee or contracting party might have brought, but shall allow all just discounts, not only against himself, but against such obligee," etc., "before the defendant had notice of the assignment, . . . and shall also allow all such discounts against any intermediate assignor or transferrer, the right to which was acquired on the faith of the assignment or transfer to him and before the defendant had notice," etc. § 2860.

The burden of proof is on a subsequent assignee asserting that he took for value without notice of a previous assignment alleged by him to be fraudulent. Daily v. Warren, 80 Va. 512.

Although a debtor may be estopped by his promise, made after notice of the assignment, to pay the debt, his mere silence will not operate as a recognition thereof. Stebbins v. Bruce, 80 Va. 389.

The consideration for assignment is, prima facie, the value of the thing assigned, and this measures the recovery on recourse. Barley v. Layman, 79 Va. 518.

A private agreement, unknown to the assignee, cannot be set up as defense to payment by one who lends to another his credit in the form of a note. Etheridge v. Parker, 76 Va. 247. As to the case of the presumption that another's indorsement in blank is a guaranty, see Walsh v. Ebersole, 76 Va. 247. As to the case of an indorsement of an overdue note, see Broun v. Hull, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 23. As to the effect of long delay of a suit, see Wilson v. Barclay, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 534.

A as principal, and B as surety, executed their bond to C. An account due from C to the firm of A & D was by C assigned to A. C became bankrupt, and A, after proving the account before the register, also became bankrupt. In an action by C's assignee in bankruptcy against B on the bond, it was held that the account was a valid set-off. Edmunds v. Harper, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 637.

West Virginia.—To the foregoing section 3298, of the Virginia Code, West Virginia adds: "And when the defendant is allowed to file and prove an account of set-off to the plaintiff's demand, the plaintiff shall be allowed to file and prove an account of counter set-off, and make such other defense as he might have made, had an original action been brought upon such set-off, and in the issue, the jury, judge or justice shall ascertain the true state of indebtedness between the parties, and judgment be rendered accordingly." W. Va. Code, 1891, p. 812, § 4.

In a vendor's action for the purchase money under sale with warranty of title, the vendee may recoup payments made to clear off trust liens executed by the vendor upon the land. Hoke v. Jones, 33 W. Va. 501.

An agent, in the principal's action on the indemnifying penal bond, may recoup for services rendered. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Jameson, 13 W. Va. 813. Otherwise in an action against the security alone. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Bitner, 15 W. Va. 455.

In A's action against B for services in procuring collection business, B cannot recoup for A's causing the owner of a claim to take it out of B's hands, after B had spent money in its prosecution. Logie v. Black, 24 W. Va. 1.

In an action on a contract for removing paving stones, preparing for pipe-laying, and replacing them, the defendant cannot recoup damages from defective replacement, in excess of the plaintiff's claim. Natural Gas Co. v. Healy, 33 W. Va. 102.

In an action on the special bond of the sheriff as collector of school taxes, a balance due him from the building fund cannot be set off. Board, etc. v. Cain, 28 W. Va. 758.

The court will not set off one judgment against another to the injury of intervening interests of third parties. Nuzum v. Morris, 25 W. Va. 559; Payne v. Webb, 29 W. Va. 627. Compare Frazier v. Hendren, 80 Va. 265.

A several set-off cannot be allowed to a joint demand. Choen v. Guthrie, 15 W. Va. 100.

Where A dies insolvent before expiration of the term of lease of his farm to B, a debt due from A to B at the time of A's death cannot be set off by B against the administrator's claim for rents accruing after A's death. Washington v. Castleman, 31 W. Va. 832.

Although one trespass cannot be set off in bar of another, a defendant in action by an adjacent owner for diversion of surface water, may, in mitigation, show that the damages

In Peck v. Brewer, 48 Ill. 54, the court by Breese, C. J., said: "It is the doctrine of this and other courts, that recoupment will be allowed whenever an action for damages can be sustained, and thus avoid circuity of action, and courts will favor recoupment rather than drive the party to a separate action."

Where a party received an engine for repairs and retained a portion of it, and before an action was brought against him had made an assignment in bankruptcy under the general bankruptcy law and obtained his discharge, it was held that either he or his assignee could recoup his claim for work done on the repairs. Stow v. Yarwood, 20 Ill. 497.

The defendant in trover for a note inclosed for collection, may recoup his services and expenses in collecting. Turner v. Retter, 58 Ill. 264.

In an action by a tenant against his landlord, for the conversion of a crop, the defendant's lien on the crop for rent may be made the subject of recoupment in his favor. Jones v. Horn, 51 Ark. 19.

In one's action for the price of sewer-pipe that had been stipulated to be delivered by water, but was not finished until navigation had closed, and was delivered by rail and accepted, it was held that the defendants could not set off the damages suffered by reason of the pipe not being delivered by water. Malone v. Wood (Pa. 1890.), 18 Atl. Rep. 984.

Where there is a part performance, and, by the terms of the contract, payment may be demanded for the same, an action lies. In such case, however, the other party may give evidence of damages sustained in consequence of the non-performance of the residue of the contract, in diminution or even extinguishment of the claim made against him. But he cannot, in an action against him, have a balance certified in his favor for money paid on account of the services done, nor for damages sustained by reason of the non-performance of the contract. His remedy is by action against the other party to recover damages for the violation of the contract. Sickels v. Pattison, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 257; 28 Am. Dec. 527.

Where an action was brought against a tenant to recover damages for a breach of covenants in a lease, he may introduce evidence under the general issue, by way of recoupment, tending to show that the plaintiff had represented the roof to be in good condition, but that it was leaky and the defendant's goods were injured in consequence. Stubblefield v. Soule, 21 Ill. App. 154.

A party, who has a defense by way of recoupment, will not be permitted to seek affirmative relief by making another person, in interest, a party defendant, by way of subrogation. So held in an action for the purchase price of a printing office, where it was sought to have a claimant of a fifth interest brought in, and his claim adjudicated. Lyman v. Corwin, 27 Ark. 580.

The right of a defendant to avail himself of a claim for damages by way of recoupment is not confined to cases where fraud is imputable to the plaintiff; but may exist, though the damages result from a mere breach of contract. Batterman v. Pierce, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 171.

Where a horse, hired to perform a certain journey, and back, becomes, without any fault of the hirer, so lamed as to be unable to travel, the hirer's consequent expenses of procuring other means of returning home, may be recouped against the bailor's demand for the hire; and if they exceed the value of the horse's services the bailor cannot recover in an action for such services. Harrington v. Snyder, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 380.

The defendant, in an action on a note, pleaded that the consideration for the note was certain lots and the improvements thereon, and that the payee would add certain other improvements, which he failed to do; that the improvements to be added were worth $100, and that the consideration of the note had wholly failed for so much. The plea was held good on demurrer (following Wheat v. Dotson, 12 Ark. 699). Smith v. Capers, 13 Ark. 9.

In an action for services at brick-making contracted to be performed carefully and skillfully, damages may be recouped for failure to make and burn the brick in a workmanlike manner. Robinson v. Mace, 16 Ark. 97.

Where, through one's failure to erect a bridge in the manner contracted for, it was carried away by a flood, it was held that he could not recover on the special contract because he had not fulfilled it, nor on a quantum meruit, because the defendant town had received no net benefit from his labors. Taft v. Montague, 14 Mass. 282; 7 Am. Dec. 215.

Notice to Quit Service.—An employer when proceeded against by his servant for the recovery of his wages, may recoup such damage as he has sustained by the servant's failure before leaving the employer's service to give notice of his intention to quit. Hunt v. Otis Co., 4 Met. (Mass.) 464; Satchwell v. Williams, 40 Conn. 371.

Bailment.—In an action by a bailee for hire, the bailor may recoup for loss from inadequate performance of the bailee's duty. Phelps v. Paris, 39 Vt. 511. Compare Crowninshield v. Robinson, 1 Mason (U. S.) 93.

Payment by Installments.—Where personal property was purchased, to be paid for by installments, and all the installments except the last one to fall due were paid, it was held in an action to recover the last installment that the damages for the breach of warranty of the personal property might be set up by way of recoupment against it. Hutt v. Bruckman, 55 Ill. 441. See also Baker v. Railsback, 4 Ind. 533; Stilwell v. Chappell, 30 Ind. 72; Pepper v. Rowley, 73 Ill. 262; Maguire v. Howard, 40 Pa. St. 391.

Landlord and Tenant.—As the object of inquiry on the trial of a distress for rent is to ascertain the amount of rent due, any acts of the landlord impairing the value of the use of the demised premises may be shown, and the damages caused thereby may be recouped. Lynch v. Baldwin, 69 Ill. 210; Bloodworth v. Stevens, 51 Miss. 475.

Damage for failure of the landlord to repair may be recouped by the tenant in an action of covenant by the landlord against him for the recovery of the rent. Lunn v. Gage, 37 Ill. 19; 87 Am. Dec. 233.

Statute of Limitations in Recoupment.—It has been held that the Statute of Limitations does not run against any recoupment claim. Beecher v. Baldwin, 55 Conn. 419; and Estell v. Myers, 54 Miss. 174. But see Jeffries v. Castleman, 75 Ala. 262; also infra, this title, Counterclaim. In Louisiana and Texas the statute runs against a claim to reconvention. Harris v. Henderson, 138 Mass. 310; Van De Sande v. Hall, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 458; Platt v. Brand, 26 Mich. 173; Kinne v. New Haven, 32 Conn. 210; Clark v. Wildridge, 5 Ind. 176. Under the Texas provision for reconvention, compare Rose v. San Antonio, etc., R. Co., 31 Tex. 49; Bickham v. Hunter, 37 Tex. 551.

Where a suit for damages for a breach of warranty was brought against a vendor of land, it was held that he could not recoup the rents and profits received by the vendee, unless he could show that he had actually paid such rents and profits to the holder of the paramount title. Burton v. Reeds, 20 Ind. 87; Greene v. Allen, 32 Ala. 215; see Locke v. Alexander, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 412.

2. Proximate Cause.—Sedgwick on Damages, § 1041; Smith v. Osborn, 143 Mass. 185; Turner v. Gibbs, 50 Mo. 556; Green v. Bell, 3 Mo. App. 291.

Damages which do not legally result from the breach of the contract cannot be recovered unless they are specially claimed in the pleadings. Thus damages sustained by a vendee of goods by reason of his inability to comply with a contract made by him with a third person, do not legally result from a breach of a contract of his vendor to deliver the goods to him, and in an action by his vendor cannot be recouped unless specially set forth in the answer. Cole v. Swanston, 1 Cal. 51; 52 Am. Dec. 288.

Plaintiff.—The recoupment must be against the party originally contracting. Fessenden v. Forest Paper Co., 63 Me. 175. See also Williams v. Schmidt, 54 Ill. 205.

Where a misrepresentation was made by the plaintiff's assignor and not by the plaintiff, it was held that the defendant could not recoup against the plaintiff for the misrepresentation. Van De Sande v. Hall, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 458.

In an action by the owners of a vessel, of whom the master is one, to recover freight for goods actually carried, delivered, and accepted, the consignee cannot recoup in damages a loss sustained by him by reason of the failure to deliver a cargo never actually put on board, but which the master without other authority than belonged to him in that capacity, improperly receipted for in the bill of lading. Sears v. Wingate, 3 Allen (Mass.) 103. It seems that evidence of usage would be inadmissible in such cases. Meyer v. Dresser, 16 C. B. N. S. 646; 111 E. C. L. 644.

In an action by an executor for rent due under a lease, the lessee may recoup on account of damages for breach of the intestate's covenant to repair. Green v. Bell, 3 Mo. App. 291.

R, with others, signed a subscription paper by which he agreed to pay D and H $100, the amount of his subscription, for the building of a steam mill at Elk Horn; and D and H agreed to build the mill and complete the same. Before the expiration of the time for completing the mill, D and H assigned the subscription to Y who delayed suing upon the subscription until after the expiration of the time for completing the mill, which was not completed within the time limited by the contract. Held, that in a suit brought on the subscription in the names of D and H, for the use of Y, R, the defendant, might recoup for damages on account of the non-performance of D and H. Rockwell v. Daniels, 4 Wis. 432.

In Texas, there can be reconvention only against the party originally contracting. Blair v. Reid, 20 Tex. 310. And a judgment upon a reconvention by the defendant against the party originally contracting, but who is not a party to the suit, is void. McFadin v. MacGreal, 25 Tex. 73.

In A's attachment suit against B, B cannot plead A's breach of contract he recoup if his own failure to comply with the terms of the contract has made it impossible for the plaintiff to fulfill them.¹

with the firm of B & C. Kirbs v. Provine, 78 Tex. 353.

In A's action on his separate account against H, H cannot reconvene a joint demand against A, B and C, without proving insolvency of B and C. Hamilton v. Van Hook, 26 Tex. 302. As to the right of the receiver of an insolvent corporation to reconvene against an intervenor, see Continental Nat. Bank of N. Y. v. Weems, 69 Tex. 489.

In Louisiana, compensation does not take place between partnership and individual debts. Key v. Box, 14 La. Ann. 502.

Defendant.—The claim must be due the defendant, so the recoupment shall bar action by any other party. Thus in an action against a town, damages to a few inhabitants cannot be recouped. Kinne v. New Haven, 32 Conn. 210. Compare Zuckermann v. Solomon, 73 Ill. 130.

Where a bill of exchange for the consideration of negroes is drawn by the vendee upon C and son, payable to the vendor, as there is no assignment to the drawees of the bill of sale and the latter have no interest in the negroes, the drawees cannot avail themselves of the defense of failure of consideration arising from the subsequent emancipation of the slaves.

Where a bill of sale of four negroes contained a covenant of warranty that the negroes were slaves for life and sound in body and mind, the vendee and his assignee are the only persons who have a right to recoup for breach of the warranty. Coolidge v. Burnes, 25 Ark. 241.

A claim of A and B to recoup damages from C, by way of set-off against the promissory note of A, B and D, held by C, cannot be sustained, nor can such claim for damages be set off against an aliquot part of the sum due on the note. King v. Wise, 43 Cal. 628.

In an action on a promissory note by the payee against one of two joint and several obligors, the defendant pleaded a demand as a counterclaim for damages for the unskillful construction of a mill by the plaintiff for the defendant, his co-obligor, and T, for the construction of which the note in suit was given in part payment. Held, that said counterclaim being for unliquidated damages, and in part a demand in favor of a stranger to the note and suit, it was unavailable as a defense to the action. Hook v. White, 36 Cal. 299.

In an action on a promissory note given by two on a contract of purchase by one of the makers only, it is competent to recoup damages growing out of the contract of purchase to the same extent as if the note had been given by the purchaser alone. McHardy v. Wadsworth, 8 Mich. 349.

An accommodation indorser cannot in an action on a note given upon a sale of timber, avail himself of a breach of warranty as to the quality of the timber by way of counterclaim. Gillespie v. Torrance, 25 N. Y. 306; 85 Am. Dec. 355.

In an action on a promissory note given by a principal and a surety on a contract of the principal, it is competent to recoup the damages of the principal growing out of the contract to the same extent as if the note had been given by the principal and he alone were sued. Waterman v. Clark, 76 Ill. 428; Springer v. Dwyer, 50 N. Y. 19.

A surety may recoup for any damages arising out of the same subject-matter to the same extent as the principal might if he were sued alone. Meyer v. Stookey, 3 Ill. App. 336. Compare Springer v. Dwyer, 50 N. Y. 19.

Reconvention.—S purchased property at the succession sale of F, and gave his note for the price. S having married F's widow, and suit having been brought on the note, he pleaded in compensation the interest of his wife in the community of F, her former husband, and herself. Held, that the plea was bad, because the quality of debtor and creditor was not united in the same person. Stokes v. Forman, 12 La. Ann. 671. See also Hanrahan v. Leclercq, 15 La. Ann. 204.

Accommodation acceptors have no right to plead by way of reconvention a debt due by the payee to the drawer of the draft. And this is true even though the payee knew the acceptors to be accommodation acceptors. Smith v. Adams, 14 La. Ann. 411.

In an action of covenant by a lessor, the defendant pleaded that the premises were leased for hotel purposes, upon the false representations of the plaintiff that there was sufficient drainage; that by reason of inadequate drainage, and consequent bad odor, defendant's guests left the hotel, whereby he sustained damage to the extent of $1000, which he offered to set off. Held, that these damages rose out of the subject-matter of the suit, and could be recouped. Burroughs v. Clancey, 53 Ill. 30.

A contract touching a pledge to secure a debt is collateral, and damages for its breach cannot be recouped in a suit to recover the debt. Fletcher v. Harmon, 78 Me. 465; Taggard v. Curtenius, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 155. See also Willoughby v. Comstock, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 389.

In an action for the price of printing ballots, one twenty-fourth of which were defective, the defendants were allowed to recoup for the trouble of separating these from the general mass. Macgowan v. Whiting, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 86.

In a suit upon one part of a contract, consisting of mutual stipulations, made at the same time and relating to the same subject-matter, the defendant may recoup for the plaintiff's breach of another part; and this, whether the different parts are contained in one instrument or in several, or though one part be in writing and the other by parol. Batterman v. Pierce, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 171; Branch v. Wilson, 12 Fla. 543; Mell v. Mooney, 30 Ga. 413.

A and B, on an exchange of slaves, reciprocally executed bills of sale, under seal, containing warranties of soundness. In A's action of covenant for B's breach of warranty, held that B might recoup for A's breach of warranty. Eckles v. Carter, 26 Ala. 563.

Claims arising upon separate and distinct covenants in an agreement under seal cannot be set off against each other. Hence, in an action on a mechanic's lien filed against a building which had been erected by the plaintiffs under an agreement also providing for a lease to them for a term of years, a claim for rent accrued subsequently to the completion of the building cannot be set off. McQuaide v. Stewart, 48 Pa. St. 198. Compare Green v. Bell, 3 Mo. App. 291.

A note was given pursuant to a contemporaneous written agreement, by which the payee bound himself to collect certain moneys and to appropriate them on the note in reduction thereof. In a suit on the note between the original parties, it was held that the maker might recoup for the payee's breach of the agreement. Babbitt v. Moore, 51 N. J. L. 229.

M and A contracted that A should be the sole agent in a certain town for the sale of wagons made by M. At the same time and as part of this contract, A executed his promissory note for the purchase money of certain wagons furnished by M to be sold by A as agent. In M's action against A on this note a plea by A that M had sold and furnished his wagons to others in the town, whereby A was prevented from selling at a profit any of the wagons furnished him, was held good on demurrer; the damages to be recouped were not impossible of ascertainment. Andre v. Morrow, 65 Miss. 315.

In a suit to recover the value of the use of a division fence under an alleged promise to pay, the defendant may recoup damages sustained by the plaintiff's stock breaking into his premises, through defects in the division fence. Damages thus sustained would bear upon the value of the use of the fence (citing Streeter v. Streeter, 43 Ill. 155, 161); Scott v. Kenton, 81 Ill. 96.

When one has been induced by fraud to give a note and before its maturity and before discovering the fraud he, at the request of an innocent indorsee for value, has given in substitution for it a new note payable to the original payee, it has been held that he may set up the original fraud in defense to an action by the payee upon the note. Held, also, that the defendant will not be precluded from this defense by proof that before maturity of the original note and before discovering the fraud he accepted from the plaintiff a conveyance of property which was made on condition that he should pay all obligations given by him to the plaintiff. Sawyer v. Wiswell, 9 Allen (Mass.) 39.

Expenses incurred by the hirer in successfully defending an action of trover by the bailor, for the conversion of the thing hired, cannot be recouped against a note given for the hire. Deens v. Dunklin, 33 Ala. 47.

In a suit for work and labor done or goods sold and delivered, the defendants under the general issue may reduce the damages by showing the work unskillfully done, or the goods not so good as warranted. And it seems that a defendant cannot under the general issue to reduce damages, show a breach by the plaintiff of stipulations, independent of those on which the plaintiff claims to recover, even though they are included in the same contract on which the suit is brought. Keyes v. Western Vt. Slate Co., 34 Vt. 81.

Reconvention.—The Texas act of 1860 declares: "If the plaintiff's cause of action be a claim for unliquidated or uncertain damages, founded on a tort or breach of covenant, the defendant shall not be permitted to set off any debt due him by the plaintiff; and if the suit be founded on a certain demand, the defendant shall not be permitted to set off unliquidated or uncertain damages founded on a tort or breach of covenant on the part of the plaintiff." Tex. Rev. Stat. 1889, art. 649.

"Nothing in the preceding article shall be so construed as to prohibit the defendant from pleading in set-off any counterclaim founded on a cause of action arising out of or incident to or connected with the plaintiff's cause of action." Art. 650.

In the following Texas cases, the damages claimed by the defendant were held not to arise from or be connected with the main subject:

The fact that the levy of the attachment on the defendant's cattle caused a delay in the moving of his family. Pinson v. Kirsh, 46 Tex. 26. Compare Half v. Curtis, 68 Tex. 641.

tended to a tort connected with a contract transaction;¹ and

In an action on notes for hire of slaves, it was held that the plaintiff's having taken away one of the slaves could not be pleaded in reconvention. Carothers v. Thorp, 21 Tex. 350. So also could not be pleaded the fact that the plaintiff, while acting as the defendant's overseer, wantonly killed a slave. Duncan v. Magette, 25 Tex. 245. But compare Brady v. Price, 19 Tex. 285.

In A's action on notes given by B for purchase of a steam saw mill, it was held that B could not reconvene damages for the bursting of the boiler through A's hogs having muddied the water. Fondren v. Leake, 1 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 151.

A claim for malicious prosecution cannot be pleaded in a suit for an assault. Shock v. Peters, 59 Tex. 393.

Damages for breach of a covenant by the payees of a note, not to sue within a time certain, cannot be pleaded in reconvention against assignees, although it may against the covenantor. Blair v. Reid, 20 Tex. 310.

In an action for rent, a claim for non-repair of fences may be pleaded. Coleman v. Bunce, 37 Tex. 172. So also in a suit for rent of a farm, a claim for non-repair of a cotton gin thereon. Calhoun v. Pace, 37 Tex. 454.

In an action for rent, the defendant may plead breach of a covenant to repair. Coleman v. Bunce, 37 Tex. 171.

Damages sustained by one's steamboat may be reconvened in an action against him for wharfage dues. Sterrett v. Houston, 14 Tex. 153.

In a suit to enjoin collection of taxes, taxes due may be reconvened. Rosenberg v. Weekes, 67 Tex. 578.

As to when vindictive damages may be reconvened for the wrongful suing out of an injunction, see Brown v. Tyler, 34 Tex. 168. Or of a sequestration writ, see Vela v. Guerra, 75 Tex. 595.

In a cotton factor's action for goods, it was held that the defendant could reconvene for plaintiff's instructions in selling too low. Nichols v. Jones, 36 Tex. 448.

In A's action on a note of B, B may plead that A wrongfully sold of B, and retained the proceeds. Cato v. Phillips, 28 Tex. 101.

In A's action to recover of B for cattle sold in the same contract with land, it was held that B could reconvene for failure of title to part of the land. Du Bois v. Rooney, 82 Tex. 173.

In one's action for services as conductor of a freight train, it was held that the company might reconvene damages for his neglect to place lights and torpedoes when stopping the train at a water tank. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Hurless, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. 306, § 582.

In Texas, a defendant may reconvene for usurious interest paid in excess of twelve per cent. per annum. Smith v. Stevens, 81 Tex. 461.

A sold to B machinery, taking a note and power of sale mortgage. At the sale thereunder, A became the purchaser. A sued B to recover possession. Held, that B could plead in reconvention fraud in the original sale. Scalf v. Tompkins, 61 Tex. 476. But compare Grabenheimer v. Blum, 63 Tex. 369.

And further, as to reconvention in Texas, see Walcott v. Hendrick, 6 Tex. 406; Castro v. Gentiley, 11 Tex. 28; Senter v. Whitaker, 66 Tex. 624. See also Texas cases stated supra, this title, Reconvention—Matters of Practice.

In Louisiana, damages for illegally imprisoning a slave claimed in a petitory action may be pleaded in reconvention as connected therewith. Solomon v. Cavelier, 4 La. Ann. 136.

When the plaintiff resides out of the State, the defendant may reconvene for any cause, whether it be connected or identical with the original demand or not. State Nat. Bank v. Evans, 32 La. Ann. 464; Spinney v. Hyde, 16 La. Ann. 250; Woolfolk v. Ship Graham's Polly, 18 La. Ann. 693.

But in such cases the amount which may be recouped is limited to the damage which the defendant sustains by the non-performance of the contract, and no account can be taken of malice. The Allaire Works v. Guion, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 55. Compare Mimnaugh v. Partin, 67 Mich. 391.

In Whitworth v. Thomas, 83 Ala. 308, it was held that in detinue or the corresponding statutory action, there could be no set-off nor recoupment of damages.

In McSloy v. Ryan, 27 Mich. 110, it was held that recoupment was not an available defense in a case of summary proceedings to recover possession of land.

And in Johnson v. Hoffman, 53 Mo. 504, that recoupment could not be used in action of forcible entry and detainer. But it was allowed to be used in an action of ejectment in Breese v. McCann, 52 Vt. 498.

Recoupment has been allowed in an action of replevin. Macky v. Dillinger, 73 Pa. St. 85; Murray v. Pennington, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 91.

A bailee converting goods on which he has bestowed labor and acquired a lien, may, in an action of trover brought by the owner, set up his lien claim in reduction of damages. Longstreet v. Phile, 39 N. J. L. 63.

In Tennessee, in an action for rent, it was held that the tenant could not recoup damages from trespasses by the landlord's cattle, although the latter had promised to pay for such injuries if the former would not hurt the cattle. Hulme v. Brown, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 679.

Where a person distrained growing corn for rent which he claimed to be due him from the owner thereof, and the proceedings to enforce the distress resulted in favor of the owner and while these proceedings were pending the distrainer caused the corn to be harvested, it was held, in an action of trespass by the owner for so distraining and carrying the same away, that the distrainer had a right to recoup the expense of harvesting the corn. Bates v. Courtwright, 36 Ill. 518.

In an action against a constable for a premature execution sale of chattels, only actual net damages can be recovered; the execution plaintiff may recoup the amount realized from the sale and credited to the execution defendant. Camp v. Ganley, 6 Ill. App. 499.

In an action upon bonds given for the purchase money of land, the defendant may recoup for the removal and conversion of fixtures, without his knowledge or consent, after the contract of sale and before a formal transfer of the land and the execution of the bonds. Grand Lodge v. Knox, 20 Mo. 433. See also Gordon v. Bruner, 49 Mo. 570.

In replevin against a carrier of goods claiming the right to retain them until freight be paid, the owner may prove damages to them in their transit in order to reduce the amount of freight actually due, or to show that nothing is due; thereby manifesting that the defendant had no right to the possession of the goods. Bancroft v. Peters, 4 Mich. 619.

As to reconvention in Texas, see Phillips v. Patillo, 18 Tex. 518. In Walcott v. Hendrick, 6 Tex. 406, it was held that damages arising from the wrongful suing out of an attachment might be pleaded in reconvention in the same suit in which the attachment issued. See also Peiser v. Cushman, 13 Tex. 390; Punchard v. Taylor, 23 Tex. 424.

In an action on a promissory note, the defendants pleaded that the plaintiffs wrongfully, and without probable cause, sued out an attachment on the same cause of action in another State, and seized and kept the goods of the defendants to the present time, dismissing the suit before they could plead thereto. Held, to be a good plea in reconvention. Wiley v. Traiwick, 14 Tex. 662.

In a suit by an overseer for his wages, the defendant may plead in reconvention, damages caused by the willful injury of defendant's slaves by the plaintiff, during his employment as overseer. Brady v. Price, 19 Tex. 285.

Burden of Proof.—When an article is sold with warranty, or a representation amounting to a warranty as to its quality, and in an action by the seller to recover the price the buyer relies upon a breach of warranty or the falsity of the representations to reduce the amount of his liability, the burden of proof is on him to show that the quality of the article does not correspond with the warranty or representation. Dorr v. Fisher, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 271.

If certain animals in a drove are sold under a warranty that all the animals in the drove are free from contagious and infectious diseases, the purchaser may recoup in damages, in an action for the price, the whole loss occasioned to him by the presence of the disease in the drove at that time, although some of the animals purchased by him did not take the infection till afterwards. The defendant in a suit to enforce a vendor's lien is entitled to avail himself of a recoupment for fraudulent representations made by the vendor as to the land at the time of the sale. Haynes v. Harper, 25 Ark. 541.

Where a landlord represented to his tenant that the water in a well upon the premises was fit for use, and the tenant acted upon that representation to the detriment of the health of his family, it was held, in an action against the tenant for the rent, he could recoup the expenses of the sickness in his family, including doctor's bills. Where a contractor agreed to build a bridge and keep it in repair for five years, and before the expiration of that time it was swept away, it was held that the county with which the contract was made might recoup against the amount agreed to be paid the contractor, damages for the failure of the contractor to rebuild the bridge. Jefferson Co. v. Arrghi, 51 Miss. 667.

In one's action for lumber furnished, damages may be recouped for his breach of a stipulation to furnish lumber as fast as wanted for building the defendant's house; it having been understood by the parties that they were dependent for lumber on certain sawmills in the vicinity. Eddy v. Clement, 38 Vt. 486.

Where a building contract is not performed according to its terms, the within the specified time; ¹ for damage by carrier of freight; ² for failure in quality or quantity of land.³ Recoupment has also been allowed in cases of failure of title, when the defendant has been owner may recoup the damages arising therefrom in a suit for the price, although he may have done acts amounting to an acceptance of the building. Estep v. Fenton, 66 Ill. 467. See also Snell v. Cottingham, 72 Ill. 161.

Where the plaintiff contracted to erect a telescopic gas-holder for the defendant, in an action brought to enforce payment of the price, the court will not allow the defendant to set off damages for delay in completion when the defendant's evidence fails to prove that any date for the completion of the gas-holder was fixed by the contract. Minneapolis Gas Light Co. v. Kerr-Murray Mfg. Co., 122 U. S. 300.

In an action to recover for work done under a building contract, where the defense is that the building was not completed in the stipulated time, if it appears that the defendant did not intend to use the building himself, but intended to rent it to others, and that he did not lose any opportunity of so renting by reason of the plaintiff's delay, he cannot recoup against the plaintiff's claim any sum as rents and profits of the building from the time when it ought to have been to the time when it was completed. *Wagner v. In an action for the recovery of freight a defendant cannot claim by way of recoupment the amount of a premium of insurance paid by him, which insurance was effected by reason of a deviation of the ship on her voyage, the goods having arrived safely and been duly delivered and no claim for unreasonable delay being made. Nye v. Ayres, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 532.

A claim for damages by way of recoupment for a neglect of duty by a shipowner under a charter party, may be set up by the hirer of the vessel against a libel brought by the shipowner for demurrage under that charter party. Nichols v. Tremlett, 1 Sprague (U. S.) 361.

The partial failure of consideration in the quality of land for which a vendee may recoup damages in an action brought for the purchase money, embraces not only qualities essentially inherent in the land, as fertility of soil, but also qualities extrinsically added, such as preparation for cultivation, or any other material improvement made upon the land. Barnes v. Anderson, 21 Ark. 125.

In an action for the price of land sold, the purchaser may set up in defense the fact that he was defrauded by false representations as to the boundaries of the land. Kelly v. Pember, 35 Vt. 183.

Where a purchaser of land relied upon the fraudulent representations of the vendor in making the purchase, making a partial payment of the purchase money, but after he discovered fraud executed his notes for the balance and a mortgage of the premises to secure the same, it was held that while such acquiescence or affirmance of the contract on the part of the purchaser might operate to deprive him of the right to rescind for the fraud, yet upon bill to foreclose the mortgage, he had the clear right to recoup the damages occasioned thereby; nor was it essential to such right of recoupment that he shall have asserted it, before paying any of the notes. He might then have resisted the payment, but was not obliged to do so. He might delay until proceedings were commenced to foreclose, and then present his claim for evicted, for, in that case, there is a failure of consideration;¹ but where he has failed to take covenants of warranty, he cannot recoup damages for the failure of title, unless fraud has been practiced upon him,² though he may recoup damages to the extent of the value of the incumbrance, or, rather, to the extent of the costs of the removal of the incumbrance, when he has taken covenants of warranty of title.³

Where lands were sold by deed with covenants of warranty and the purchaser executed his bond for the payment of the price, it is no defense to an action on the bond that the grantor had not a good title if the grantee is in possession of the premises under his deed. Lamerson v. Marvin, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 9. See also Greenleaf v. Cook, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 13; Freligh v. Platt, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 494; Hoopes v. Meyer, 1 Nev. 433.

It has been held in Maine that a partial failure of title to land conveyed constitutes no defense to a note given in payment for the land. Thompson v. Mansfield, 43 Me. 490.

Where a contract for the sale of land has been rescinded and a suit has been brought by the vendee for the recovery of money paid by him to the vendor in pursuance of the contract, the vendor may recoup the value of the use and occupation of the land if it has been occupied by the purchaser unless the purchaser has been compelled by law to pay the value of the use and occupation to the owner of the paramount title. Collins v. Thayer, 74 Ill. 138.

Tenant May Recoup When Evicted.—

A tenant may, upon a proceeding by distress, recoup for an eviction from or for a disturbance in the possession of the premises for which the rent is due. Wade v. Halligan, 16 Ill. 507; Lindley v. Miller, 67 Ill. 244; Lynch v. Baldwin, 69 Ill. 210.

Where rent is due in installments, if a tenant is evicted by a stranger, such eviction is a bar to the recovery of any rent that may have accrued since the last installment became due, but not to any installment that has matured before eviction. Pepper v. Rowley, 73 Ill. 262; Whitney v. Meyers, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 266.

In Martin v. Foreman, 18 Ark. 249, it was held that he could not so recoup although there were covenants of title. See also Long v. Long, 14 N. J. Eq. 462.

In Texas, the vendee may plead fraud and failure of title in reconvention. Stewart v. Insall, 9 Tex. 397.

Statute of Frauds.—The vendor of timber lands falsely represented that he was the owner of certain logging roads, and would grant, give and secure to the vendee the proper conveyances therefor. The contract of sale was reduced to writing and the lands were afterwards conveyed to the vendee. Both the written contract and the deed was silent as to the logging roads. Held, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage for the purchase money that though a promise to grant an easement is within the Statute of Frauds, the vendee could recoup the damages resulting from the fraud. Foss v. Newbury, 20 Oregon 257.

(2) Negotiable Instruments.—In general, in actions on negotiable instruments, as in cases on ordinary contracts, the right of recoupment may exist between the original parties, or those who stand in their place.¹

But it has been held that the defendant cannot show a partial failure of consideration of the bill or note, unless such partial failure is capable of definite computation, and the defendant has made an effort to rescind the contract upon which the bill or note was given.²

(3) Sealed Instruments.—Under statutes making sealed instruments only presumptive evidence of consideration, capable of being rebutted to the same extent and in the same manner as if the instrument were unsealed, the defendant will be allowed to Pierce*, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 171.

In a suit upon a promissory note given for the purchase money of land conveyed to the maker of the note by warranty deed containing a covenant against incumbrances, the defendant may recoup the sum actually paid by him, or his attorney for him, to discharge a prior mortgage on the land, but he cannot recoup to the full face of the mortgage debt when he has procured its assignment for a less sum. McDowell v. Milroy, 69 Ill. 498; Davis v. Bean, 114 Mass. 358.

Where the grantees, in a deed containing covenants against incumbrances, permit the land to be sold under prior liens against the grantor, and procure a third party to buy it, for the purpose of strengthening their title, they will be permitted to recoup from the purchase money the amount expended in removing the incumbrance, but cannot set up title in the purchaser, to defeat a recovery, by the grantor, of the residue of the purchase money. Brodie v. Watkins, 31 Ark. 319.

The right to recoup is not barred by the fact that the damages to be recouped were known to the party executing the note. While the note is an admission of the amount due and evidenced, it is not conclusive of a settlement or waiver of any claim for damages, especially when given under protest. Waterman v. Clark, 76 Ill. 428.

2. Pulsifer v. Hotchkiss, 12 Conn. 234; Burton v. Schermerhorn, 21 Vt. 289; Richardson v. Sanborn, 33 Vt. 75; Harrington v. Lee, 33 Vt. 249.

To entitle the maker of a promissory note, in a suit against him by the payee, to an abatement from its amount, in assessing damages on the ground of misrepresentation by the payee in relation to the property for which the note was given, and the consequent want of consideration as to part of the note, three things must concur, to wit: Fraud upon him in procuring the note for the sum named in it; an offer by him to rescind the contract under which the note was given, and an ability, by computation, to fix the amount to be deducted. Harrington v. Lee, 33 Vt. 249.

Partial failure of consideration is pro tanto a good defense to a promissory note where the sum to be deducted can be ascertained by mere computation. But it is otherwise where the amount to be deducted is unliquidated. Riddle v. Gage, 37 N. H. 519; 75 Am. Dec. 151.

recoup damages in an action thereon.¹ And sometimes this has been permitted, independently of statute.²

6. Damages—a. IN GENERAL.—The general rule of damages in recoupment is that the same amount can be recouped as would be allowed the defendant if he brought a cross-action.³ But no

In Vrooman v. Phelps, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 177, decided under the principles of the common law, it was held that failure of consideration could not be set up by way of recoupment in an action upon a sealed instrument. See also Christian v. Miller, 3 Leigh (Va.) 78; 23 Am. Dec. 251.

In New Jersey, it has been held that recoupment cannot be set up in an action upon a sealed instrument. Price v. Reynolds, 39 N. J. L. 171; Wakeman v. Illingsworth, 40 N. J. L. 431; Hunter v. Reiley, 43 N. J. L. 480; but these cases are decided under the special provisions of a statute.

In Adams v. Wylie, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 78, the court by Colcock, J., referring to the doctrine as stated in the text, said: "It may have been originally a departure from the strict rules of a court of law, but from the time of the case of Gray v. Handkinson, 1 Bay (S. Car.) 276, it has never been disputed. A deficiency in quantity or defect in quality where there has been a representation are legitimate grounds for a reduction of price or rescission of the contract, as the case may be. In all such cases, it is obvious that the matter alluded to must contradict the deed, but the case on the part of the defendant is to be considered as an action of a breach of covenant."

Damages which are merely speculative in their character, cannot be recouped. Taylor v. Maguire, 12 Mo. 313; Satchwell v. Williams, 40 Conn. 371.

Measure of Damages.—A party injured by a breach of contract is entitled to recoup his damages including gains prevented as well as losses sustained. But this general rule is subject to two conditions: The damages must be such as may fairly be supposed to have entered into contemplation of the parties when they made the contract; that is, must be such as might naturally be expected to follow from its violation, and they must be certain both in their nature and in respect to the cause from which they proceeded. In the case of a breach of contract to deliver a steam engine at a given time to be used for the purpose of driving a planing mill, the rental value of the machinery to have been operated by the engine was held to be the proper measure of damages, and not the profits which might have been made by using the machinery during the time the mill was idle on account of the non-delivery of the engine at the time agreed upon. Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489; affirming Griffin v. Colver, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 587. See also Abbott v. Gatch, 13 Md. 314; 71 Am. Dec. 635.

Amount Found by Jury.—The amount of damages which the defendants are entitled to recoup should be found by the jury and not by the court. Halderman v. Berry, 74 Mich. 424.

The defendant in an action to recover the price of property sold under a special agreement, which proves inferior in quality to that contracted for, is not entitled to an allowance in reduction of damages beyond the difference between the price agreed upon and the value of the property sold, on the ground that the property contracted for at the stipulated time and place of delivery was of greater value than the price agreed upon. McAlpin v. Lee, 12 Conn. 129; 30 Am. Dec. 609.

Where a landlord contracted to supply his tenant with steam power, it was held that the tenant, in an action by the landlord for the rent, might recoup the recoupment can be had for damages sustained after the beginning of the suit.¹ To enable the defendant to make use of this defense, it is not necessary that the damages be liquidated.²

6. EXCESS NOT RECOVERABLE.—A defendant cannot recover, by way of recoupment, any excess in his favor over the plaintiff's demand,³ but it has been held that he may have judgment for actual loss of wages paid during very short intervals to workmen who were in his employ by the week or month, if such loss were caused by want of steam power. Crane v. Hardman, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 339.

Limited Damages.—The plaintiff contracted with the defendant town to dig trenches in its streets for the laying of water pipes, he to guard and light them and to be responsible for all damages caused by neglect, twenty per cent. of his pay being reserved until the end of the work as a guaranty for the performance of the contract, and any damages to person or property caused by his negligence to be deducted from the twenty per cent. reserved. Suit having been brought against the town for personal damages caused by falling into one of the trenches, the plaintiff was notified and assisted at its defense, and the issue to the jury being whether the trench was properly guarded and lighted, a recovery was had against the town in an action by the plaintiff against the town to recover pay for digging the trenches. Held, that the town and the plaintiff were not in pari delicto, and that the town could recoup in damages the amount paid by them in the former suit, although it exceeded twenty per cent. of the contract price. Campbell v. Somerville, 114 Mass. 334.

A distinct refusal to perform a contract will support a claim of recoupment by the party entitled to such performance without waiting for the time of performance. Platt v. Brand, 26 Mich. 173.

In Alabama it has been held that any damage resulting from the breach of a contract to a party who is sued upon it, may be recouped, and such damages are not to be restricted to the commencement of the suit, but to the time of trial. Martin v. Hill, 42 Ala. 275.

It is provided by statute in some States that the defendant may have judgment for the excess, under the defense of recoupment. Georgia Code, § 2912 provides that in all cases where recoupment may be pleaded, if the damages of the defendant shall exceed in amount those of the plaintiff, the defendant shall recover the amount of such excess. Held that, under this costs, although the damages sustained by him exceed the amount of the plaintiff's claim.¹

7. Practice, Prerequisites, etc.—a. OFFER TO RETURN.—It is not necessary for the defendant to offer to return the property, or to rescind the contract, in order to be allowed to set up the defense of recoupment.²

b. ELECTION OF REMEDIES.—The defendant is entitled to elect whether he will set up recoupment or bring a cross-action for his damages, and the failure to make use of this defense will not deprive him of his right to an action to recover whatever claim he had in the original action.³

It is only in cases of executory contracts and without warranty, that a purchaser accepting goods and retaining them without notice to the seller or offering to return them within a reasonable time, is held to waive all defects as to their quality. Marcus v. Thornton, 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. 411; Walling v. Schwartzkopf, 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. 576.

Defendant bought a machine from plaintiff company through its agent. A mutual mistake as to the kind of machine ordered was not discovered till the machine was received, partly paid for, and a note given for the balance.

In the correspondence which ensued no arrangement was effected, but the machine was retained, used, and afterwards sold by the defendant. In an action on the note it was held that the defendant was not estopped to claim recoupment for the machine's defects, either by his use and sale thereof, or his promise to pay the note. Egan Co. v. Johnson, 82 Ala. 233.

In an action for goods sold and delivered, where it appeared that under the contract plaintiff was to deliver the goods for the holiday trade, but failed to deliver all of them in time, whereby defendant was obliged to purchase elsewhere, at an increased expense, defendant may recoup such damages as he may have suffered by reason thereof, and this without returning the goods that were furnished by plaintiff. *Traverse v. A buyer of personal property in case of failure of title to a portion thereof is not bound to wholly rescind the contract, but may retain so much as he has secured a title to and recoup his damages for the loss of the residue in an action against him for the purchase-money, or he may bring an action therefor; and this option is not defeated by a transfer of the claim against him and the bringing of an action in the name of the transferee, except

c. NOTICE OF INTENTION TO RECOUP.—It has sometimes been held that when the claim to be recouped is sufficient to extinguish the plaintiff's right of action, it may be proved under the general issue without notice;² but that if the claim goes merely where the claim is negotiable paper transferred to a bona fide purchaser discharged of all equities. McKnight v. Devlin, 52 N. Y. 399.

Where the matter of recoupment would have gone in bar of the whole action, it was held that the defendant's failure to make use of it was a bar to his cross-action for damages. Dunham v. Bower, 77 N. Y. 76; 33 Am. Rep. 570.

In Ward v. Fellers, 3 Mich. 281, it was considered a question whether or not the defendant after setting up part of his claim by way of recoupment could maintain a cross-action for the residue.

The defendant is not precluded by the fact that he has begun a cross-action against the plaintiff, from setting up his claim by way of recoupment; but if he elects to set up his claim in this manner he is barred from further prosecution of his cross-action. Fabbricotti v. Launitz, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 743; Naylor v. Schenck, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 135.

In an action on a note given for certain barrels of beef, the defendant sought to recoup for breach of warranty. Held, that an erroneous exclusion of this defense, not being seasonably corrected by appeal, the defendant was thenceforth precluded from maintaining an action for the same breach. Beall v. Pearre, 12 Md. 550.

In assumpsit to recover for a breach of warranty in the sale of cotton, it appeared that the plaintiff had pleaded the facts on which his right of action depended, in defense, pro tanto, of a suit brought against him for the price of the cotton by the present defendants in Massachusetts; that he afterwards suffered judgment therein to go against him by default, offering no evidence in support of his plea. Held, that he was not estopped by the record and proceedings in Massachusetts from maintaining the present action. Bascom v. Manning, 52 N. H. 132.

A purchaser of land who has sustained injury by the deceit of the vendor pending the negotiations may either set up his damages by way of recoupment in an action for the price or may afterwards sue for them in an independent action at his option; but if he fails to recoup, he will not afterwards be entitled to an injunction against the execution of a judgment for the price, pending a suit for the damages, on a mere allegation of the vendor's insolvency. Hall v. Clark, 21 Mo. 415.

In answer to a declaration on an account annexed for goods sold and delivered, the defendant set up that they were sold under a special contract fixing their quantity, quality and price; that he was damaged by failure of the plaintiff to deliver the stipulated quantity; that he was also damaged by the inferior quality of those delivered; that he did not accept them, and that he had paid on account more than their value, and he brought a cross-action upon like allegations of damage. On the trial of the actions together, he contended that the plaintiff had no claim otherwise than under the special contract; but refused to elect whether to avail himself of his own claim for damages, for breaches of that contract, in defense against the original action, or in support of the cross-action. Held, that he was precluded from claiming that there had been no delivery under the special contract, that his entire damages for breaches of that contract were to be assessed, and applied, first, to cancel in whole or in part any balance due upon it for the goods delivered, and that for any excess he was entitled to recover in the cross-action. But if there was no such excess, then judgment was to be entered against him therein. Star Glass Co. v. Morey, 108 Mass. 570.

2. E. g., in New York, prior to the to diminish the plaintiff's claim without extinguishing it, notice should be given of the defendant's intention to set up the defense of recoupment;¹ and that, in equity, when the claim goes merely to diminish the plaintiff's recovery, it must be set up by cross-bill.² But the practice, in many States, requires matter in recoupment to be either specially pleaded, or notice to be given of the defendant's intention to set it up.³ The purpose of notice being to prevent surprise at the trial, it must be sufficiently certain to apprise the plaintiff of the nature of the defendant's claim.⁴

III. COUNTERCLAIM—1. Definition.—A counterclaim is “a claim presented by a defendant in opposition to or deduction from the claim of the plaintiff;”¹ an opposition claim or demand of something due;² a demand of something which of right belongs to the defendant in opposition to the right of the plaintiff.³ A counterclaim is a species of set-off or recoupment, introduced by tute a defense for want of consideration or for recoupment of damages, it was not necessary for him to state which he would insist upon; it is the facts alleged which constitute the defense. Springer v. Dwyer, 50 N. Y. 19.

In an action by a mortgagee in a mortgage for future advances in pursuance of a contract for advances made by virtue of the same, an answer which sets up a breach of the contract by way of recoupment but which alleges no facts upon which a recovery for more than nominal damages could be sustained and which shows a probable excuse for the breach, is demurrable. Levy v. Sayle, 52 Ark. 246.

As to the prerequisite notice in Louisiana and Texas, see supra, this title, Reconvention.

Practice Upon Recoupment Generally.—The plaintiff suing when there is no balance due him, should, of course, be subjected to costs. Otherwise, when he becomes debtor after bringing suit. A note falling due after suit begun, but before plea, cannot be allowed in recoupment. Whitaker v. Turnbull, 18 N. J. L. 172. As to an award published after suit begun, see Varney v. Brewster, 14 N. H. 49. As to a demand accruing after suit from a liability incurred before, see Houston v. Fellows, 27 Vt. 634. 1. Black's L. Dict.

The word “counter” is defined to be “contrary to,” “contrary way,” “opposition to,” etc. The word “claim” is defined to mean the demand of anything that is in possession of another; to demand, to require, etc. Silliman v. Eddy, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 122.

Counterclaim is the opposite of claim. The plaintiff makes a claim in his complaint against the defendant; the defendant besides his defense makes a counterclaim against the plaintiff. Wolf v. E. H., 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 84.

2. Silliman v. Eddy, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 122.

A counterclaim is an affirmation of a cause of action against the plaintiff, in the nature of a cross-action, and upon which the defendant may have an affirmative judgment against the plaintiff. Clarkson v. Manson, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 45.

3. Silliman v. Eddy, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 122.

A counterclaim is that which might have arisen out of, or could have had some connection with the original transaction in view of the parties, and which, at the time the contract was made, they could have intended might in some event give one party a claim against the other, for compliance or non-compliance with its provisions. Conner v. Winton, 7 Ind. 523; Lovejoy v. Robinson, 8 Ind. 399; Thompson v. Toohey, 71 Ind. 296.

A counterclaim is a claim existing in favor of a defendant against a plaintiff (and it must be a cause of action) arising out of contract, or the transaction set forth in the complaint, or connected with the subject of the action. Williams v. Upton, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 205.

In Silliman v. Eddy, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 122, the court by Crippen, J., said: “It has been found very difficult to apply the term ‘counterclaim’ to the various actions which are daily arising in our courts, and I very much doubt whether a more perplexing, undefinable, impracticable combination of words could have been joined together in the English language than those selected in this particular by the modern reformers who claim to stand as sponsors for the present code.”

the Codes of Civil Procedure in several of the States, of a broad and liberal character.¹

It embraces both set-off and recoupment,² and is broader and more comprehensive than either,³ and is intended to secure to a defendant all the relief which either an action at law or a bill in equity or a cross-bill would have secured on the same state of facts.⁴ It is not a mere defense, but admits of affirmative relief beyond the dismissal of the plaintiff's complaint.⁵

The term "counterclaim" obviously includes recoupment and set-off as between the parties to the record, and something more. It is the set-off of the Revised Statutes together with the set-off of courts of equity, and yet something more. It embraces all sorts of claims which a defendant may have against a plaintiff in the nature of a cross-action or demand, or for which a cross or separate action would lie. Wolf v. E. H., 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 84.

That which was denominated set-off, counterclaim, and cross-demand in the Iowa Revision, are all called counterclaims in the Code. Sherman v. Hale, 76 Iowa 383.

The doctrine of counterclaim being a creature of statute and existing only by virtue of statutory law, reference must be had to the statutes of the different states to ascertain as to its existence as well as its scope and extent in any particular state.¹

A counterclaim may coexist with the plaintiff's claim, and is simply a cross-action to enforce a legal and equitable set-off. Bellinger v. Craigie, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 534.

While usury is not a counterclaim, where a defendant pleads it with other matters and demands such relief as formerly constituted the subject of a cross-bill, the answer is a counterclaim as well as a defense. Geenia v. Keah, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 245.

Professor Pomeroy says that most of the codes with reference to counterclaims may be separated into two groups, each following a certain well defined type. The first group providing generally that the counterclaim must be one existing in favor of the defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action and arising out of one of the following causes of action: First, a cause of action arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim or connected with the subject of the action; second, in an action arising on contract, any other cause of action arising also on contract and existing at the commencement of the action; and the second group providing generally that the counterclaim must be one existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action and arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim or connected with the subject of the action. The Codes of Indiana and Iowa, however, cannot be referred to either of these two general groups. Their provisions are quite different in language from the common type and much broader in meaning. Pomeroy Rem. (2d. ed.) 762, § 726.

The Indiana Code, § 59, provides that a counterclaim is any matter arising out of or connected with the cause of action which might be the subject of an action in favor of a defendant or which would tend to reduce the plaintiff's claim or demand for damages.

The Iowa Code, § 2659, provides that each counterclaim must be stated in a distinct count or division and must be one, first, when the action is founded on contract, a cause of action also arising on contracts or ascertained by the decision of a court; second, a cause of action in favor of the defendants, or some of them, against the plaintiffs, or some of them, arising out of the contracts or transactions set forth in the petition or connected with the subject of the action; third, any new matter constituting a cause of action in favor of the defendant, or all of the defendants, if more than one, against the plaintiff, or all of the plaintiffs, if more than one, and which the defendant or defendants might have brought when suit was commenced or which was then held either matured, or not if matured, when so pleaded.

The California statute belonging to the first group was amended in 1874 as follows: "When cross-demands have existed between persons under such circumstances that if one had brought an action against the other a counterclaim could have been set up, the two demands shall be deemed compensated so far as they equal each other, and neither can be deprived of the benefit thereof by the assignment or death of the other. *California Code Civ. When the defendant has against the plaintiff a cause of action, upon which he might have maintained a suit, such cause of action is a counterclaim, and the parties then have cross-demands. When such a cross-demand is interposed by a defendant, there are in effect two causes of action before the court for trial in the same suit; both parties are, in some sense, plaintiffs, and both defendants. The answer containing the cross-demand, called a counterclaim, is, in pleading, treated like a complaint by the defendant against the plaintiff, and the reply to such an answer like an answer to a complaint. Each party claims affirmative relief against the other. Davidson v. Remington, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 310.

Where anything remains to be done under an executory contract, it cannot be a subject of set-off. It must be executed, or all that the party is required to do must be done before it can be enforced for any purpose, whether by way of set-off or otherwise. Schieffelin v. Hawkins, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 112.

Matters proper to be proved on an accounting do not constitute a counterclaim in an action for a dissolution of partnership and for an accounting. Cook v. Jenkins, 79 N. Y. 575.

In the absence of fraud in an action to foreclose a mortgage for purchase money, the mortgagor having cove-

Where the plaintiff sues for the purchase money of a life estate in land, whereof he is tenant in common with the defendant and others, of the reversion in fee, the defendant cannot set up a counterclaim for damage done by the plaintiff to the inheritance in cutting timber from the land and committing other acts of waste, during the continuance of the life estate and before the sale thereof to the defendant. *Devries v. A defendant who is sued for breach of an agreement to do certain acts necessary to fix the liability of a third party on a contract with the plaintiff, cannot avail himself of a set-off existing in favor of the third party. Reed v. Darlington, 19 Iowa 349.

In an action to recover money claimed to be due, the defendant cannot counterclaim, the value of the use and occupation of premises claimed by him which the defendant entered upon and holds under a third person, and in hostility to the defendant's alleged title. Quin v. Smith, 49 Cal. 163.

Stockholders who have made advances or incurred liabilities for the benefit of the corporation may, when called upon to respond to statutory liability, set off such advances or liabilities in extinguishment thereof, as they are equally entitled with any other creditors to be indemnified from the funds of the company, or from the individual liability of the stockholders, for the indebtedness due them. Remington v. King, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 278; Briggs v. Penniman, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 387; 18 Am. Dec. 454; and see *Tallmadge v. But a stockholder in a corporation cannot set off a debt due him by the corporation, against his statutory liability as such stockholder, where his claim against the corporation consists of a judgment assigned to him, for which he has never paid. Such a defense being an equitable one, it is essential to its maintenance that the defendant and the creditor, by whom he is sued, stand upon an equality, and that is not the case where it is simply shown that he became possessed of the judgment. Bulkley v. Whitcomb, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 290.

One having insurance in a mutual insurance company cannot set up as a counterclaim, a demand for a loss covered by the insurance in an action against him, brought by a receiver or an assignee of the company, for insurance premiums or otherwise, inasmuch as he occupies the double relation of debtor and creditor; and being bound to make compensation, as well as to receive it, it would be inequitable to allow him, when the funds of the company are not adequate to pay all the losses, to set off his entire demand. *New Amsterdam Sav. An express verbal contract for the sale of real estate, being void under the Statute of Frauds, cannot be pleaded by way of counterclaim or cross-action. Ryan v. Dunphy, 4 Mont. 342; 47 Am. Rep. 355.

Where by law a note given on a usurious contract of loan is valid to secure the repayment of the principal sum loaned, and no more, an answer to a complaint upon a note for money borrowed, which alleges that the contract was usurious, and that a certain sum (less than the principal) has been "paid on the note," does not set up a counterclaim. Schmitz v. Schmitz, 19 Wis. 207; 88 Am. Dec. 681.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage, facts set up in the answer of one of the defendants, a lien creditor subsequent to the mortgage upon which he claims, that plaintiffs should be required to exhaust other security held for debt, before resorting to the mortgaged property, is not a counterclaim requiring a reply. First Nat. Bank v. Kidd, 20 Minn. 234.

Waiver of Counterclaim.—It would appear that the right to interpose a counterclaim can be waived only by such acts as will estop the party in whose favor it exists from maintaining an action upon the cause of action of which it consists. Where the affidavit for the writ of attachment is filed with the petition in the principal action, and the writ is sued out at the commencement thereof, if it is wrongfully sued out, the damages sustained by the defendant therefrom, constitutes a claim against the plaintiff existing at the commencement of the action and may be set off against his demand; but if the writ is sued out by separate petition, filed after the commencement of the principal suit, damages sustained by it cannot be pleaded as an offset. Reed v. Chubb, 9 Iowa 178.

In Shannon v. Wilson, 19 Ind. 112, it was held that it is not necessary that matter of set-off should be due at the commencement of the action in which it is pleaded, but that it is available if it is due when offered in evidence on the trial.

Contra When Connected with Subject of Action.—Where a claim arising out of the contract or transaction, upon which the action was brought, exists against the plaintiff, which would be a proper counterclaim in the action, defendant may be allowed to set it up by way of supplemental answer, even though the claim accrued subsequent to the commencement of the action. *Howard v. A counterclaim to be available to a party must afford him protection in some way against the plaintiff's demand for judgment, either in whole or in part. It must present an answer to the plaintiff's demand for relief; must show that he is not entitled, according to the law, or under the application of just principles of equity, to judgment in his favor, as or to the extent claimed in the complaint. Mattoon v. Baker, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 329.

If a person be sued on a promissory note, he cannot set up by way of defense or counterclaim, a contract with the plaintiff for the purchase of lands, and an alleged payment of the purchase price, and claim a decree in the action for specific performance. *Mattoon v. A cause of action for the specific performance of a contract in reference to real estate arises upon contract, but it cannot be set up as a counterclaim in a contract action, unless it grew out of, or is connected with the cause of action alleged in the complaint. *Waddell v. In an action to recover possession of a pension certificate, attempted to be pledged in contravention of the act of Congress, the claim for the indebtedness sought to be secured by such pledge cannot be set off by way of recovery upon the other,¹ or such as to render it just and equitable that the controversy between the parties should be settled in one action by one litigation.²

A single judgment in an action is alone contemplated which shall determine the substantial rights of the parties.³ Where there is no claim on the part of the plaintiff, there cannot, strictly and counterclaim. Moffatt v. Van Doren, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 609.

1. Grange v. Gilbert, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 9; Hinkle v. Margerum, 50 Ind. 240; and see Mattoon v. Baker, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 329; Agate v. King, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 159; Woodruff v. Garner, 27 Ind. 4; 89 Am. Dec. 477; Tabor v. Mackkee, 58 Ind. 290.

An answer alleging title and a right to possession is a valid counterclaim in an action to quiet title. Jarvis v. Peck, 19 Wis. 74; Eastman v. Linn, 20 Minn. 433; Tabor v. Mackkee, 58 Ind. 290.

To a complaint on promissory notes, a pleading alleging facts arising out of or connected with the cause of action, as a foundation of a claim against the plaintiff to enjoin the collection of the notes, is a counterclaim. Hinkle v. Margerum, 50 Ind. 240.

In a proceeding against property as to foreclose a mortgage or other lien in which no personal judgment is asked, a money demand is not a proper counterclaim. Carpenter v. Leonard, 5 Minn. 155; Agate v. King, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 159.

In an action for the recovery of the possession of property, and for damages for its detention, the counterclaim for services may be allowed upon the ground that when established it diminishes, and in whole or part defeats the plaintiff's claim for damages, even though it does not diminish or defeat his claim for possession of the property; and the fact that no damages are allowed, does not render the counterclaim inadmissible. Lapham v. Osborne, 20 Nev. 168.

Where the one cause of action can, in no legal sense, qualify or affect the other, and where fully to hear and determine, either will require no reference to or knowledge of the other, the one cause cannot be set up as a counterclaim in an action upon the other, and the fact that they resulted from the existence of the same power over the property concerned, does not in any way unite or identify them. Bradhurst v. Townsend, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 104.

2. Carpenter v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co., 93 N. Y. 552; Lapham v. Osborne, 20 Nev. 168; and see Conaway v. Carpenter, 58 Ind. 477.

In an action against a surety to compel the reconveyance of property conveyed to him, for the purpose of securing him against his liability as surety, he may set up that he had purchased it at a certain price, and had been compelled to pay off the debts and defalcations of his principal to an amount exceeding the value of such land as a counterclaim. Teague v. Fowler, 56 Ind. 569.

In an action brought by a purchaser of real estate to recover a portion of the purchase price paid by him, upon the ground of the defect in title, an answer admitting the contract and averring readiness and tender of a deed and offer to perform, and asking for a specific performance, is a good counterclaim. Moser v. Cochrane, 107 N. Y. 35.

A demand for a specific performance of a contract of sale of real estate may be set up as a counterclaim in an action by the heirs of the seller to recover the land. Fisher v. Moolick, 13 Wis. 321; and see Ingles v. Patterson, 36 Wis. 373.

3. Pomeroy on Rem. (2d ed.) 786, § 747.

Foreclosure Actions.—A party to an action to foreclose a mortgage, against whom either a personal judgment or one which may operate to transfer his estate in the land is sought, has a right to interpose a counterclaim as a defense to the action. Seligman v. Dudley, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 186; Lathrop v. Godfrey, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 739; Richmond v. Lattin, 64 Cal. 273; Merritt v. Gouley, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 372; Hunt v. Chapman, 51 N. Y. 555; Allen v. Shackelton, 15 Ohio St. 145.

But one sued upon contract cannot set up by way of counterclaim an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage against the plaintiff if he is not personally liable for the mortgage debt. Mattoon v. Baker, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 329.

In Humbert v. Brisbane, 25 S. Car.

logically speaking, be a counterclaim;¹ and matter which shows that the plaintiff never had any cause of action against the defendant, which the law would aid him in enforcing is no counterclaim,² a counterclaim being a cross-action to enforce a legal or equitable set-off containing matter which may be used not only to defeat but to sustain an action.³

The allowance of a demand as a counterclaim depends upon the nature or state of the demand, however, and not upon any especial rule or regulation touching the situation of the debtor or creditor.⁴ If the debt has accrued due and payable, and it is 506, it was held that a defendant cannot counterclaim for an eviction from a part of the mortgaged premises in a suit for the foreclosure of an equitable mortgage.

1. Bellinger v. Craigie, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 534; Davidson v. Remington, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 310; Kneedler v. Sternberg, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 67; Steele v. Etheridge, 15 Minn. 501; Mason v. Hayward, 3 Minn. 182; Whalon v. Aldrich, 8 Minn. 348; Koempel v. Shaw, 13 Minn. 488; Dove v. Hayden, 5 Oregon 501.

A counterclaim admits the plaintiff's demand, but seeks to reduce or extinguish it by legal or equitable offset. Bellinger v. Craigie, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 534.

A defendant by pleading a counterclaim for damages for the breach of a contract, which is connected with the subject of the action, admits a claim against him on the part of the plaintiff, which he avoids by his counterclaim; and by so pleading he tenders an issue upon all the equities existing between him and the plaintiff arising out of the contract, and must abide by that issue, whether he be benefited or prejudiced thereby. Koempel v. Shaw, 13 Minn. 488; Mason v. Heyward, 3 Minn. 186; Whalon v. Aldrich, 8 Minn. 348.

Where the defendant sets up a counterclaim in pleading, the presumption is that the plaintiff has a good cause of action against him, which he proposes to meet by establishing another cause of action against the plaintiff. Holzbauer v. Heine, 37 Mo. 443.

2. Prouty v. Eaton, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 409; Barthet v. Elias, 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 364; True v. Triplett, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 57; Nichols v. Boerum, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 290; Caryl v. Williams, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 416; Dillaye v. Niles, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 253. And see Equitable L. Assurance Soc. v. Cuyler, 75 N. Y. 511; Lash v. McCormick, 17

Minn. 403; Holzbauer v. Heine, 37 Mo. 443; Jones v. Moore, 42 Mo. 413; Jarvis v. Peck, 19 Wis. 74.

But although the matter pleaded may constitute a complete defense, it may also be pleaded as a counterclaim if it constitutes a cause of action in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff, and has the other requisites of a counterclaim. Griffin v. Jorgenson, 22 Minn. 92.

The right of a defendant in an action of claim and delivery to a return of the property replevied, and to damages for the taking and detention of the same in such action, is not a cause of action which can constitute a counterclaim therein. Sylte v. Nelson, 26 Minn. 105.

Usury.—The defense of usury is not a counterclaim within the meaning of the New York Code. Prouty v. Eaton, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 409; Equitable L. Assurance Co. v. Cuyler, 75 N. Y. 511.

But under the New York Revised Statutes, a party, who for any loan or forbearance of money, shall pay or deliver any greater sum than is allowed by law, may set up such payment as a counterclaim in an action for the recovery of the money loaned. Pixley v. Ingram, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 93; National Bank v. Lewis, 75 N. Y. 516; 31 Am. Rep. 484.

3. See Chamboret v. Cagney, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 31; 41 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 125; Williams v. Willis, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 11; Feltretch v. McKay, 47 N. Y. 427; *Gleason v. 4. Taylor v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 82 N. Y. 10; Clark v. Story, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 295. But see Guilford v. Cooley, 58 N. Y. 116.

the duty of the debtor to pay, and the right of the creditor to have payment, though he is disqualified to maintain an action to enforce his demand as plaintiff, it would not affect his right to set off the debt as defendant at the action of another.¹

The right of the plaintiff to claim, and the right of the defendant to counterclaim upon any given or supposed facts in controversy, must be reciprocal;² and a defendant cannot avail himself of a counterclaim which the court before which the action is pending has no jurisdiction to try and determine.³ A counterclaim that is inconsistent with the defense to the action,

A statutory prohibition against bringing actions upon a justice's judgment, within a prescribed time after its rendition, does not prevent the holder of a judgment from using it as a set-off or counterclaim in an action against him, particularly if he is a mere assignee, and not the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered. Clark v. Story, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 295.

If any two or more persons are mutually indebted in any manner whatever, and one of them commences an action against the other, one debt may be set off against the other, although such debts are of a different nature. McAdow v. Ross, 53 Mo. 199.

3. Cragin v. Lovell, 88 N. Y. 258; Emery v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 77 Mo. 339; Wiggins v. Guthrie, 101 N. Car. 661; State v. Smith, 14 Wis. 564.

The sending of a cause to the county court upon the defendant's application for a change of venue, when the amount in litigation is greater than that over which such court has jurisdiction, does not affect a discontinuance of the defendant's counterclaim, when it does not appear that his petition indicated to what court the cause should be sent. State v. Smith, 14 Wis. 564.

Under Texas Rev. Stat., art. 316, in an action in a justice's court, to which a counterclaim has been filed, and judgment rendered in the whole case, and an appeal taken to a district court, the party filing the counterclaim will not be allowed in the latter court to enlarge it, by adding items of damages not embraced in the pleadings in the justice's court, which amount to a sum greater than the justice's court would have jurisdiction of. Bowdon v. Gilbert, 67 Tex. 689.

In Wisconsin, however, the circuit court has power to allow an amendment of the answer setting up a counterclaim, although amendment has been refused by the justice. Richardson v. Chynoweth, 26 Wis. 656. And see Heath v. Heath, 31 Wis. 223.

In Heigle v. Willis, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 588, it was held that no limit is imposed upon the amount of a counterclaim which a defendant may set up in a justice's court, and it cannot be objected that such a counterclaim exceeds the amount of a justice's jurisdiction.

In Harris v. Simpson, 50 Ark. 422, it was held that in an action in a justice's court upon contract, it is no objection to a counterclaim based on misrepresentations, that such claim constitutes an action of tort, over which the justice had no jurisdiction, as such defense may be regarded as a plea of failure of consideration; or, if demanding more than what is due plaintiff, as an action on an implied promise to repay sums wrongfully received.

An amendment to a counterclaim originally setting up a cause of action for a sum within the jurisdiction of the

which is successfully maintained, cannot be allowed,¹ though a defendant may put his defense upon distinct and even upon inconsistent grounds.²

A counterclaim must be a complete cause of action within the jurisdiction where it is asserted,³ and must not be barred by the Statute of Limitations at the time of the commencement of the action in which it is set up.⁴ Subject to these qualifications, a counterclaim may be either for liquidated or for unliquidated court raising it to a sum beyond that jurisdiction cannot be objected to after the parties have gone to trial and procured a judicial determination of the cause without objection. Jackson v. Swope, 49 Ind. 388.

Where a defendant interposes the plaintiff's breach of a contract, in avoidance of his own obligation, and procures a ruling in his favor, he is in no situation to enforce the contract against the other party in any particular, especially in the same action, and he cannot therefore recover upon a counterclaim based upon the breach of a covenant contained in such contract. Walker v. Millard, 29 N. Y. 375.

Where in an action to recover the value of work done and materials furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant in the alteration of a building, the defendant counterclaimed the expenses of taking down and rebuilding a wall, alleging that the defect was caused by the negligence of the plaintiff, and the court excluded evidence of the acceptance, it was held that the exclusion was harmless, as the finding of the jury for the plaintiff negatived the counterclaim. Hine v. Meyer, 61 N. Y. 171.

A defendant need not deny the allegations of damage in the complaint in order to entitle him to prove a counterclaim set up in his answer for a breach by plaintiff of a provision of the contract sued upon. Meissner v. Brennan, 15 N. Y. Supp. 671.

The Indiana rule is that the defendant may set up such counterclaim as he may have without regard to the location of the subject-matter. Vail v. Jones, 31 Ind. 467.

Where a court of equity has jurisdiction of the parties it may compel them to do equity in relation to lands located without its jurisdiction. Vail v. Jones, 31 Ind. 467; Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327; 78 Am. Dec. 192.

And see Heath v. Heath, 31 Wis. 223; Von Sachs v. Kretz, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 95; Williams v. Willis, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 11.

If the counterclaim is not barred at the time of the commencement of the action, it is sufficient even though the statutory time elapses before the demand is actually set up as a defense in the action. Brumble v. Brown, 71 N. Car. 513.

Where the right to damages resting in the defendant arises out of a partial failure of the plaintiff to perform the contract which is the foundation of his right to recover and that remains unaffected by the Statute of Limitations, it follows that it must be in a like condition as to the defendants. Herbert v. Day, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 461. And see Maders v. Lawrence, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 360.

The assignee of a bankrupt stands in the position of trustee for his creditors, and the Statute of Limitations does not run against their claims against the estate of the bankrupt, not barred at the time of the adjudication. Von Sachs v. Kretz, 72 N. Y. 548. And see Minot v. Thacher, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 348; 41 Am. Dec. 444.

In Iowa in an action to foreclose a mortgage, the defendant may plead, in set-off, an account against a firm of which plaintiff is a member; and the damages;¹ even a demand due upon an unliquidated and unsettled partnership account demanding an accounting, and the application of the balance found due in extinguishment of the plaintiff's claim being permitted as a general rule in contract actions.² But the plea to be good must show a dissolution of the partnership, and a balance due the defendant growing out of the entire partnership transactions.³ It may as well consist of a right to equitable relief as a cause of action on which a recovery can be had at law,⁴ and may be set up as well in an equitable Statute of Limitations is not a bar to the set-off. Allen v. Maddox, 40 Iowa 124.

In Indiana a set-off may be pleaded to the amount of any cause of action, though it is barred by the Statute of Limitations. Fankboner v. Fankboner, 20 Ind. 62; Fox v. Barker, 14 Ind. 309.

It may be interposed in an action for the recovery of unliquidated damages as well as for liquidated. Lignot v. Redding, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 285.

In Illinois.—Unliquidated damages for breach of a covenant disconnected with the subject-matter of the plaintiff's claim cannot be set off. Hawks v. Lands, 8 Ill. 227.

In Nebraska it is held that a demand for unliquidated damages cannot be set up as a counterclaim. Boyer v. Clark, 3 Neb. 161.

An allegation that plaintiff is indebted to defendant in an amount greater than the amount of plaintiff's claim, on account of unsettled partnership matters which were then in litigation in another pending action, is too indefinite to constitute a counterclaim. Lipscomb v. Lipscomb, 32 S. Car. 243.

Under the present New York Code, the term "counterclaim," subject to action as in a legal action,¹ a defendant being permitted to set forth by answer as many defenses and counterclaims as he may have, whether they be such as have been heretofore denominated legal or equitable, or both,² the theory of counterclaim being to bring about the liquidation of mutual debts, and to find the balance between them in one proceeding.³

3. In What Actions Interposed.—Provisions relating to counterclaims are solely applicable to actions, and to such actions only as are mentioned in the statute making such provision.⁴ They have no application to special or other irregular proceedings,⁵ other prescribed limitations, includes any cause of action in favor of the defendant which tends in any way to diminish or defeat the plaintiff's recovery. Scribner v. Levy (Supreme Ct.), 4 N. Y. Supp. 918.

In Missouri, it is held that equitable matter—i. e., an equity of relief—can constitute a defense only, but not properly a counterclaim; and that if it be not a defense, it cannot be joined in the same suit with a cause of action at law. Jones v. Moore, 42 Mo. 413.

In Wisconsin, equitable defenses to legal actions must be pleaded by way of counterclaim and not merely as a defense. Du Pont v. Davis, 35 Wis. 631; Lombard v. Cowham, 34 Wis. 486.

A counterclaim cannot be set up on the return to a writ of mandamus, and do not apply to actions of a quasi criminal nature,¹ as actions for the recovery of a statutory penalty.² Nor can a claim for the recovery of a statutory penalty be interposed as a counterclaim in an action.³

4. What May be the Subject of a Counterclaim.—A counterclaim must be a claim either arising out of the contract or transaction sued upon, or connected with the subject-matter of the action; or, in actions upon contract, it may be some other contract.⁴ It must consist in a set-off, or a claim by way of recoupment, or be in some way connected with the subject of the action stated in the complaint.⁵

Under the Iowa statute, an independent cause of action, arising on contract, or ascertained by the decision of a court, and which can be pleaded only in an action on contract, is denominated a set-off; and a cause of action in favor of the defendants, or some of them against the plaintiffs, or some of them, arising out of the con-

In actions upon contract, a counterclaim may consist of a demand arising out of another contract,¹ or out of a breach of a covenant, either express or implied, of the contract sued upon,² or of any other demand arising out of or connected with the transaction sued upon or the subject-matter of the action.³ But tracts or transactions set forth in the plaintiff's petition, as the foundation of his claim, or connected with the subject of the action, is denominated a counterclaim. Musselman v. Galligher, 32 Iowa 383.

In Wisconsin, where the plaintiff is a non-resident, the defendant may set up as a counterclaim any cause of action he may have against such non-resident, and it is not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to permit an amendment of the answer setting up a counterclaim for plaintiff's breach of a contract of agency in action for a conversion of moneys collected by the defendant as plaintiff's agent. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Walrath, 53 Wis. 660.

Where a contract of purchase is a single one, though separate notes are given for the property, damages for a breach of warranty can be deducted from the notes. Aultman v. Mason, 83 Ga. 212; and see Dounce v. Dow, 57 N. Y. 16.

In an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien for work done and materials furnished under a contract, a counterclaim may be set up for damages for omissions and defaults in the performance of the contract. Bulkley v. Healy, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 608.

What May be Recovered.—In an action for the specific performance of a contract to convey real property, a counterclaim for breach of a covenant against incumbrances may be maintained, and damages for the percentage paid by the defendant at the time of the purchase, the auctioneer's fees, and the expenses paid for examining the title, may be recovered thereunder. Wetmore v. Bruce, 118 N. Y. 319.

In an action to recover damages for breach of contract, in refusing to complete a purchase of land, the defendant may maintain a counterclaim for any sums paid by him as a part of the purchase money at the time of the execution of the contract, where the performance of the contract has become impossible by the subsequent sale of the land or otherwise. Hening v. Punnett, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 543.

Formerly the rule was that in an action for tort a counterclaim, whether arising on contract or based on another tort, could not be allowed. Chamboret v. Cagney, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 378. Nor could a debt be set off against a tort. Allen v. Randolph, 48 Ind. 496; Harris v. Rivers, 53 Ind. 216.

A cross-complaint to recover damages for a trespass on land cannot be filed in an action to recover damages for a trespass to personal property, unless it appears therefrom that the trespass on the land related to or depended upon or affected the trespass charged in the complaint. Demartin v. Albert, 68 Cal. 277.

In an action for wrongfully taking possession of notes belonging to the plaintiff and wrongfully receiving money thereon, a counterclaim for services rendered in collecting the notes, is proper. Birch v. Hall (Supreme Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 747.

In an action for breach of a contract of partnership, defendant's answer set up a counterclaim, alleging that the plaintiff failed to bring to the firm the amount and kind of business he had agreed to. Held, that under Code Civil Proc. New York, § 501, the cause of action set forth in the complaint arising on contract, the counterclaim, which also arose on contract, might be set up. Church v. Spiegelburg, 31 Fed. Rep. 601.

An undertaking executed in the form required by the statute upon an application to obtain an order of arrest, does not create a contract obligation, and an action brought for the recovery of damages thereon is not an action upon contract to which a liability existing upon another contract can be interposed as a counterclaim. Furber v. McCarthy, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 435.

A promise to pay based upon a consideration growing out of the commission of a tort, creates no new cause of action in favor of the party against whom the tort was committed, and a counterclaim alleging such promise cannot be upheld as one arising upon contract. Vilas v. Mason, 25 Wis. 370.

Abandonment of Contract.—A written contract filed with a counterclaim for damages for defective workmanship thereunder, under which a slight deviation by mutual consent was proved, does not establish an abandonment of the contract, and is not fatal to the defendant's right to recoup the damages for such defective work. Moellering v. Kayser, 110 Ind. 533.

A warranty, whether express or implied, is matter not of tort, but of contract. Berdell v. Johnson, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 559.

A bank which has discounted a customer's note may, upon his failure to pay it, set it off against the customer's deposit. Robinson v. Howes, 20 N. Y. 84.

In McDougall v. Walling, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 364, affirmed in 51 N. Y. 666, it was held that the right to recover for money lost in betting is a demand arising on contract, and may be set up as a counterclaim in a contract action.

The personal liability of a trustee of a manufacturing corporation for the debts thereof, occasioned by his failure to file the annual report required by law, is not based upon a contract, within the restriction of New York Code, § 501 as to counterclaims. Clapp v. Wright, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 240.

In Folsom v. Carli, 6 Minn. 420, 80 Am. Dec. 456, it is said that "this is merely an enunciation of the law of set-off, and does not enlarge it in any respect."

In Indiana, however, any matter which is pleaded as a counterclaim must either arise out of, or be connected with, the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the ground of plaintiff's claim; otherwise the counterclaim must be held bad on demurrer. Miller v. Roberts, 106 Ind. 63; Douthitt v. Smith, 69 Ind. 463. This class of cases is covered by the statutory provision for set-off. Curran v. Curran, 40 Ind. 473.

In California a matter which does not arise out of the transaction set forth in the complaint, and which is not connected with the subject of the action, does not constitute a counterclaim. James v. Center, 53 Cal. 31.

In Illinois unliquidated damages arising out of a contract unconnected with the subject-matter of plaintiff's suit are not a subject of set-off. Clouse v. Bullock Printing Press Co., 118 Ill. 612. And see Olyphant v. St. Louis Ore, etc., Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 308.

Proof of Value.—In an action for damages for breach of warranty, defendant cannot, as a counterclaim, recover either the contract price, where the breach consisted in defendant's failure to deliver the article which he agreed to deliver, or the value of the article, where the value is not proved. Riss v. Messmore, 58 N. Y. Super. Ct. 23.

Each party must owe the other and each debt must be due and payable before the smaller debt can be taken from the larger. Patterson v. Patterson, 59 N. Y. 574; 17 Am. Rep. 384; Taylor v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 82 N. Y. 10.

A defendant may properly plead as a set-off or cross-demand, an account which he in fact owned at the time of the commencement of the action, though the written assignment of it from the person of whom he purchased it, purported to have been made subsequent to that date. West v. Moody, 33 Iowa 137.

In Vail v. Tuthill, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 31, a judgment obtained by defendant after the commencement of an action against him was permitted to be set up as a counterclaim in such action. See also Badlam v. Springsteen, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 160.

3. Taylor v. Root, 4 Keyes (N. Y.)

Where facts exist upon which the law implies a promise to repay money fraudulently obtained, the tort arising from the manner in which the money was obtained may be waived, and a claim may be founded upon the implied contract, thus rendering it a proper subject of counterclaim in a contract action brought by the party against whom it exists;¹ and a cause of action for conversion may be interposed as a counterclaim by waiving the tort and proceeding as for breach of an implied contract, where a conventional relation, as that of principal and agent, exists between the parties;² and it has been held, that where a party may elect either to sue in tort for the wrong done him, or in assumpsit as upon an implied contract, he may waive the tort, and interpose the demand as a counterclaim in a contract action.³ But

In Michigan it is held that in an accounting in chancery, in order that the whole controversy may be settled and adjusted, equity will sometimes permit a judgment, though obtained in an action for a wrong, to be made an item in favor of the party holding it in the account to be taken. *Dole v. To render such a cause of action available as a counterclaim, the tort must be waived, and the recovery sought as on an implied contract, and the answer must set forth facts showing defendant's election to proceed on the implied contract, and not for the wrong. Berrian v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 207.

Where defendant pleads as a set-off his claim for pasturing plaintiff's cattle, he may recover for the pasturage of a larger number than he agreed to pasture, where they were turned on his land by the plaintiff, as he may waive the trespass and damages therefor, and sue on an implied contract to pay for the pasturage of the excess. McCuin v. Frazier, 38 Mo. App. 63.

In Minnesota, where one wrongfully takes and sells the property of another, the owner may sue, as upon contract, for the money received at such sale; and there being no proof to the contrary, the jury may presume that the sale was for cash, and for the value of the property, and such a claim is a proper matter for counterclaim in an action of contract. *Brady v. the rule is well supported that in the absence of such conventional relation, in an action for conversion or for the recovery of other demands arising in tort, a waiver of a remedy which the law affords, would not alter the facts constituting the foundation of the action, nor bring the claim within the class wherein it might be interposed by way of defense to another contract.¹

The waiver by a plaintiff of a remedy which the law affords him by reason of the tortious acts of the defendant, does not entitle the defendant to assert a counterclaim upon contract by way of defense, when the action is one arising on a tort,² though when the action is based upon a contract for the violation of the obligations of which an action, as for tort, may be maintained, the plaintiff cannot deprive the defendant of a right to interpose a counterclaim by electing to sue in tort.³ A demand arising upon tort to persons interested in the estate to the extent of the value of the property appropriated by him, may be interposed as a counterclaim by a defendant sued on a contract indebtedness to the estate, with which the plaintiff wrongfully interfered. McKenzie v. Pendleton, 1 Bush (Ky.) 164.

The cases which restrict the right of election to the narrowest limits admit that if the wrongdoer has sold property converted, the owner may sue as upon contract for the money received at the sale. Brady v. Brennan, 25 Minn. 210.

In Scheunert v. Kaehler, 23 Wis. 523, it is held that where a plaintiff has a choice of remedies to sue upon a contract, as for an express or implied violation of it, or to maintain an action of tort for the wrong which had been done him, the subject of the action is the tort or wrong; and for the purpose of testing the admissibility of a counterclaim that only must be looked to, and it can make no difference that there was a contract upon which the plaintiff had a concurrent right of action, in case he had seen fit to bring a suit of that kind.

In Missouri it is held that in case of the conversion of personal property, where the same has not been sold by the wrongdoer but still remains in his hands, the owner may waive the tort and sue as for goods sold, and such a cause of action may be set up as a counterclaim in a contract action. *Gordon v. contract is none the less available to a defendant in a contract action because a breach of the contract may amount to a tort, or because the plaintiff has tortiously violated it.¹

b. CAUSES OF ACTION ARISING OUT OF THE TRANSACTION SET FORTH IN THE COMPLAINT.—A cause of action against the plaintiff, arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint, as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, may be pleaded as a counterclaim.² A cause of action arises from the transaction set forth in the complaint when the combination of acts and events, circumstances and defaults, upon which the rights of the parties are based, when viewed in one aspect, results in the plaintiff's right of action, and when viewed in another aspect, results in that of the defendant,³ the leading facts being identical, but the particulars about which the parties differ modifying

An action by a pledgor to recover damages of the pledgee for selling the property pledged at private sale and without notice, is not an action for trover or conversion, but is an action upon contract, which will admit of a counterclaim consisting of an independent contract. *Seaman v. Where the cause of action in favor of the purchaser is founded on a contract, in part performance of which a mortgage was given by him to the vendor, his cause of action can be asserted, by way of counterclaim, in an action brought by the vendor to foreclose the mortgage. But, whether the claim of the purchaser is sought to be enforced by an independent action or by way of counterclaim, the measure of damages is the same. Burckhardt v. Burckhardt, 36 Ohio St. 261.

Where the complaint alleges title and possession in plaintiffs, and contains a prayer that defendant be enjoined from committing waste on the premises, and for general relief, defendant has a right to plead title and exclusive possession in himself as a counterclaim, and to ask to have the title adjudged in him. Grignon v. Black, 76 Wis. 674.

Where matters in controversy between parties are mutually submitted to arbitration, and bonds to abide the decision of the arbitrators are mutually executed and delivered, and after the hearing but before completion, one of the parties revokes the submission and brings action against the other party to recover the claim submitted, the latter may recover by way of counterclaim in such action the damages sustained by him by reason of the revoca-their legal effect upon the rights of the parties, and pointing the transaction favorable to the one or to the other,¹ the counterclaim having some connection with the original transaction in view of the parties, and which, at the time it was had, they could have intended might in some event give one party a claim against the other.²

The term transaction thus used, is one of very general nature, and more extensive signification than contract,³ and sometimes includes a series of contracts with respect to the same business or subject.⁴ It is used in application to some commercial or business. Curtis v. Barnes, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 225; McMahan v. Spinning, 51 Ind. 187.

In an action upon contract, the defendant's claim that a second contract covering the provisions of the first, and designed to be substituted in its place, has been fully performed whereby plaintiff's cause of action is extinguished, arises out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint, and may be set up as a counterclaim by supplemental answer. *Corrigan v. In an action against partners for services rendered, plaintiff alleged a contract for a certain amount per month and board. In an action by a common carrier for freight on a cargo of wine, where the defendant sets up a counterclaim for loss by leakage of the casks, and there is no evidence that the loss occurred before the commencement of the voyage, it is error in the court to reject evidence of the value of the wine at the port of destination. *Krohn v. demand for services or for a breach of contract, may be set up in an action for the negligent or wrongful performance thereof.¹

Demands arising out of matters only incidentally connected with the transaction set forth in the complaint, however, and constituting no part of, and not inseparable from it, are not proper subjects of counterclaim,² and a personal tort, or a wrong caused by acts of violence or fraud, is not a transaction.³ Contrary causes of action for tort cannot be said to arise out of the same

Opposing demands on contract and for tort may arise out of the same transaction. Bitting v. Thaxton, 72 N. Car. 541.

A defendant may set up as a counterclaim, the plaintiff's indebtedness to him for board, etc., in an action against him for a loss of goods of the defendant upon his liability as a boarding house or hotel keeper. Harris v. Curet, 9 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 199.

Set Off of Part of Demand.—Where stock is held as collateral security for a loan and divided into several lots, one of which is separately converted, in an action for the conversion, the pledgee may set off against the plaintiff's claim, a portion of the debt bearing the same proportion to the whole debt, as the part converted bears to the value of all the stock pledged. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Davies, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 477.

Such damages may be set off if the attachment amounts to a breach of the contract sued upon. Wangenheim v. Graham, 39 Cal. 169.

In an action on a quantum meruit for personal services, the defendant cannot set off damages arising from his being compelled to surrender to his landlord his lease of the premises on which the plaintiff had been engaged to work, because the latter had violated his contract, such damage not being a direct consequence of the plaintiff's violation of his contract. Hartman v. Rogers, 69 Cal. 643.

In an action against a railroad company for negligently running over and killing plaintiff's cow, damages sustained by the engine on account of striking the cow cannot be pleaded as a counterclaim, on the theory that plaintiff negligently permitted the cow to go on the track, since the negligence of the defendant and that of the plaintiff are independent torts, and do not grow out of the same "transaction."—Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Van Auken (Ind. 1891), 27 N. E. Rep. 119.

transaction,¹ and the fact that one tort may be consequent upon another does not so connect them that they may be blended in the same action.²

Where the cause of action in favor of the defendant clearly arises out of the transaction which was the foundation of the plaintiff's demand, it may be set up as a counterclaim, irrespective of the form of action adopted by the plaintiff.³

c. CAUSES OF ACTION CONNECTED WITH THE SUBJECT OF THE ACTION.—In actions in which either a contract or a transaction which is not a contract, is set forth as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, counterclaims may be interposed which neither arise out of the same contract nor out of the same transaction, if they are connected with the subject of the action.⁴ The subject of an action is either the property which is thereby sought

A counterclaim for damages arising from a personal tort cannot be sustained. Conner v. Winton, 7 Ind. 523.

The defendant's cause of action does not arise out of the plaintiff's cause of action, when it cannot even exist consistently with it. Woodruff v. Garner, 27 Ind. 4; 89 Am. Dec. 477.

In Kentucky, however, it has been held that in an action for an assault and battery the defendant may be the party most aggrieved, and the one that is actually entitled to relief. If so, he can maintain an action against the plaintiff, and, having been sued by him, has a right to seek redress against him by his cross-action in the form of a counterclaim. Slone v. Slone, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 339.

In Pacific Express Co. v. Malin, 132 U. S. 531, it was held that a counterclaim in an action for tort which is founded on the converse of the same cause of action as that counted on by the plaintiff may be allowed.

In an action against a tenant for carrying away certain articles, forming part of the property leased, a counterclaim for the value of articles owned by the defendant, but which plaintiff refused to allow him to remove when he surrendered possession of the premises, is good. Vilas v. Mason, 25 Wis. 310.

A contract may be the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, although the action does not arise on the contract, and in all such cases a counterclaim, whether it be a cause of action legal or equitable, arising out of the same contract, may be set up by the defendant. Xenia Bank v. Lee, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 694.

In Indiana, it is held that a counterclaim may be maintained where it to be recovered or alleged to be injured,¹ or a violated right or the right, to enforce or maintain which, the action is brought.² The words "subject of action" should be construed to refer to the origin and ground of the plaintiff's right to recover or obtain the relief sought, rather than as relating to the thing itself, about which the controversy has arisen.³

The relation to or connection with the subject of the action must be immediate and direct, and something that the parties can be assumed to have contemplated in their dealings with each reaches the object of the action. Tabor v. Mackee, 58 Ind. 290; Grimes v. Duzan, 32 Ind. 361; Emily v. Harding, 53 Ind. 102; *Standley v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. A subject is that on which any operation, mental or material, is performed. Glen, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Hall, 61 N. Y. 226.

In an action to set aside a deed of real property, the subject of the action is the real estate in question. Barnes v. Gilmore, 6 Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 286.

In an action for the foreclosure of a junior mortgage, the subject of the action is the mortgage and the property covered by it, which embraces that covered by the senior mortgage, and the purpose of the action is to foreclose the mortgage and sell the property. Metropolitan Trust Co. v. Tonawanda, etc., R. Co., 43 Hun (N. Y.) 521.

The subject of an action by a landlord against a tenant to recover rent, is the rent or money due upon the contract of hiring; the compensation for the use and occupation. An interference with the possession and eviction, total or partial and unlawful injury to the premises in violation of the agreement of letting, would give the defendant a claim for damages connected with the subject of the action, so as to constitute a counterclaim, but a mere trespass by the landlord is not thus connected with the subject of the action. Drake v. Cockroft, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 34.

In an action by a wife for divorce, and to be protected in her rights to land, the husband cannot, by cross-petition, ask to have the deed of the land, which was made to the wife and her bodily heirs, reformed in favor of the husband and his child by former marriage, such relief must be through counterclaim. Grimes v. Grimes, 88 Ky. 20.

The subject of an action is the facts constituting the cause of action. Chamboret v. Cagney, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 378; Lehmair v. Griswold, 40 N. Y. Super. Ct. 100; and see Standley v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co., 95 Ind. 254.

The subject of the action is the plaintiff's main primary right which has been broken, and by means of whose breach a remedial right arises. Pomeroy on Rem. (2d ed.) 1890, § 775.

Where the plaintiff's claim is for rent accruing during the pendency of an injunction, to keep the plaintiff out of possession, any interference by plaintiff, which renders the defendant's possession less profitable, is a ground of counterclaim arising out of the transaction and connected with the plaintiff's cause of action, though it may amount to a trespass or other tort. Tinsley v. Tinsley, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 454.

other,¹ and such that it would be just and equitable that the controversy between the parties as to the matters alleged in the complaint and in the counterclaim should be settled in one action by one litigation, and that the claim of the one should be offset against or applied upon the claim of the other.²

It is not enough that the parties are the same, or that the transactions were had on the same day or at the same time.³ There must be some legal relationship between the ground of recovery alleged in the counterclaim, and the matter alleged as a cause of action by the plaintiff.⁴ A separate and distinct violation of the provisions of the contract sued upon,⁵ or a violation of the provi-

In Akerly v. Vilas, 21 Wis. 88, it was held that the counterclaim must be so connected with the subject of the action that a cross-bill would have been sustained, or a recoupment allowed under the former practice.

In an action brought against a defendant to recover damages for diverting the water of a stream from the plaintiff's land, by cutting ditches on the defendant's land, the defendant cannot set up as a counterclaim a demand for the violation or nonperformance by the plaintiff of an agreement between the parties, relative to the deepening of the channel of the stream through their respective lands, made a long time prior to the alleged diversion of the water by the defendant. Pattison v. Richards, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 143.

In Conaway v. Carpenter, 58 Ind. 477, it was held in a foreclosure action brought to foreclose a mortgage, in form a deed absolute, but given to secure payment of a debt, that an answer alleging that the defendant had overpaid the indebtedness, and praying judgment for a return of the excess, and that such deed may be declared a mortgage, is sufficient as a counterclaim for the satisfaction of the mortgage; see also Bernheimer v. Willis, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 16.

In an action to have an alleged forged mortgage canceled as a cloud on title, it cannot be set up as a counterclaim, that the money advanced thereon was used to pay off a prior genuine mortgage, and that the defendant should be subrogated to the rights of the first mortgagee; he must resort to a new action. Byerly v. Humphrey, 95 N. Car. 151.

4. Standley v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co., 95 Ind. 254.

In an action for trespass, alleging injury, destruction and carrying away of personal property in aggravation of damages, the defendant cannot set up an equitable counterclaim as owner in common with the plaintiff of the property injured or taken, to have the plaintiff account for the use of defendant's share of the property, and to have the property sold and the proceeds divided between the parties. Tallman v. Barnes, 54 Wis. 181.

In an action to enforce a lien against a judgment debtor's heirs at law, a counterclaim for injury to real estate cannot be allowed. Lee v. Eure, 93 N. Car. 5.

In an action upon a promissory note, damages for the conversion by the holder of property pledged to him as security for the payment of the note, may properly be pleaded as a counterclaim. Cass v. Higenbotam, 100 N. Y. 248.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage for purchase money of land, in which a personal judgment is demanded for any deficiency of the proceeds of sale to pay the mortgage, interest, and costs, a breach of the covenant of seisin in plaintiff's deed of the premises to defendant is a proper counterclaim. *Merritt v. A cause of action for a breach of the same trust, which the plaintiff alleges the defendant broke, is connected with the subject of the action, and a proper subject for a counterclaim. Vose v. Galpen, 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 96.

In Glen, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Hall, 61 N. Y. 226, a claim to a right to use a trade name was held to be inseparably connected with a cause of action brought against the party claiming the right by another, to enforce a right to the same name claimed by him, and to restrain its violation.

Divorce.—In an action for divorce, an answer setting up countercharges of the same character in favor of the defendant, sets up a counterclaim requiring a reply. Leslie v. Leslie, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 311; Waltermire v. Waltermire, 110 N. Y. 183; McNamara

In an action for damages for withholding the possession of real property, if the defendant held, under color of title, in good faith, adversely to the claim of the plaintiff, taxes paid by him upon the property during such withholding are a proper subject of counterclaim. Neff v. Pennoyer, 3 Sawy. (U. S.) 495.

Where a claimant lawfully enters upon land, but is kept out by injunction, and the injunction is afterwards dissolved, he does not become entitled to the crop then growing on the land, and the person who planted it may set up a claim therefor as a counterclaim in an action brought by the claimant for rent. Tinsley v. Tinsley, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 454.

In an action for rent, a mere trespass upon the part of the landlord, or a tort of any character not amounting to eviction in whole or in part, cannot be set up as a defense or a counterclaim. It must appear to create such a defense that the acts of the landlord amount to a breach of a contract of letting, otherwise they are not connected with the subject of the action. *Walker v. The fact that the commencement of a suit against a city for services rendered it by plaintiff, prevents the city from negotiating its bonds, does not entitle the city to counterclaim such damages against plaintiff. McGregor v. Cook (Tex. 1890), 16 S. W. Rep. 936.

In an action of trespass for damages, benefits growing out of the act constituting the trespass cannot be set up as a counterclaim. Bazemore v. Bridgers, 105 N. Car. 191.

In Lawe v. Hyde, 39 Wis. 345, it was held that a defendant in ejectment cannot, as a general rule, set up a counterclaim resting on his legal title, for a release of plaintiff's claim of title, which the answer alleges to be void on its face, and without color of right.

In Moyle v. Porter, 51 Cal. 639, it was held that in an action by one in possession of real estate to quiet the title, an answer setting up facts essential to a complaint in ejectment against the plaintiff, and asking that the possession of the premises be awarded to him, does not contain a counterclaim.

Where the subject of the action is hay and grain, which the defendants had converted, a counterclaim for plaintiff's breach of the conditions of the lease under which they were grown, is not connected with the subject of the action. Adams v. Loomis, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 638.

In Hewser v. U. S., 13 Ct. of Cl. 284, however, in which a deposit with a collector of internal revenue for a special purpose had been improperly paid by him into the United States treasury on account of a tax subsequently assessed, it was held that though the collector's act was wrongful, yet in an action brought by the depositor for the recovery of the money, the government could set up such tax by way of counterclaim.

In A's action to recover of B for two organs sold and delivered, B cannot counterclaim for breach of warranty of other organs, delivered under a prior sale. Needham v. Pratt, 40 Ohio St. 186.

Where a credit had been allowed for a shortage in the weight of coal purchased by the plaintiff of the defendant, and several years afterwards plaintiff brought suit against defendant for breach of a contract for the purchase of a cargo of iron, the defendant cannot reopen the allowance for the shortage, on the ground of fraud and plead it as a counterclaim. Roberts v. Benjamin, 124 U. S. 64.

A counterclaim for slander of title in respect to land, or for malicious prosecution of a suit in respect to such land, cannot be interposed as a counterclaim in an action for the recovery of the purchase money of such land. Akerly v. Vilas, 21 Wis. 88; Briggs v. Seymour, 17 Wis. 255.

The principle that a counterclaim must be one existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff, between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, applies only to the plaintiff on the record. Spencer v. Babcock, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 326.

That a joint judgment may be given does not exclude the allowance of a counterclaim, when a several judgment might also be had between the parties. Bathgate v. Haskin, 59 N. Y. 533.

A defendant cannot set up as a counterclaim, allegations of such a character that if they were in the form of a complaint in a separate action, another person, not a party to the pending suit, would be a necessary party to such separate action. McConihe v. Hollister, 19 Wis. 269; Coursen v. Hamlin, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 513; Hicks v. Sheppard, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 335; Pennoyer v. Allen, 50 Wis. 308; and see Cummings v. Morris, 25 N. Y. 625; *Goodwin v. In Kentucky a counterclaim is required to be a cause of action in favor cannot be allowed as a counterclaim, however, when he has no actual interest in the demand sued upon, and is the nominal plaintiff only;¹ but so much of a demand against the person for whose benefit the action is brought as will satisfy the plaintiff's demand, must be allowed as a counterclaim, if it might have been so allowed in an action brought by the person beneficially interested.²

a. WHO MAY INTERPOSE A COUNTERCLAIM.—A demand which is not due to a defendant, or which he is not entitled to enforce, cannot be claimed by him, or interposed as a counterclaim in an action against him.³ In an action against two or more persons or partners, a claim in favor of one or more, or of any of the defendants, or some of them, against the plaintiffs, or some of them, arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the petition, as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action. Nolle v. Thompson, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 121, citing Kentucky Civil Code, § 126.

In Iowa if any one defendant, where there are more than one, holds a cause of action, arising out of the contract or transactions set forth in the plaintiff's petition as his cause of action, or connected with the subject of the action, it may be pleaded as a counterclaim against the plaintiff, or against any one of them, if there are more than one. Musselman v. Galligher, 32 Iowa 383, citing State Bank v. Morris, 13 Iowa 136; Briggs v. Briggs, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 477; Tinsley v. Tinsley, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 460.

Under the Indiana Code, in all actions upon contract against several defendants, any one of whom is principal and the others sureties therein, any claim upon contract in favor of the principal defendant and against the plaintiff, or any other holder of the contract, may be pleaded as a set-off by the principal or any other defendant. Knour v. Dick, 14 Ind. 20.

The right of set-off exists against the person who is the equitable owner of the claim. Miller v. Florer, 15 Ohio St. 148.

Although it is error to strike out a counterclaim against a third person alleged to be the real party in interest, if the jury find the plaintiff to be the real party in interest, the error will be held to be immaterial. Challiss v. Wylie, 35 Kan. 506.

Where a claim offered as a set-off belonged to all the defendants jointly at the commencement of the suit, it is no objection that one of the defendants has derived his title by assignment from a co-defendant. Bell v. Davis, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 210.

Parties.—Neither the law which gave the right of set-off, nor which secures to a defendant defenses legal and equitable as well those which are personal to the party to the record, as those which exist against the demand in the number less than all of them, cannot be set up and enforced as a counterclaim.¹ And where a defendant is sued upon an individual liability, he cannot set up as a counterclaim a demand which he holds jointly with others against the plaintiff;² one of two or more joint defendants not being permitted to interpose a counterclaim in an action, unless under the pleadings a several judgment could be rendered against him.³ In an action against several defendants, however, who are jointly and severally liable, either may avail himself of an individual claim against the plainhands of the plaintiff as an assignee or otherwise, makes any change in the law relating to the necessary parties to an action. Cummings v. Cummings, 25 N. Y. 625.

In Tilden v. Washburn, 6 N. Y. Supp. 556, which was an action upon partnership notes, in which only one of the defendants appeared and answered, setting up a counterclaim in his favor, it was held that though the liability was joint, the defendant who appeared could avail himself of the counterclaim for fraudulent representation made in the sale of the business for which the notes were given, so far as to defeat the plaintiff's recovery.

A plaintiff who has made two persons defendants is in no situation to deny a counterclaim, on the ground that it did not accrue to both, when he had always treated the deal as with both. Drew v. Edmunds, 60 Vt. 401.

Where the person in whose favor a counterclaim is shown to exist is the principal debtor, and the other defendants are his sureties, it is probable that in equity he would be allowed to

(1) Assignees.—A debtor may, in good faith, purchase any valid claim against his creditor, and use it as a counterclaim when sued by him, a demand held by assignment being as available as a counterclaim as an original demand;¹ but it must appear that such assignment was made before the commencement of the action.² And if the action is upon an assigned demand, and the counterclaim is a demand against the plaintiff's assignor, it must appear that the defendant took his assignment before notice of the assignment to the plaintiff.³

In Turner v. Simpson, 12 Ind. 413, it was held in a suit upon a promissory note, in which one of the defendants was principal and another surety, the defendants having set up as a counterclaim an indebtedness of the plaintiff to the principal, that the plaintiff may, in order to meet the demand, set up in reply, any indebtedness from the principal to himself or to any former holder of the demand, which is a legitimate subject of set-off, and that the excess only of the defendant's claim shall go in bar of the action.

Under North Carolina Code of Civ. Pro. the relief formerly obtained by a decree for specific performance of a covenant not to sue, restraining the collection of any amount from other principal obligors, that would subject the covenantor to an action for contribution, may be had by counterclaim so as to put the judgment in the form of a separate one against such other principals, for such an amount of the debt as would not give them a right of action against the covenantor. Russell v. Ad-derton, 64 N. Car. 417; Harshaw v. Woodfin, 64 N. Car. 568.

A demand assigned to the defendant before the commencement of the suit, may be set off, though he has not actually paid for it, but has merely agreed to do so. Everit v. Strong, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 163. But the rule is different with reference to an assignment not based upon a proper consideration. Robinson v. Howes, 20 N. Y. 84.

In Indiana, the statutory rule is, that when cross-demands have existed between persons under such circumstances, that one could be pleaded as a counterclaim or set-off in an action brought upon the other, neither can be deprived of the benefit thereof by the assignment or death of the other, and the two demands must be deemed compensated so far as they equal each other. Schoonover v. Quick, 17 Ind. 196; citing Indiana, 2 Rev. Stat., § 61, p. 41.

(2) Persons Sued in a Representative Capacity.—A person sued in a representative capacity may set forth as a counterclaim, a demand belonging to the person whom he represents, where the person so represented would have been entitled to set it forth in an action against him.¹ But a person thus sued cannot interpose a claim owned by him individually as a counterclaim in such an action;² and a defendant sued in his individual capacity cannot set up as a counterclaim a cause of action existing in his favor in his representative capacity.³

b. AGAINST WHOM A COUNTERCLAIM MAY BE PLEADED.—A counterclaim must be a cause of action which is enforceable against the plaintiff, or if there is more than one, against all the plaintiffs.⁴ In an action brought by several plaintiffs, the defendant cannot set up as a counterclaim a cause of action against any tion in bankruptcy, purchases a claim against him, cannot set it off in an action brought by the assignee in bankruptcy, to recover the original indebtedness. Smith v. Brinkerhoff, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 519; affirmed 6 N. Y. 305.

A claim for losses by fire, due from an insurance company, may be set off by the insured against a claim by the insurance company against his assignee in bankruptcy, for moneys deposited with him as a private banker. But a claim for losses by fire, due from an insurance company, cannot be set off by the insured against notes given by him for capital stock of the same company. Scammon v. Kimball, 92 U. S. 362.

A public administrator is entitled to offset against a debt due from him to a bank, a demand for deposits in the bank, whether made in his own name or as public administrator. Miller v. Franklin Bank, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 444.

The reason for the rule is that if such a demand were allowed it would alter the course of administration. Hills v. Tallman, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 674.

Where a promissory note indorsed in blank by a testator, and deposited in a bank for collection, comes after his death into the possession of his executor, the executor may maintain an action thereon in his own name, or may rely upon it as a defense by way of counterclaim, in an action brought against him in his individual capacity, to enforce a claim for which he is individually liable. *Barlow v. Purchase of Claims by Executor.—It would be inconsistent with the principles of sound public policy, to permit an executor to buy up claims against creditors of an estate for the purpose of obtaining a set-off in equity. *Dudley v. In Iowa, however, a defendant may plead as a set-off or counterclaim against a plaintiff, a claim arising on contract, which would constitute a cause of action in his favor against the plaintiff and others jointly bound with him. Redman v. Malvin, 23 Iowa 296; number less than all of such plaintiffs;¹ nor in an action brought by an individual plaintiff can the defendant set up as a counterclaim a cause of action which he has against this plaintiff, together with some other person who is not a party to the action.²

A defendant upon showing that one of several plaintiffs is the sole party in interest, however, may avail himself of a demand against that plaintiff, in all respects as if the action had been brought in the name of such plaintiff alone.³ Where the rights of the plaintiffs against the defendant are several, the defendant may interpose as a counterclaim a demand against one of the plaintiffs, between whom and himself a separate judgment might be had in the action.⁴

A demand against a surviving partner cannot be pleaded as a counterclaim in an action by him upon a demand in favor of the firm, but it might be allowed as a set-off. Lawrence v. Vilas, 20 Wis. 381.

In an action by some of the members of a firm, and the assignee in bankruptcy of the others a demand in favor of defendants against the members of the firm, would, if properly pleaded, be a good offset, regardless of the want of parties. McCulloch v. Vibbard, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 227.

In Wallenstein v. Selizman, 7 Bush (Ky.) 175, which was an action commenced by a non-resident against a resident of the State, a demand against one of the plaintiffs was allowed as an equitable set-off or counterclaim, upon the ground that the defendant could not sue upon it in that State.

Where there is a dormant member of a copartnership whose connection with the firm is intentionally concealed, and the partners have induced others to deal with the ostensible partner as if he alone were interested, in a suit brought by all the partners, the defendant may interpose a demand due from the ostensible partner alone, upon the ground that the plaintiffs had led the defendant to believe that such partner was the only person contracted with. *Van Valen v. In England, if the defendant has a claim connected with the subject of the action against the plaintiff, and another person (e. g., a co-defendant or a stranger), he may set it up by counterclaim. In the latter case the statement of defense has, in addition to the original title of the action, a new title setting forth the names of the persons against whom the counterclaim is set up. If any one of them is not a party to the action, he is served with a copy of the defense, indorsed with a notice to appear, and he is thenceforth in the same position as if he had been sued in an independent action by the defendant. *Rapalje L. Where the subject of a counterclaim is a tort, it is no objection that the tort was committed by a firm composed

In an action by a principal upon a contract made by an agent in his own name, without disclosing his agency, the defendant may set off a debt due to him from such agent;¹ but if he knew or had reason to believe that the agent was not the real party in interest, but was acting as agent in the transaction, it will not be allowed.²

(1) Assignees.—The assignee of a contract takes it subject to the right of set-off which the debtor had against it at the time of the assignment and notice thereof;³ and if an action is founded of plaintiff and others not parties to the suit. Walker v. Johnson, 28 Minn. 147.

In an action by several plaintiffs, on a contract, for an accounting, if the contract itself divides the fund, and makes a specific share due to each, a cause of action in favor of the defendants against one of the plaintiffs, though it could not be set up to bar the right to an accounting, is a proper counterclaim against the share of the plaintiff whom it affects. Taylor v. Root, 4 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 382.

Surviving Partner.—A several demand against a deceased partner, however, cannot be allowed as a counterclaim in an action brought by a surviving partner upon a demand in favor of the firm. Lawrence v. Vilas, 20 Wis. 381.

In Bliss v. Bliss, 7 Bosw. (N. Y.) 339, the rule was laid down that where goods are sold by a broker, without disclosing his principal, the purchaser when sued by the principal for the price, cannot set off a debt due to him from the broker, but that where the sale is made by a factor, the purchaser, as a general rule, may set off a debt due to him from the factor.

A right to set off a claim against the agent is lost if the principal is disclosed before the goods are delivered or the payment made when the contract is executory. The vendee is not then acting in the dark, and his liberty of action remains, at least where his interests may be affected by the change of creditors, and so can have no equity to use the goods of one man to pay the debt of another. McLachlin v. Brett, 105 N. Y. 391.

Recoupment by Agent.—An agent who is sued to compel him to pay a claim, for which he has made himself liable, can recoup any claim which his principal would have arising out of the contract, upon which the agent is liable; but he cannot recoup a claim of the principal arising out of another contract. *Elwell v. upon a demand which has been assigned by a party thereto, a demand existing against such party at the time of the assignment and belonging to the defendant, must be allowed as a counterclaim,¹ if it might have been so allowed against the assignor, while the contract belonged to him.²

But an assignee of a chose in action is not liable to be prejudiced by any new dealings between the original parties to the contract,³ and a demand accruing after the assignment cannot be relied upon as a defense, by way of set-off or counterclaim.⁴

Assignment for Security.—In an action against a landlord by a contractor, to recover for repairs on the leased premises which he had previously agreed to pay for to a sub-tenant, under whom the repairs were commenced, he cannot counterclaim rent due him from such sub-tenant, upon the ground that the contractor had taken an assignment of the lease, where it appears that such assignment was made merely as security, and that the entry of the contractor was for the purpose only of making the repairs. *Tallman v. Both debts must have been due and payable at the same time, and before a change in the ownership of either.¹

A mere claim for unliquidated damages is not available as a counterclaim against an assignee.² Where the two claims are connected, however, equity requires that set-off should be compelled, although one is unliquidated, when, by reason of the insolvency of either debtor or creditor, satisfaction cannot be obtained.³

(2) Persons Suing in a Representative Capacity.—In order to constitute a valid counterclaim, the two demands must be mutual debts respectively due to and from the plaintiff in the same capacity.⁴ In an action by a receiver, executor, administrator, or

In an action to recover for the use of, and for an injury to, a wagon formerly belonging to the plaintiff's husband, the defendant cannot be allowed, as a counterclaim, a demand existing against plaintiff's husband, on the ground that defendant had no notice of the sale of the wagon to the plaintiff, where it is not shown that the defendant acted on the belief that the husband was the owner. Sloteman v. DeGroot, 36 N. Y. 348.

In Ferreira v. Depew, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 131, it was held that an unsettled demand existing prior to an assignment is not available as a counterclaim in an action by the assignee, but that it is doubtless an equitable defense, the plaintiff having taken the claim subject to the equities existing between the defendant and the assignor.

trustee therefore, upon a demand due to the estate, or party which he represents, a demand in favor of the defendant against such estate is a good counterclaim.¹ But in an action brought by a plaintiff in his individual capacity, a claim against him in his representative capacity cannot be interposed as a counterclaim;² nor can a claim against a plaintiff in his individual capacity be interposed as a counterclaim in an action brought by him in his representative capacity.³ A demand which can be set off against an executor or administrator, however, in an action brought by

In an action by an insolvent administrator, to whom a portion of the recovery will belong in his individual capacity, a demand against him individually may be allowed in counterclaim. Carr v. Askew, 94 N. Car. 194.

The reasonable and necessary expenses of the interment of the body of a deceased person are a charge against his estate, and constitute a good counterclaim in an action brought by his representative for the recovery of a demand due the estate. Patterson v. Patterson, 59 N. Y. 574; 17 Am. Rep. 384.

Demands in reference to offset are considered due from the same person in the same right, where the plaintiff may sue and the defendant be sued in their own names, without specifying any representative character, and where the party to the suit has a lien upon, or a legal right to the application of the fund when collected. Where a receiver represents creditors only, and the action which he brings can only be maintained in the right of the creditors, and not by the corporation for which the receiver was appointed, a demand against such corporation cannot be set up as a counterclaim. Pendergast v. Greenfield, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 494. And see Osgood v. Ogden, 3 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 425; Clark v. Brockway, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 351.

The intent of the parties is not the subject of inquiry. An assignment may be held fraudulent as to creditors, and a trust may be created, not by the assignment, but by adjudication by the court as the result of fraud, for the purpose of the remedy in behalf of creditors, and in such case that question cannot be raised in the action for the purpose of the alleged counterclaim. Willover v. First Nat. Bank, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 184.

Where an executor or administrator has sold property of the estate on credit, he may bring an action in his own name to recover the purchase price, and in such an action a debt against the decedent cannot be made the subject of a counterclaim. Thompson v. Whitmarsh, 100 N. Y. 35.

3. Gelshehem v. Harris, 26 Fed. Rep. 680; Thompson v. Whitmarsh, 100 N. Y. 35; Wakeman v. Everett, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 278; Westfall v. Dungan, 14 Ohio St. 276.

Under the bankruptcy laws, requiring an equal division of the estate of a bankrupt among all creditors, a debt due to a stockholder for losses sustained by him of properties insured by him as such, must have been due and payable to the defendant from the decedent in his lifetime;¹ and in a suit by an executor or administrator upon a cause of action which arose after the death of the testator, the defendant cannot set off a demand against the testator or intestate, even though it existed at the time of his death.²

(3) Government.—A State or sovereign, by coming into court as a suitor, does not abandon its sovereignty and subject itself to any affirmative judgment which the court may render against it upon a set-off or counterclaim.³ The right of a debtor of the

the company, cannot be set off against his indebtedness to the company for unpaid shares in the capital stock of the company, for the reason that the moneys arising from that source constitute a trust fund for the payment of the creditors. Sawyer v. Hoag, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 610; Scammon v. Kimball, 92 U. S. 362; and see U. S. v. Eckford, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 488.

In Pendergast v. Greenfield, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 494, which was an action brought against one as trustee for the recovery of moneys of an insolvent bank, which had come into his hands, and in which the defendant set up as a counterclaim a demand due him from the bank for services rendered by him as its vice-president, it was held that the counterclaim tended in some way to diminish and defeat the plaintiff's recovery, and the demand existed against the person whom the plaintiff represented, or for whose benefit the action was brought, and was properly interposed and should be sustained.

An heir, legatee or next of kin cannot maintain a counterclaim for his share of an estate in an action against him, brought by the administrator to recover a debt due to the estate. Woodhouse v. Woodhouse, 11 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 241; Lattimer v. Sullivan, 30 S. Car. 111.

A counterclaim which rests upon alleged tortious acts of executors in the management of the estate which they represent, arises after the death of the decedent, and is not one which belongs to the defendant at the time of his death, and cannot, therefore, be interposed in an action against him by such executors for the recovery of a demand due the estate. Wakeman v. Everett, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 278.

In Lerche v. Brasher, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 385, a transaction had, after the death of a decedent, but dated back to a time during his lifetime, was allowed as a counterclaim in an action against his administrator brought by the person thus dating it.

2. Merritt v. Seaman, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 330, reversed on other grounds in 6 N. Y. 168; Dale v. Cooke, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 13; Root v. Taylor, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 137; Fry v. Evans, 8 Wend. (N. Dayhuff*, 27 Ind. 158.

In Woodward v. Lavery, 14 Iowa 381, it was held that a debtor of an estate is not permitted to set up as a counterclaim against his debt demands against the estate purchased after the death of the intestate at a discount.

Examination of Party.—The statutory rule that a party cannot be examined as a witness, when the opposite party sues or defends as legal representative of a deceased person, is properly applicable only where the cause of action or matter of defense is one which accrued to the deceased in his lifetime, and not where the legal representative sues upon a chose in action purchased by him, and upon which he could bring a suit in his own name. Lawrence v. Vilas, 20 Wis. 381.

Ann. 553; New Orleans v. Davidson, 30 La. Ann. 541; 31 Am. Rep. 228; Chevallier v. State, 10 Tex. 315;

United States government, when sued by it, to interpose a counterclaim or counter-credit, rests upon statutory provisions requiring such counter-credits to be first submitted to the proper accounting officers,¹ upon complying with which a defendant sued by the government may give in evidence any counterclaim or credit which he may have in his own right, and which is a proper subject of set-off, whether arising out of the transaction on which he is sued or an independent transaction.² But such a counterclaim is available only to the extent necessary to defeat the claim of the government, and no judgment can be recovered against the government for the excess, should there be any.³ These principles do not apply to a political division of the State which has not the prerogative of a sovereign.⁴

c. DEMANDS AGAINST CO-DEFENDANTS—(See also CROSS-BILL, vol. 4, p. 905; CROSS-COMPLAINT, vol. 4, p. 906).—In an action against several defendants, the court has power not only to make a complete determination of the action between the plaintiff and the defendants, but also to determine the ultimate rights of two or more of the defendants as between themselves,⁵ in order to secure a complete determination of the entire controversy arising out of the plaintiff's action.¹

Com. v. Matlack, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 303; Treasurers v. Cleary, 3 Rich. (S. Car.) 372; Reeside v. Walker, 11 How. (U. S.) 272; U. S. v. Giles, 9 Cranch (U. S.) 228; and see People v. Brandreth, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 224; 36 N. Y. 191.

In Com. v. Todd, 9 Bush (Ky.) 708, it is held that a counterclaim against the State can be used as a defense, but no further; that as no judicial proceeding can be maintained against a State, no counterclaim is possible beyond defeating the action in which it is interposed. See also State v. Franklin Bank, 10 Ohio 91.

No action can be sustained against the government, except by its own express consent, under some special statute allowing it, and to permit a demand set up by way of counterclaim against the government to be proceeded upon to judgment against it would be equivalent to permitting a suit to be prosecuted against it. *People v. They can only be set up in court after having been disallowed by such officers, except in special cases. People v. Denison, 84 N. Y. 272.

Relief between co-defendants must be based upon the facts involved in and brought out by the litigation and investigation of the claim of the plaintiff.² Distinct and separate causes of action cannot be brought into the case by means of the answer of a defendant, when they are not in any form connected with the subject-matter of the action.³ If no issue with the complaint is made, the equities between the several defendants must be set-

How. Pr. (N. Y.) 498; Metropolitan Trust Co. v. Tonwanda, etc., R. Co., 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 368; 43 Hun (N. Y.) 521; Manning v. Gasharie, 27 Ind. 399. And see Jones v. Grant, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 348; Barry v. Brune, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 405.

Under statutes providing for cross-bills relief may be had against the plaintiff, against co-defendants, and others touching the matter in question in the original bill or complaint. See Kemp v. Mitchell, 36 Ind. 249; Frear v. Bryan, 12 Ind. 343; Fletcher v. Holmes, 25 Ind. 458; Kidder v. Barr, 35 N. H. 235; White v. Buloid, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 164; Ayres v. Carver, 17 How. (U. S.) 591.

The only real difference between a complaint and a cross-complaint, is that the first is filed by the plaintiff and the second by the defendant; both contain a statement of the facts and each demands affirmative relief upon the facts stated. Tippecanoe Co. v. LaFayette, etc., R. Co., 50 Ind. 85; Ewing v. Patterson, 35 Ind. 326.

In Indiana an answer seeking affirmative relief should be in the form of a cross-complaint, and where affirmative relief is sought against the plaintiff and the co-defendants, they should be made parties to the cross-complaint. Winslow v. Winslow, 52 Ind. 8.

1. Smith v. Hilton, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 236; Derham v. Lee, 87 N. Y. 599; Ayres v. Carver, 17 How. (U. S.) 591.

The provisions of the New York Code, relative to controversies between co-defendants, apply only in case of co-defendants who have appeared in the action. Parker v. Commercial Tel. Co., 3 N. Y. St. Rep. 174.

A defendant in foreclosure setting up that the mortgage is void for usury between plaintiff and a co-defendant, cannot compel an amendment of the complaint for the purpose of setting forth the transaction, but may be protected by litigating the question with his codefendant. Newman v. Dickson, 1 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 307.

2. Kay v. Whittaker, 44 N. Y. 576; Lansing v. Hadsall, 26 Hun (N. Y.) 619; Dusenbury v. Fisher, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 482; Elliott v. Pell, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 268; Jones v. Grant, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 350; Frear v. Bryan, 12 Ind. 343; Williams v. Boyd, 75 Ind. 286; Vance v. Evans, 11 W. Va. 376; Ayres v. Carver, 17 How. (U. S.) 591.

In an action for partition and to quiet title, an answer alleging that the ancestors under whom the plaintiff claims, agreed to convey the real estate in question to defendant, and put him in possession, and that he is still in possession, is good as a cross-complaint for the specific performance of the contract. Winslow v. Winslow, 52 Ind. 8.

Where the relief demanded in the complaint is substantially the same as that asked for in the answer of a co-defendant, these rules do not apply. Edwards v. Downs, 13 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 57.

3. Rafferty v. Williams, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 544; Kay v. Whittaker, 44 N. Y. 565; Smith v. Hilton, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 236; Dusenbury v. Fisher, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 487; Tripp v. Vincent, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 613; Joyce v. Whitney, 57 Ind. 550; Buffalo v. Buffalo, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 113; Vance v. Evans, 11 W. Va. 376.

Where no issue is tendered to the complaint, and the plaintiff is allowed to proceed to judgment, and the cause is retained for the litigation of the rights of the defendants as between themselves, the court may control the application of the proceeds of the action, so as to compel payment thereof to the person finally found to be entitled thereto. Meredith v. Lackey, 16 Ind. 1.

Where the court decides that the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief asked for by him, for the reason that he is not the real party in interest, an adjudication will not be made as to the tled between them, and they cannot be urged to defeat or delay the plaintiff's right to recover.¹

A defendant who requires such a determination must demand it in his answer, and set forth the facts upon which his right to it is based;² and he must serve a copy of his answer upon the attorney for each of the plaintiffs to be affected by the determination within the time prescribed by law.³

6. Counterclaims in Equity.—The general rule is that equity requires cross-demands to be set off against each other, if, from the nature of the claim or the situation of the parties, justice rights of the defendants between themselves. Dusenbury v. Fisher, 47 N. Y. Supr. Ct. 482.

The complaint of one defendant against another to establish the alleged suretyship of the former, is not a mere cross-complaint, but sets forth a new and original proceeding which cannot be tried upon the summons issued by the plaintiff. Joyce v. Whitney, 57 Ind. 550.

1. Kay v. Whittaker, 44 N. Y. 565; Lansing v. Hadsall, 26 Hun (N. Y.) 619; Manning v. Gasharie, 27 Ind. 399; Meredith v. Lackey, 16 Ind. 1.

In a foreclosure suit, defendants who do not set up equities as against the plaintiff, should not be allowed to litigate between themselves before judgment, the question of their priorities of right in the fund, or their equity as to the order of sales of parcels of the property, but the plaintiff should have the usual judgment of sale. Smart v. Bement, 4 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 253.

2. Albany City Sav. Inst. v. Burdick, 87 N. Y. 40; Kreichbaum v. Melton, 49 Cal. 50; Fletcher v. Holmes, 25 Ind. 458; Meredith v. Lackey, 16 Ind. 1.

A cross-complaint to withstand a demurrer for want of facts must, like an ordinary complaint, state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Shoemaker v. Smith, 74 Ind. 71.

In a foreclosure action the owner of the equity of redemption must take the initiative if he wishes to question the validity of a junior mortgage, or to oppose any step taken by a junior mortgagee in his controversy with the plaintiff to compel him to so sell the mortgaged premises that a substantial surplus will be realized. Dobbs v. Neibuhr, 19 N. Y. St. Rep. 909.

A defendant who has not been served with summons, and who cannot be subjected to the jurisdiction of the court by attachment, cannot be required to litigate a question with a co-defendant by the latter serving upon him a copy of his answer. Joy v. White, 22 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 304; Scott v. Wilson, 2 Bush (Ky.) 603.

They are likewise entitled to notice of trial of the issues thus raised. Edwards v. Woodruff, 90 N. Y. 396.

The provisions of the New York Code to this effect confer no new power upon the court, but are simply a regulation of practice. Albany City Sav. Inst. v. Burdick, 87 N. Y. 40.

An answer by one of several defendants in a foreclosure action, which simply asks that the plaintiff's lien be declared subsequent to his, need not be served on the other defendant. Bulmore v. Seward, 15 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 283.

Disposition of Issues.—In making up the issues and in the trial of questions of fact, the court is governed by the same principles of law and rules of practice in reference to a cross-complaint as in regard to a complaint. Ewing v. Patterson, 35 Ind. 326; Tippecanoe Co. v. La Fayette, etc., R. Co., 50 Ind. 85.

Under statutes conferring power upon the courts to determine the rights of the parties on each side of a cause as between themselves, not prescribing the mode of procedure, the rules of practice in the courts of chancery modified by the spirit of the statutes must be resorted to. Fletcher v. Holmes, 25 Ind. 458.

A failure to answer a cross-petition cannot be taken advantage of on appeal when the party filing it, instead of asking for a default, proceeds with the trial as though in fact the pleading had cannot otherwise be done.¹ While, as a general principle, courts of equity follow the rules of law in enforcing set-offs,² they exercise an original jurisdiction over the subject, and, in cases of been answered. Hervey v. Savory, 48 Iowa 313.

Equitable offsets are now undoubtedly embraced in the definition of a counterclaim. Acer v. Hotchkiss, 97 N. Y. 395.

Unliquidated Demands.—Where a demand is unliquidated, the right of set-off is not absolute, but must depend upon the circumstances of the case. In re Van Allen, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 231; Pignolet v. Geer, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 264; Davis v. Milburn, 3 Iowa 163.

The equitable right of set-off attaches only in cases where the respective liabilities have been fully ascertained, liquidated and fixed. Schieffelin v. Hawkins, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 112; Taylor v. Stowell, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 175; Naglee v. Palmer, 7 Cal. 543. But equity requires that where two claims are connected, although one is unliquidated, set-off should be compelled, when by reason of the insolvency of either debtor, satisfaction cannot be obtained. Taylor v. Stowell, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 175; Littlefield v. Albany Co. Bank, 97 N. Y. 581; Davidson v. Alfaro, 80 N. Y. 660; Gay v. Gay, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 369; Ferreira v. Depew, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. And where no other special equities intervene, the court will allow the complainant to have the damages ascertained, and when so done will order the same to be set off against the judgment which a non-resident and insolvent defendant has against him. *Davis v. Where there are cross-demands between two parties of such a nature that if both were recoverable at law, they would be subjects of legal set-off, then if either of the demands is matter of equitable jurisdiction only, the set-off may be enforced in equity. Gay v. Gay, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 369; Naglee v. Palmer, 7 Cal. 543.

Equity does not allow a set-off or a stoppage, unless there is a recognized rule of law, or an equitable reason requiring it. It does not interfere to declare either a set-off or a stoppage, unless there is one debt contracted on the faith of another, or an agreement between the parties that one should be discounted from the other; or there is a rule of law on which to base its action, or some intervening equity that renders the interposition of the court necessary for the protection of the demand. Munger v. Albany City Nat. Bank, 85 N. Y. 589.

Courts of equity following the law will not allow a set-off of a joint debt against a separate debt, or of a separate debt against a joint debt, nor will such courts allow a set-off of debts accruing in different rights, except under various special circumstances, and where the proofs are clear and the equity very strong. Scammond v. Kimball, 92 U. S. 362, citing 2 Story's Eq. Jur. (6th ed.), § 1437. And see In re Van Allen, 37 Barb. (N. Y.)

peculiar equity and under special circumstances, will enforce a counterclaim, though not within the letter of the statute.¹

The insolvency of one of the parties, rendering the other unable to obtain satisfaction upon a direct proceeding for the recovery of his debt, frequently gives rise to the right of set-off, and furnishes a decisive reason for the interposition of a court of equity.²

The mere fact that a set-off would be in conformity with the principles of natural equity and justice is not sufficient in itself to bring it within the jurisdiction of a court of equity. Davis v. Milburn, 3 Iowa 163.

The allowance as an equitable offset to reduce the demand in suit of an item which cannot be allowed as a legal offset or counterclaim is only proper where the equity invoked is entirely clear and certain, and where other remedies are impossible, and where the demand allowed is put beyond reasonable doubt. Armstrong v. McKelvey, 104 N. Y. 179.

Where a debtor has a set-off equally applicable to two demands against him, it is not for him to elect which of the demands he will satisfy; but the court will direct the application according to the equities between the parties. *Tallmadge v. The equity which will justify the interference of the court in case of insolvency, is of greater force when the party opposing it is already in court seeking relief. Goodwin v. Keney, 49 Conn. 563, citing Pond v. Smith, 4 Conn. 297; Bowen v. Bowen, 20 Conn. 127; Rowan v. Sharp's Rifle Mfg. Co., 20 Conn. 282; Lindsay v. Jackson, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 581; *Foot v. In Russell v. Conway, 11 Cal. 93, in which the claim against the party praying for a set-off was not a personal claim, but a judgment in rem against property belonging to him, while his claim against the other party was on a judgment, it was held that his insolvency was a sufficient ground for the assumption of equitable jurisdiction.

An allegation that the debtor has parted with some of his property, and threatens to put the rest of it out of his hands, so as to deprive the creditor of the power of collecting anything, is not equivalent to a charge of insolvency, and is not sufficient to authorize the setting up of an unliquidated claim as a set-off, in a case in which a set-off would not be allowed at law. Jennings

Thus, a demand against an insolvent may be set off against a claim in his favor, even though the claim in favor of the insolvent be not yet due and payable,¹ and the fact that the demand in favor of the insolvent is not due at the time of his assignment does not affect the right of set-off.² And though one of the parties seeking the set-off be a surety for the other, equity will adjudge it in favor of both against a demand collectible of both.³

But where the cross-demand against the insolvent is not due, no set-off can be allowed against him, as he is entitled to the full period of credit,⁴ and if before the demand of the party claiming the set-off against the insolvent becomes mature, the opposite

Setting up a demand not yet due is a waiver by the debtor of any defense upon the ground that the debt is not mature, and such a waiver of the right to demand the full time in which to pay a debt can lawfully and properly be made by the debtor. *Rothschild v. Assignment of Mutual Debt.—Even where there are mutual debts which may be set off in equity, the right of set-off is extinguished by a bona fide assignment of one of the debts. Davis v. Milburn, 3 Iowa 163; Howe v. Shepard, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 411. But courts of equity will set off mutual judgments when one of them has been assigned fraudulently by the party in whose favor it was rendered for the purpose of preventing such a set-off. Hurst v. Sheets, 14 Iowa 322.

In Hiner v. Newton, 30 Wis. 640, it was suggested that in an action by a payee against an accommodation indorser of a note, if the answer should allege that the maker is insolvent, and that it is necessary for the protection of the defendant to have the benefit of a counterclaim for damages arising out of the defective construction of machinery, for which the note in suit was given, the court might order the maker to be brought in for the purposes of adjudicating such counterclaim.

There are instances in which equity will undoubtedly relieve the surety, when the principal debtor is insolvent and holds valid claims against the plaintiff which he might assert, but such equitable relief would not be in the form of a counterclaim. It would be defensive merely, and would not include any recovery against the plaintiff by the surety. Pomeroy on Rem. (2d ed.) 789, § 750. And see Coffin v. McLean, 80 N. Y. 560.

In Chance v. Isaacs, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 592, it was held that, although a demand against the insolvent was not due at the time of the assignment, yet as it would become due long before the creditor's notes were payable, an equitable right of set-off would have then existed, which it would have been unconscientious on the part of the insolvent to deprive him of by assigning his notes to other creditors.

A pleading setting up a counterclaim, and filed as the answer and cross-petition of the defendants, although signed and verified by a person not a party to the suit, must be regarded as such and cannot be treated as a mere answer. Lyle v. Poynter, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 358.

A defendant is not required to denominate his answer a counterclaim, when the facts as presented constitute a cause of action against the plaintiff, arising out of the transaction set forth in the petition, "with an appropriate prayer for relief." But it must contain all the requisites of a petition relief;¹ and the better practice, which should be universal, is to use both of these characteristic marks.² Where the pleader himself characterizes his pleading as a defense, he is bound by the choice which he deliberately makes, and cannot afterwards claim that it is a counterclaim;³ and if he fails to claim damages, or other affirmative relief, he cannot recover either by way of counterclaim, recoupment, or set-off,⁴ and where an answer does not in form set up a counterclaim, but contains allegations sufficient to constitute either founded on the same cause of action. Hutchings v. Moore, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 110.

2. Pomeroy on Rem. (2d ed.) 787, § 748.

A counterclaim cannot be pleaded by a mere allegation, following a general denial, that defendant "also sets up a counterclaim against the plaintiff for the sum of," etc. Fox v. Turner (Supreme Ct.), 2 N. Y. Supp. 164.

3. Acer v. Hotchkiss, 97 N. Y. 395; Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Cuyler, 75 N. Y. 511; Bates v. Rosekrans, 37 N. Y. 409; 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 476; Wright v. Delafield, 25 N. Y. 266; Burke v. Thorne, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 363; Simmons v. Kayser, 43 N. Y. Supr. Ct. 131; Beers v. Waterbury, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 396; Pinckney v. Keyler, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 469; Ferreira v. Depew, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 131; Clough v. Murray, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 97; Carpenter v. Hewel, 67 Cal. 589; Brannan v. Paty, 58 Cal. 330; McAbee v. Randall, 41 Cal. 136; Humbert v. Brisbane, 25 S. Car. 506; Stowell v. Eldred, 39 Wis. 614; Kenyon v. Kenyon, 72 Wis. 234; Resch v. Senn, 31 Wis. 138. But see Fuller v. Curtis, 100 Ind. 237; 50 Am. Rep. 786; Clarine v. Nelson, 15 Neb. 440.

An answer setting forth a demand in favor of the defendant, and averring an intention to recoup the amount of such demand against any liability that might be established against him, is not a counterclaim, and requires no reply. Cockerill v. Loonam, 36 Hun (N. Y.) 353, n.; Van DeSande v. Hall, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 458. But see Wilder v. Boynton, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 547; and the same rule applies to an answer setting up a demand, and asking that the amount thereof may be set off against any sum that may be allowed to the plaintiff. American Dock, etc., Co. v. Staley, 40 N. Y. Super. Ct. 539.

An allegation of damages sustained by defendant, "which he demands to recover from the plaintiff to the destruction of plaintiff's claim in the action," and to recover the balance, is insufficient to charge plaintiff with notice that a counterclaim is intended. Morris v. Chamberlin (Supreme Ct.), 14 N. Y. Supp. 702.

The breach of a parol agreement collateral to the one sued on, however, is available, although not in terms set up as a counterclaim where the facts were alleged and no objection to the proof offered was made, upon the ground that the pleading was defective. Van Burt v. Day, 81 N. Y. 251.

4. Shute v. Hamilton, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 476; Read v. Nicholas, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 646, affirmed 67 N. Y. 182; Garvey v. Jarvis, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 179, affirmed in 46 N. Y. 310; Wright v. Delafield, 25 N. Y. 266; Brannan v. Paty, 58 Cal. 330; Boyle v. Wilcox, 59 Iowa 466; and see Dewey v. Hoag, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 365; Cochran v. Webb, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 653.

A defendant is as much concluded by the amount of damages he claims in his counterclaim, as a plaintiff would be by the damages claimed in his complaint. Annis v. Upton, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 370; and see Babbett v. Young, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 466.

In Davis v. Davis, 9 Mont. 267, it was held that though the prayer of defendant's answer is that he be dis-

a defense or a counterclaim, it should be construed as a defense alone.¹ Nor can a defendant afterwards call that a defense which he has deliberately designated as a counterclaim.² Where an answer sets out facts sufficient to constitute a counterclaim, however, and demands a positive judgment thereon, and it is treated by the parties as a counterclaim, the omission to designate it as such is supplied;³ and it has been held that it is the facts set up in a pleading which makes it a defense or a counterclaim, whatever the parties may have called it, and that its character will be determined therefrom by the court.⁴

Where a cause of action upon contract is set up in an action upon an independent contract, the fact that the demand constituting the counterclaim was due and owing from the plaintiff to the charged, relief may be given thereon as a counterclaim. And in Wilson v. Fairchild, 45 Minn. 203, it was held that when matter is pleaded in an answer as a counterclaim, the defendant must have such relief, though not specifically demanded, as the facts proved within its allegations show him entitled to.

In equity under a prayer for general relief, any relief consistent with the allegations of the pleading may be granted. Pond v. Waterloo Agricultural Works, 50 Iowa 596. And see Acer v. Hotchkiss, 97 N. Y. 395.

Thorne*, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 363; Bates v. Rosekrans, 37 N. Y. 409; 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 98; Burrall v. De Groot, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 379; Green v. Waite, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 191; Beers v. Waterbury, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 396; Ward v. Comegys, 2 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 428.

An answer so inartificially drawn that it cannot be determined whether it is intended as a plea of set-off or whether the matters alleged are merely intended to add weight to the prayer with which the plea concludes, is demurrable. Sample v. Griffith, 5 Iowa 376.

2. Tuckerman v. Corbin, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 404; Ferreira v. Depew, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 131; McAbee v. Randall, 41 Cal. 136; Wilson v. Carpenter, 62 Ind. 495; Miller v. Roberts, 106 Ind. 63; Campbell v. Routt, 42 Ind. 410. But see Lash v. McCormick, 17 Minn. 403.

In Washburn v. Dosch, 68 Wis. 436;

60 Am. Rep. 873, it was held that the objection that matter pleaded as a counterclaim is not a proper subject of counterclaim, will not lie if it constitutes a defense to the action, and if, after an affirmative verdict in favor of defendant, the court strikes out the excess in defendant's favor, and gives judgment of dismissal and for costs only.

In Lawrence v. Vilas, 20 Wis. 381, it was held that matters pleaded as a counterclaim may be sustained as a set-off, if proven at the trial, and the demand of the answer for judgment as upon a counterclaim may be rejected, or it may be corrected by amendment.

3. Selleck v. Griswold, 49 Wis. 39; Voechting v. Grau, 55 Wis. 312; and see Born v. Schrenkeisen, 110 N. Y. 55.

The omission to designate a counterclaim as such will not sustain the trial court in excluding evidence under it where it is objected to solely on other grounds. Van Brunt v. Day, 81 N. Y. 251.

In Iowa, while no affirmative relief can be afforded a defendant, unless it is claimed in his cross-petition, where such relief has been granted in the court below without objection, the decree will not be reversed upon appeal for that reason. Kellogg v. Aherin, 48 Iowa 299.

Church*, 14 Ohio St. 31; Wilder v. Boynton, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 547. So held where the demand was to recoup the defendant's damages against the plaintiff's claim in Wilder v. Boynton, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 547.

defendant, at the time of the commencement of the action, must be pleaded.¹ And unless both causes of action arise upon contract, it must be averred that the demand constituting the counterclaim arose out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or is connected with the subject of the action;² the facts connecting the transaction stated in the complaint with the supposed cause of action stated in the answer, as distinguished from a mere assertion of the connection, being required to be pleaded.³

A counterclaim setting up a cause of action held by assignment must show that the assignment was made before the commencement of the action;⁴ and when a demand against an assignor is interposed in an action brought by the assignee, the counterclaim must show that the claim which the defendant seeks to set off belonged to him before he had notice of the assignment to the plaintiff of the demand on which the action is brought.⁵

In actions brought by or against persons in a representative capacity, a counterclaim must show that the demand set up in

If an answer presents matter of defense only, it cannot be treated as a set-off or counterclaim, even though it be so called by the defendant. True v. Triplett, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 57.

A counterclaim is bad on demurrer, where on its face it appears that it arose after the commencement of the action. Russell v. Davis, 104 N. Car. 237.

The breach of an agreement not to sue cannot be set up as a counterclaim in an action brought in violation thereof, the cause of action for such breach not existing in favor of the defendant until the suit is actually brought. Newkirk v. Neild, 19 Ind. 194; 81 Am. Dec. 383.

The fact that a plaintiff has sold the leased premises since the commencement of the action, is not a valid reply to a counterclaim for a breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment, and to repair, in an action for rent. Orton v. Noonan, 30 Wis. 611.

Where it appears, from the facts alleged in an answer, that it contains a statement of new matter arising out of or connected with the cause of action, which might be the subject of an action in favor of the defendant, it need not be directly averred, to constitute a counterclaim. Gilpin v. Wilson, 53 Ind. 443.

As the right of set-off or counterclaim as against an assignee is wholly statutory, the allegations in support of it must in express terms bring it within the statute. Willover v. First Nat. Bank, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 184.

opposition to the claim set forth in the complaint is due to or from such persons in the same capacity;¹ and it must appear that a demand sought to be set off in an action brought by the personal representatives of a deceased person, as such, had become due and payable, or recoverable from the decedent in his lifetime.²

A defendant may interpose as many defenses or counterclaims as he may have,³ and the objection of inconsistency between them is not available;⁴ but each answer must of itself be a complete answer to the whole complaint as perfectly as if it stood alone.⁵ Each must be tested as a pleading by its own matter, unless in terms it adopts or refers to matters contained in some

A defendant may in his answer allege matters that will be a defense or counterclaim to any cause of action which the plaintiff may prove and recover for within the allegations, although such cause of action may not be of the precise character indicated by all those allegations, and although such matter might not be a defense or counterclaim if all such allegations should be proved. Smalley v. Isaacson, 40 Minn. 450.

Although matter set up in an answer may be a complete defense to the cause of action alleged in the complaint, it may also be pleaded as a counterclaim, if it constitutes a cause of action in favor of defendant against the plaintiff, and is a proper subject of counterclaim. Griffin v. Jorgenson, 22 Minn. 92.

Joinder.—Causes of action which cannot be joined in a complaint, cannot be joined in a counterclaim. Woodruff v. Garner, 27 Ind. 4; 89 Am. Dec. 477.

Claims legal or equitable, or for liquidated or for unliquidated damages on contract, may all be set up in the same answer. Akerly v. Vilas, 21 Wis. 88.

The court has no power to require a defendant to elect upon which of several defenses he will rely, when more than one is set up, and the evidence given tends to prove each of them, unless they are so far inconsistent that both cannot exist in the same transaction. Kelly v. Bernheimer, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 140.

A denial of the contract sued upon, and a counterclaim for fraud inducing it, or for a breach of a covenant thereof by the plaintiff, however, cannot be united in the same action. Marx v. Gross, 58 N. Y. Super. Ct. 221; Lewis v. Acker, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 163; Fellerman v. Dolan, 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 395, note.

Y.) 229; Spencer v. Babcock, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 326; Kneidler v. Sternbergh, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 67; Xenia Bank v. Lee, 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 372; Rucker v. Steelman, 73 Ind. 396; Conaway v. Carpenter, 58 Ind. 477.

A counterclaim, in order to be pleadable, however, need not entitle the defendant to an amount of damages equal to the amount of the plaintiff's claim. Allen v. Haskins, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 332.

A counterclaim in an answer, embraced in five different specifications, numbered as five separate defenses, neither of which is alone a defense, is other answer;¹ and a single pleading cannot be made to perform the double office of a defense and counterclaim.²

8. Taking Issue on a Counterclaim—(See also DEMURRER, vol. 5, p. 549; REPLY).—The sufficiency and validity of a counterclaim is a question which should be determined either by demurrer or by motion at the trial,³ and a failure to demur to a counter-not properly stated. Spencer v. Babcock, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 326.

In an action for partition, a counterclaim setting up title in the defendant to the whole of the land sought to be divided, is a sufficient answer. Schafer v. Schafer, 68 Ind. 374.

Where new matter is set forth in an answer, and it is not expressly stated to be a partial defense, it must be assumed that it is pleaded as a complete defense, and if demurred, it must be tested as such. Thomas v. Halbert, 109 N. Y. 329. And see Thompson v. Toohey, 71 Ind. 296; Schafer v. Schafer, 68 Ind. 374; McClintic v. Cory, 22 Ind. 170; Blew v. Hoover, 30 Ind. 450.

A bill of particulars affixed to the pleadings as a part of it does not aid a defective counterclaim. Smith v. McGregor, 96 N. Car. 401.

In a suit for coal sold and delivered at an agreed price, where a counterclaim is made for a breach of a contract to furnish coal during the season, a failure to plead the price at which it was to be furnished cannot be supplied by reference to the complaint, though the answer alleges that the counterclaim arose out of the transaction set forth in it. Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Hutchins, 31 Neb. 572.

Where a written contract is set out in a complaint and is the foundation of the action, the defendant, in setting up a counterclaim against the plaintiff upon the same contract, and seeking a judgment thereon in his own favor, must set out in his own pleading, the original or a copy of the contract. Campbell v. Routt, 42 Ind. 410.

Where a counterclaim is composed of several demands, however, each demand need not be set up separately, the whole constituting one counterclaim. Ranney v. Smith, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 420.

A pleading on the part of a defendant not showing what portions of it are intended as a legal defense, and what portions are intended as a cross-complaint, is bad on demurrer for ambiguity. O'Connor v. Frasher, 53 Cal. 435.

3. Walter v. Fowler, 85 N. Y. 621; Fettretch v. McKay, 47 N. Y. 427; Collins v. Suau, 7 Robt. (N. Y.) 94; Westervelt v. Ackley, 62 N. Y. 505; Grange v. Gilbert, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 9; Walker v. Johnson, 28 Minn. 147; Lace v. Fixen, 39 Minn. 46.

A counterclaim is not a defense and cannot therefore be stricken out, as sham or irrelevant on motion. Collins v. Suau, 7 Robt. (N. Y.) 94; affirmed, 7 Robt. (N. Y.) 508; Fettretch v. McKay, 47 N. Y. 426; Briggs v. Bergen, 23 N. Y. 162; Thompson v. Erie R. Co., 45 N. Y. 468.

Proof of a counterclaim cannot be rejected because it is not stated with sufficient definiteness and certainty. The remedy in such a case is a motion to make it more definite and certain. Currie v. Cowles, 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 452.

The legal rights of the parties are not affected by the fact that an answer containing a counterclaim is interposed merely for delay; such fact being determinable only by trial. Town v. Bringolf, 47 Iowa 133.

In Iowa a counterclaim which does not arise out of the contract or transaction claim, not properly admissible as such, is a waiver of any right to object to the admission of evidence to sustain it, and an agreement to try the merits of the demand.¹ But it is no waiver of the objection that the counterclaim is not one which can be set up in the action,² or one of which the court had no jurisdiction.³

A plaintiff may demur to one or more of the defenses or counterclaims set up in an answer, and reply to the residue of the counterclaims;⁴ and he may demur to one part and reply to another part at the same time.⁵ The particular objection sought to be raised must be specified in the demurrer or it will be disregarded.⁶ Where the demurrer is not only to the answer as a counterclaim but as a defense also, it reaches back in its effect set forth in the petition and is not connected with the subject of the action, and does not contain new matter constituting a cause of action in favor of all the defendants against all the plaintiffs, may be stricken from the files. Exline v. Lowrey, 46 Iowa 556.

In Indiana where a set-off is pleaded to a complaint for a tort, an objection to the admission of evidence in support of the set-off, and a motion to strike it out upon the ground that it is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and supports no proper issue in the cause, should be sustained. Boil v. Simms, 60 Ind. 162.

Where one of two grantors of land sues on a bond given for the purchase money, as sole owner, non-joinder of the other grantor in a counterclaim by defendant for breach of covenant, must be excepted to by reply or demurrer. Akerly v. Vilas, 21 Wis. 88.

In Minnesota, although the defendant cannot, in an action on contract, set up as a counterclaim an independent cause of action arising in tort; yet, when such counterclaim is litigated by consent of parties upon the merits, it becomes an issue in the action, and it is the duty of the court to make its finding thereon. Warner v. Foote, 40 Minn. 176.

The objection that the answer does not state facts sufficient to constitute a counterclaim may be raised at the trial. Burroughs v. Garrison, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 144.

Where a defendant prays for no affirmative relief on his counterclaim, the objection that the counterclaim has no connection with the cause of action sued on may be taken by general demurrer to the counterclaim, on the ground of insufficiency, as provided for in Code Civil Pro. New York, § 494. *Otis v. A counterclaim alleging facts which constitute a valid set-off, but not a cause of action against plaintiff, is not demurrable, although it demands an affirmative judgment. Schumacher v. Seeger, 65 Wis. 394.

5. Latimer v. Sullivan, 30 S. Car. 111; Latimer v. Mahaffey, 30 S. Car. 612.

An improper demand for relief is not a ground of demurrer. State v. Smith, 14 Wis. 564.

Defenses and counterclaims set up in the joint answer of joint defendants, which are not available to all of them, are demurrable. Tailor v. Spaulding, 12 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 123.

through the whole record, and attaches to any substantial defect in the pleadings;¹ but where the demurrer is merely to the counterclaim which forms no part of a defense set up in the answer, the complaint cannot be attacked;² though a demurrer to an answer to a complaint which clearly contains no cause of action,³ or a cause of action of which the court has no jurisdiction,⁴ cannot be sustained.

Where the facts set up in the answer as a counterclaim are not demurred to, they must be replied to, or they will be taken as true, and the defendant will be entitled to the relief demanded.⁵ By

That matter which constitutes a defense is pleaded as a counterclaim, is not a ground of demurrer. Wait v. Ferguson, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 379.

The pendency of a prior action for the same cause as that set up as a counterclaim, appearing on the face of the counterclaim is a good ground for demurrer. Ansorge v. Kaiser, 22 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 305.

Upon an argument of a demurrer to a counterclaim, the defendant may attack the complaint, but the grounds of the attack to render it successful must be such as would have entitled the defendant to judgment, had he elected to demur instead of answering. Fry v. Bennett, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 54.

2. Graham v. Dunnigan, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 629; and see Peck v. Brown, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 119.

When a defendant to whose pleading a demurrer has been interposed has pleaded a plea such as the general issue going to the whole declaration or to a part of it, he cannot be allowed to go back to the declaration upon a demurrer to another plea, upon the principle that he cannot demur and plead to the same count. Morey v. Ford, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 446; Wheeler v. Curtis, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 654.

On demurrer to a counterclaim, the allegations of the complaint not inconsistent with those of the counterclaim, are to be taken as admitted. Graham v. Dunnigan, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 629.

However defective a counterclaim or a defense may be, it is not subject to demurrer while the pleading which it assumes to answer is too radically insufficient to call for any defense whatever. Allen v. Malcolm, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 335.

A demurrer to a counterclaim interposed generally in an action, cannot be supported as a demurrer to a complaint, however, if any one of several counts in the complaint is good. Noonan v. Orton, 30 Wis. 356.

4. See People v. Banker, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 258.

Where the defendant claims upon demurrer to the answer that the complaint is defective, he must be held to have waived all objections not taken by answer or demurrer, except the question of jurisdiction and the sufficiency of the cause of action. People v. Banker, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 258.

failure to support a counterclaim by proof, however, the defendant loses the benefit of an admission by failure to reply,¹ and the objection that the facts set up as a counterclaim do not constitute a cause of action,² or that the cause of action thus set up is one of which the court has no jurisdiction,³ is not waived by a failure to reply. By replying, a defendant waives all objections to the form of the pleading, or to the introduction of evidence to support the counterclaim.⁴

Union Nat. Bank v. Carr, 49 Iowa 359; Latimer v. Sullivan, 30 S. Car. 111; Hubbell v. Courtney, 5 S. Car. 89; Resch v. Senn, 31 Wis. 138. And see Geenia v. Keah, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 245.

The effect of an admission by failure to reply to a counterclaim, is that the amount so counterclaimed may be deducted from the plaintiff's claim, but by such failure the defendant does not concede that the plaintiff is entitled to a recovery of the entire sum demanded in his counterclaim, irrespective of the demand made by the defendant. Kelsy v. Tremaine, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 439.

The omission of the plaintiff to reply to such parts of the answer as sets up payments, is not to be considered an admission that such payments were made. Scott v. Stockwell, 65 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 249; Holzbauer v. Heinel, 37 Mo. 443; Union Nat. Bank v. Carr, 49 Iowa 359. And the omission to reply thereto does not admit that the defendant is entitled to the damages he alleges. McKensie v. Farrell, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 192.

It is too late for a defendant to claim for the first time on appeal that his answer contains a counterclaim which is admitted by not being replied to. It should be insisted upon, and the attention of the court called to it on the trial, and if not allowed, an exception should be taken. Muldoon v. Blackwell, 84 N. Y. 646. And see Westervelt v. Ackley, 62 N. Y. 505.

Where a defendant files a counterclaim, to which no reply is filed, and he fails to move for judgment thereon, he cannot object, on appeal, to the non-allowance thereof. Winters v. Fain, 47 Ark. 493.

A set-off relied on in an answer, which is made a cross-petition against other parties who are not in court, cannot be taken as confessed on the plaintiff's failure to reply thereto. And the plaintiff need not reply to the set-off until the defendants in the cross-action are brought before the court, or the cross-action is discontinued as to them. Scott v. Wilson, 2 Bush (Ky.) 603.

Burden of Proof.—The burden is on the defendant to prove his counterclaim. Prentiss v. Sprague, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 428; Belshaw v. Colie, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 213.

2. Schurmeier v. English (Minn. 1891), 48 N. W. Rep. 1112; McCulloch v. Vibbard, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 227; Carpenter v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co., 22 Hun (N. Y.) 49; Akerly v. Vilas, 21 Wis. 88.

Where the action is such that no counterclaim is allowable, a reply is no waiver of objection to one set up therein. Smith v. Hall, 67 N. Y. 48. But see Hammond v. Terry, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 186; Ayres v. O'Farrell, 10 Bosw. (N. Y.) 143.

A defendant waives the advantage derived from the failure of the plaintiff to reply, if he goes into proof of the counterclaim, and by such proof shows that it could not properly have been set off against the plaintiff's demand. Randolph v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 53 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 68.

In effect, a reply is an answer to the cause of action set up by way of counterclaim, and should be pleaded in substantially the same manner as an answer to a cause of action set up in a complaint.¹ It must be distinct and specific, so that it can be clearly seen what is intended to be controverted,² and it may contain a general or specific denial of each material allegation of the counterclaim controverted by the plaintiff;³ or it may set forth in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, new matter not inconsistent with the complaint constituting a defense to the counterclaim,⁴ or

An objection to a defense pleaded as a counterclaim, but not connected with the note sued on, is waived by replication and issue joined. Boyd v. Day, 3 Bush (Ky.) 617.

By replying to a counterclaim, however, the plaintiff does not waive the objection that a counterclaim is not available in the action. Smith v. Hall, 67 N. Y. 48.

A reply to the original answer is sufficient as a reply to an amended one, if the latter sets up no issuable facts requiring a reply. Leslie v. Leslie, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 311.

Statute of Limitations.—To render the Statute of Limitations available as a bar to a counterclaim, it must be pleaded by way of reply. Williams v. Willis, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 11; Clinton v. Eddy, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 61; Von Sachs v. Kretz, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 95, affirmed in 72 N. Y. 548. And see Heath v. Heath, 31 Wis. 223.

A plaintiff should not be allowed to come in after judgment, not as a right but as a favor, and plead the Statute of Limitations in bar of a counterclaim set up by the defendant in his answer. Clinton v. Eddy, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 55.

In an action brought by an assignee, however, in which a set-off against the plaintiff's assignor is set forth, the plaintiff may raise the objection that the set-off averred in the answer is barred by the Statute of Limitations without pleading it by way of reply. Thompson v. Sickles, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 49.

If a reply contain irrelevant matter the remedy is by motion and not by demurrer. Ludington v. Slauson, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 81.

A reply denying all those allegations, which are contained within certain specified folios is good as general denial. Gassett v. Crocker, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 39.

A reply to a set-off, simply denying the correctness of each and every item of defendant's answer and counterclaim, is insufficient, it being too vague and uncertain. Whitaker v. Sandifer, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 261. And see McKinsel v. Farrell, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 192.

A denial in a reply, upon information and belief of allegations in the counterclaim, is insufficient where the facts set up are clearly within the plaintiff's knowledge as appears by the complaint. Fallon v. Durant, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 178.

Another Action Pending.—A defendant cannot plead the same counterclaim to several independent actions brought by the same plaintiff; and after the demand has been used as a counterclaim in the one action, the plaintiff may, by way of reply in the other actions, plead in abatement, the fact that such counterclaim has been pleaded in the first action. Tuckerman v. Corbin, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 404.

both.¹ But a counterclaim to a counterclaim set up by the defendant cannot be pleaded in reply.² New matter which does

The defendant, in an action by a vendor for the purchase money of land, having set up a counterclaim for damages for breach of the plaintiff's covenants, the plaintiff, without having pleaded the facts, may show that the defendant, after his purchase, conveyed the land to another, and that the defendant and his grantee had gone into possession. Noonan v. Ilsley, 22 Wis. 27.

Iowa Code, § 2666, requiring a reply to be consistent with the petition, does not apply to an amendment to a petition, after a petition for intervention has been filed, which is in effect an answer to the latter setting out a counterclaim. Jack v. Des Moines, etc., R. Co., 49 Iowa 627.

A new assignment in an action by way of reply, setting forth more particularly the cause of action relied upon in the complaint, is neither necessary nor allowable. Stewart v. Wallis, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 344; Shull v. Green, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 311.

A reply which contains no facts not already stated in the complaint and answer, is demurrable. Croome v. Craig, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 350.

1. Cohn v. Husson, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 150.

A reply denying the allegations of a counterclaim, does not, by also setting up new matter in avoidance of it, admit them. Del Valle v. Navarro, 21 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 136.

Where the answer admits the contract in suit, but alleges that it contains other provisions which have not been complied with by the plaintiff claiming damages for the non-compliance, and the plaintiff interposes a general denial by way of reply, he may prove without any change in the pleadings that the contract was altered by the defendant after its execution, by the insertion of the clauses referred to. Wirges v. Baeuerle, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 134.

There being a general denial to a counterclaim for money paid for plaintiff, however, it is not reversible error to sustain a demurrer to a special reply that the money expended by defendant belonged to plaintiff. Mason v. Mason, 102 Ind. 38.

Demurrer to Reply.—In Thomas v. Loaners' Bank, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct.

466, it was held that a counterclaim, not being a defense, a reply to it cannot be demurred to, although it may contain new matter, the demurrer being expressly confined to replies to defenses. See also White v. Joy, 13 N. Y. 89. But by the New York Code, § 493, a demurrer to a reply is now made admissible.

Car. 289; Boyet v. Vaughan, 85 N. Car. 363. But see to the contrary, Miller v. Losce, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 356.

The contrary rule is adopted in Indiana. See Starke v. Dicks (Ind. App. 1891), 28 N. E. Rep. 214; Reilly v. Rucker, 16 Ind. 303; Turner v. Simpson, 12 Ind. 413.

In Missouri where contracts by the common law, joint only, are construed to be joint and several, where one of several defendants is permitted to offset the demand of the plaintiff by a debt due to himself separately, the plaintiff may by way of reply to such offset, set up a debt in addition to the one sued on, due from this separate defendant to himself. But the individual claim of the plaintiff is not to be permitted to extinguish any part of such separate defendant's offset intended to be or proper to be applied upon the debt, which formed the basis of plaintiff's demand. Mortland v. Holton, 44 Mo. 58.

Where a reply improperly contains counterclaims, the remedy is by motion to strike them out, and not by demurrer. Demurrer is only authorized against new matter not pleaded as a counterclaim. Hatfield v. Todd, 13 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 265.

Where a counterclaim is pleaded to a counterclaim without objection, the court will not strike it out when the action has been pending for a long time, but will consider it as an amendment to the complaint. Scott v. Bryan, 96 N. Car. 289.

Where it is doubtful whether the answer contains a counterclaim or not, a reply should be served. Teets v. Throckmorton, 8 N. Y. St. Rep. 897.

In Freund v. Paten, 10 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 311, it was held that in an action on contract, where the defendant sets up a discharge in bankruptcy, the plaintiff may reply alleging that the debt was fraudulently contracted, though fraud may be proved without a reply for the purpose of avoidance.

Not only is a reply unnecessary where the new matter set up in the answer does not constitute a counterclaim, but no reply will be allowed. Devlin v. Bevins, 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 290. In an action by a patentee against a licensee for royalties, a counterclaim charging false representations and tricks and devices, without particularizing them, requires no reply. Smith v. Standard Laundry Machinery Co., 11 Daly (N. Y.) 154.

In an action to recover possession of a chattel, an answer which merely sets up a lien upon the chattel, under which the defendant claims to hold it, demanding judgment for its return with damages for taking and retention, does not set up a counterclaim, and no reply is required. DeLeyer v. Michaels, 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 203.

An answer in an action upon a promissory note alleging a set-off against the plaintiff's assignor, does not contain a counterclaim requiring a reply manner as if it arose in an action brought by the defendant against the plaintiff for the cause of action stated in the counterclaim and demanding the same judgment.¹ Where issues are raised in the counterclaim which are triable in a different court, or by a different tribunal from those raised in the complaint, the issues of each may be tried in the appropriate court.²

The right of the plaintiff to a trial by a jury of a legal cause of action is not taken away by the interposition of an equitable counterclaim,³ but where a counterclaim for legal relief, asking an affirmative judgment for money, is interposed in an equitable presumed that the ruling was against the allowance in any view of the evidence; and if in one view of the evidence it was allowable, such ruling is error. International Bank v. Monteath, 39 N. Y. 297.

Where a demurrer to several defenses is good as to one defense and bad as to another, it should be sustained as to the one and overruled as to the other, and costs should not be allowed to either party. Hollingshead v. Woodward, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 410; Grange v. Gilbert, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 9.

Proceedings on demurrer to a counterclaim are not stayed merely because an appeal is pending from an order striking out some other portion of the answer. Noonan v. Orton, 30 Wis. 356.

That a counterclaim is interposed merely for delay, and not in good faith, if there are no other means of determining that the defense is frivolous than by trial, does not affect the legal rights of the parties. Town v. Bringolf, 47 Iowa 133.

When defendants are entitled to recoup, the amount of damages should be found by the jury, and not by the court. Haldeman v. Berry, 74 Mich. 424.

Where an answer which does not controvert any of the material allegations of the complaint is controverted by the reply, the only issue is upon the counterclaim, and the defendant is entitled to open and close the argument to the jury, and this right will not be affected by the fact that another issue is made by the reply. Bonnell v. Jacobs, 36 Wis. 59.

Though failure to reply, where a reply is necessary, does not prevent the party from bringing his cause on for trial, a motion by plaintiff to place the cause on the special circuit calendar should be denied, because the counterclaim being admitted, there is no issue, the only question being as to the amount of damages. Adams v. Roberts, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 253.

In an action on an insurance policy, the orderly conduct of the case requires that the trial at circuit of the issues raised by the plaintiff be stayed until the trial of the issues under a counterclaim for the reformation of the policy has been had at a special equity term. *Colville v. Where an answer sets up more than one defense, and one of them is held bad on demurrer, the plaintiff can have an order that the judgment shall be entered in his favor, unless the defendant shall succeed upon the issues joined, only. Where a counterclaim is proved without contradiction, the court should direct defendant's damages to be as-action, the defendant is not entitled to a trial by jury as of course.¹ If he desires such a trial, he must apply to the court, upon notice, for an order directing all the questions at issue to be stated for trial.² The granting or refusing of such an application is discretionary with the court.³

10. Judgment on Counterclaim.—If both the cause of action set forth in the complaint and that alleged in the counterclaim are established, judgment is only rendered against one or the other of the parties to the extent that the demand against him as established by the judgment of the court exceeds the one in his favor.⁴ If the damages found in favor of the defendant are equal to the demand of the plaintiff, judgment should be rendered for the defendant for the dismissal of the action;⁵ but if the defendant, is found entitled to an amount less than that due to the plaintiff essed, rather than leave it to the jury to pass upon, if so requested. Ayres v. O'Farrell, 4 Robt. (N. Y.) 668.

In an action which involves the examination of a long account, thus authorizing a compulsory reference, the interposition of a counterclaim for legal relief does not prevent a reference or entitle the defendant to demand a jury trial. Brooklyn, etc., R. Co. v. Reid, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 273.

2. Mackellar v. Rogers, 109 N. Y. 468.

The time in which to make the application begins to run after the service of the reply, even though the issues raised by the counterclaim are not to be so tried. Rutley v. Person, 12 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 352.

3. See Du Pont v. Davis, 35 Wis. 630; Mackellar v. Rogers, 109 N. Y. 468; Cook v. Jenkins, 79 N. Y. 575.

New Trial.—In an action of ejectment where the answer set up an equitable counterclaim, which was dismissed upon trial of the issues thereon at an equity term of the court, and subsequently the other issues were tried before a jury, who found a verdict for the plaintiff, it was held that the defendant was not entitled upon payment of the costs to a new trial of the equitable issue on the counterclaim, but only to a second trial of the other issues. Post v. Moran, 10 Daly (N. Y.) 502.

Judgment.—Upon overruling a demurrer to a counterclaim, no judgment should be entered, until all the issues are disposed of. Bucking v. Hauselt, 9

Hun (N. Y.) 633; Oesterriches v. Jones, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 246.

Appeal.—In North Carolina, when a counterclaim is stricken out, the defendant cannot appeal, but must note his exception and bring the point up for review on appeal from the final judgment. Knott v. Burwell, 96 N. Car. 272.

4. Davidson v. Remington, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 310; Kelsy v. Tremaine, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 439; Patterson v. Patterson, 59 N. Y. 574; 17 Am. Rep. 384; Norton v. Foster, 12 Kan. 44; *Gordon v. The one judgment is allowed to cancel the other. Davidson v. Remington, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 310.

Judgment cannot be rendered against a person not a plaintiff, on a counterclaim or cross-petition. Wells v. Boyd, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 366.

Damages.—Where a counterclaim can be maintained, a recovery upon it can be had only for damages which are the natural and proximate consequences of the act complained of. Pacific Express Co. v. Malin, 132 U. S. 531. See also Stoddard v. Treadwell, 26 Cal. 294.

5. Moore v. Caruthers, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 669; Clarkson v. Manson, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 45.

A judgment will not be reversed where the court fails to give nominal damages on a counterclaim, if such omission did not affect the costs or other rights of the defendants. Hill v. Butler, 6 Ohio St. 207.

Where the answer admits plaintiff's credit should be given for the amount due the defendant and judgment rendered to the plaintiff for the remainder.¹ And where the damages of a defendant exceed the amount due to the plaintiff, the defendant has judgment for the excess, or so much thereof as is due from the plaintiff.² If the plaintiff's recovery is wholly defeated, the defendant may recover judgment for the whole, or a part of the amount demanded in his counterclaim;³ and if the defendant should be found to be cause of action, and sets up a counterclaim, which is admitted by a failure to reply, there is no issue to try, and judgment should be ordered on the pleadings. Schurmeier v. English (Minn. 1891), 48 N. W. Rep. 1112.

Production of Securities.—Where a counterclaim is interposed for money lent, for which a note has been given, the defendant cannot recover upon it without producing the note and canceling it upon the trial; a subsequent production of the note after trial, does not aid the defense, or operate to deprive the plaintiff of his right to have the note upon which the counterclaim was founded produced by defendant, and canceled upon the allowance of the counterclaim. Hoag v. Wade, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 114. And see Racine Co. Bank v. Keep, 13 Wis. 209; Clarke v. Frinnell, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 329.

Costs.—Where the amount found due on a counterclaim is less than the plaintiff's claim, and judgment is rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the balance, the defendant is liable for costs of the commencement of the action, and of entering judgment, but the plaintiff should pay all the costs incurred in the determination of the counterclaim. Hall v. Clayton, 42 Iowa 526.

Amount of Offset.—In an action by plaintiff on a contract to construct a canal for defendant, part of which was left unfinished, defendant can set off against the amount due under the contract only the actual cost of completing the canal, and cannot deny plaintiff's claim to the extent of the incomplete portion without showing the cost of completion. Price v. Kearney Canal, etc., Co., 29 Neb. 33.

And when a note is purchased for the purpose of using it as a set-off, only the amount paid can be set off. Nichols v. Martin, 21 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 20.

(Ky.) 669; and see Great Western Ins. Co. v. Pierce, 1 Wyoming Ter. 45.

A defendant who sets up by way of counterclaim to an action brought for purchase money, a cause of action based upon the covenants in a deed is entitled to recover the same damages as he would have recovered if he had brought a separate action on those covenants. Akerly v. Vilas, 21 Wis. 88.

Where the amount claimed by the plaintiff in his petition is admitted, and the only issues in the case arise on the defendant's counterclaim, the jury may, subject to the direction of the court, in assessing damages on the counterclaim, deduct the amount admitted to be due the plaintiff. If they make such deduction, their verdict ought to show it, and if the deduction is not made by the jury, it will be made by the court in rendering the judgment. Brainard v. Lane, 26 Ohio St. 632.

In Kentucky, double the value of property unlawfully taken may be recovered or pleaded in set-off, if such taking comes within the act of 1864, "to provide a civil remedy for injuries done by disloyal persons," so far as guerrillas and others not acting under color of military authority, are concerned. Haddix v. Wilson, 3 Bush (Ky.) 523.

entitled to nothing, the plaintiff may have judgment for his whole claim.¹

Where the answer does not deny the plaintiff's claim, but sets up a counterclaim for a less amount, judgment may be rendered for the amount so admitted to be due, and the action may be continued as to the counterclaim or amount in dispute.² When a counterclaim consisting of a demand against an assignor exceeds the demand sued upon, judgment can be rendered against the assignee to the extent of the extinguishment of his demand only;³ and a counterclaim against a trustee consisting of a demand against the person whom he represents can be allowed only

A separate judgment in favor of one of several defendants may be rendered on a counterclaim, showing a separate cause of action in favor of such defendant. Plyer v. Parker, 10 S. Car. 464.

Where, pending trial, the plaintiff, who alone began the suit, amends his pleadings so as to admit a co-plaintiff, seeking a recovery in favor of both, if the verdict be against them, the recovery on the defendant's counterclaim will go against both the plaintiffs. Mack v. Sloteman, 21 Fed. Rep. 109.

Form of Verdict.—A verdict signed by the foreman: "We, the jury, find a verdict for H. A. Pierce for the sum of one thousand one hundred and fifty-eight dollars and five cents," is insufficient, although a defendant named H. A. Pierce had answered setting forth a counterclaim. Great Western Ins. Co. v. Pierce, 1 Wyoming Ter. 45.

Costs.—Where the plaintiff fails to recover, and the defendant recovers judgment on his counterclaim, the defendant is the prevailing party upon the issues raised, and is entitled to costs. Lapham v. Osborne, 20 Nev. 168.

1. Moore v. Caruthers, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 669.

Defendant appealed from an order granting to the plaintiff a new trial, stipulating that, if the order should be affirmed, judgment absolute should be rendered against him. The order was affirmed, and judgment ordered. Upon a reference to ascertain the amount due to the plaintiff, a balance was found to be due to the defendant upon a counterclaim. It was held that no affirmative relief could be granted to the defendant, his right being lost by the judgment entered upon his stipulation.

Rust v. Hauselt, 8 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 148.

Where a complaint sets forth a single cause of action, and the answer sets up by way of counterclaim that there had been a partnership between the parties which had been dissolved, and there were unsettled accounts between the partners, and a balance in favor of the defendant demanding judgment for such balance, and upon an accounting, a balance is shown in favor of plaintiffs, they may have judgment for the amount thereof, although it exceeds the amount claimed in the complaint, such enhancement of the plaintiff's claim not being inconsistent with the plaintiff's complaint. Rider v. Foggan, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 628.

Where the plaintiff admits the defendant's counterclaim, and takes judgment for the balance, judgment may be entered up without notice of assessment of damages. Robbins v. Watson, 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 293.

Upon Failure of Plaintiff to Reply.—

If a defendant admits the plaintiff's claim or puts it in issue by his answer, he must for the purposes of a motion for judgment for the excess of his demand over that of the plaintiff, be considered as conceding the plaintiff's right of recovery to the amount of his claim. Kelsy v. Tremaine, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 439.

to the extent of satisfying the plaintiff's claim.¹ Where affirmative relief is demanded by one defendant against another, the judgment may determine their ultimate rights as between themselves,² and if the plaintiff's cause of action or counterclaim is for the recovery of some specific relief, legal or equitable, other than a money judgment, the judgment rendered must be according to the circumstances of the case.³

The payor of a promissory note is not deprived of the benefit of a counterclaim by an assignment of the note after maturity, but he is entitled to have the one demand satisfy the other up to the amount of the smaller demand only, and is not entitled to have an affirmative judgment against the assignee for any excess of his demand, over and above the amount of the note. *Norton v. Where in an action for waste in demised premises, a counterclaim setting up an agreement for the sale of the premises by the lessor to the lessee demanding specific performance by the plaintiff is set up, the judgment for specific performance may provide that the amount of a mortgage upon the property be deducted from the purchase money, and that the defendant pay interest on the purchase money, and the plaintiff interest on the mortgage; that taxes confirmed after the time when the deed should have been delivered be paid by the defendant, and that the plaintiff account for the rents and profits from that time, and that if the defendant fail to complete the purchase within a specified time, his counterclaim shall be dismissed, and the plaintiff have judgment against him for treble damages for the injuries to the property. Lazarus v. Heilman, 11 Daly (N. Y.) 189.

Judgment, by Whom Rendered.—A judge at chambers has no power to render a judgment for the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff has not replied to the answer. Judgment can be rendered only by the court when sitting as such. Aymar v. Chace, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 301.

The fact that an appeal has been brought does not affect the conclusive nature of the judgment appealed from as a bar, while it remains unreversed. Harris v. Hammond, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 123.

Where, in an action on an express contract, the defendant sets up a counterclaim founded on alleged failure by plaintiff to perform the contract, he thereby consents to put in issue all the equities between the parties upon the contract, and he bars himself from claiming that the plaintiff cannot maintain his action because of such failure. Mason v. Heyward, 3 Minn. 182.

Persons Not Parties.—A recovery of judgment on a note or other demand, does not extinguish it as to any persons' liability thereon who are not parties to the action, and it is a good subject of counterclaim as against such persons. Kelsey v. Bradbury, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 531; and see Cornell v. Donovan, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 687; Lowell v. Lane, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 292; Ives v. Goddard, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 434.

A judgment or decree of a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties is, as a general rule, final and conclusive as to the matters actually litigated and decided, and also as to the matters necessarily involved in the litigation, under the pleadings and issues made. *Dunham v. Where a counterclaim is embraced in the issue at the time of final submission and judgment, the plaintiff is entitled to immunity from any further action thereon. Gunsaulis v. Cadwallader, 48 Iowa 48.

In Platner v. Best, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 530, it was held that an action cannot be maintained to recover an item omitted by mistake in giving judgment on the trial of another cause in which it was admitted or proven.

2. Watson v. Cowdrey, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 169; Ives v. Goddard, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 434.

Even where an answer amounting to a counterclaim has been filed in an action to foreclose a mortgage, such action may, before it is called for trial, be dismissed, without prejudice to a future action. The defendant has, however, the right to proceed to a trial of his claim, notwithstanding the dismissal. Amos v. Humboldt Loan Assoc., 21 Kan. 474.

Proceeding Without Objection.—In King v. Fuller, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 152, it was held that where a claim is pleaded and not objected to, and passed upon by the jury, whether it could be legally set off or not, the consent of the parties thus to be implied will take away the error, and it then becomes a bar to a subsequent suit.

If the same question is submitted to a jury in a first action, and the evidence in the last, if it had been given in the first, would have been equally available as in the last to entitle the party to recover, then the verdict and judgment are an absolute bar. But where from the number of plaintiffs or defendants in the first suit, the testimony relied on in the second is sufficient to authorize a recovery in such

Where a defendant moves for and obtains a non-suit as to the plaintiff's cause of action, he, in effect, submits to a non-suit as to his own cause of action, pleaded as a counterclaim;¹ but as a plaintiff may take a voluntary non-suit, so a defendant may decline to submit a counterclaim for adjudication, and in either case a subsequent action may be brought upon the defendant's demand;² though where the defendant has procured the dismissal of the complaint, the plaintiff has a right to insist that the counterclaim shall be passed upon, and that the defendant shall not be allowed to withdraw it, so as to reserve the right of bringing a new action thereon.³

Any material fact or allegation of a cause of action admissible as a counterclaim, which is expressly or impliedly involved in the judgment in the former action, however, is merged in it, and cannot be again litigated, whether the cause of action was set up as a counterclaim or not.⁴ An offer of judgment made and accepted second action, but could not have produced a different result in the first, the failure of the plaintiffs in the one suit, is no bar to their recovery in the other, although it is for the same cause of action for which they attempted to recover in the first suit. *Hatch v. In a proceeding before a referee, a counterclaim set up in the defendant's answer may be withdrawn at any time during the course of the trial; the defendant, as to such withdrawal, occupying the position of a plaintiff who sustains a nonsuit upon his claim. Brown v. Butler, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 511.

An agreement that a withdrawal of a counterclaim is to be "without prejudice to the defendant's right to maintain an action thereon against the plaintiffs, and the same is not to be affected by the future litigation of the action," is admissible in evidence, in an action arising upon such counterclaim, to show that the action is not barred by the record of the former action.

The dismissal, sua sponte, by the court, of a counterclaim, without prejudice to the bringing of a new action upon it, although error under the Ohio Code, § 119, does not affect the judgment rendered upon the cause of action set forth in the petition. Such judgment may be affirmed and the cause remanded to try the counterclaim. Nulsen v. Wagner, 2 Cin. (Ohio) 258.

Defendant will be permitted to withdraw a counterclaim where he will be precluded on the trial from offering any evidence to sustain it because of his inability to comply with an order directing him to furnish plaintiff with a bill of particulars. Knauth v. Wertheim, 26 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 360.

In an action for the recovery of freight, a claim for non-delivery or failure to transport the goods would be barred by a recovery in the action after a counterclaim has been pleaded, extinguishes the cause of action therein set forth.¹ So the pendency of a prior action upon the same cause of action as that set up as a counterclaim, for which affirmative judgment is demanded, is a defense to the counterclaim;² but where no judgment has been pronounced, the pendency of a prior action for the same cause does not prevent a defendant from using his demand as a set-off, or by way of recoupment;³ though where a cause of action has been used as a set-off, or by way of recoupment, and the defendant afterwards sues upon it during the pendency of the former action, he will be required to elect in which action he will insist upon it.⁴

or an admission of the claim. But where the plaintiff performed the contract to carry, and the goods reached their destination, he has thus performed the condition on which his right to freight depended, and the owner of the injured goods may then pay the freight and sue for damages, or, refusing to pay, submit to suit and set up his damages by way of counterclaim, or bring a cross-action. *Schwinger v. But a voluntary compromise of a claim, in an action embracing only part of the entire demand, does not necessarily merge the whole demand. O'Beirne v. Lloyd, 43 N. Y. 248.

Presumption of Extinguishment.—Where a judgment recites that a counterclaim was set up, and adjudges that the plaintiff recover a sum less than the excess of his claim over the amount of the counterclaim, it must be assumed that the counterclaim was allowed by the jury, and this amount deducted from that otherwise found due the plaintiff. *Branger v. The objection of the pendency of a prior action upon the cause set up as a counterclaim may be raised by way of demurrer, if it appears upon the face of the counterclaim. If not it should be taken by way of reply. Ansorge v. Kaiser, 22 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 304.

Where a plaintiff brings several actions against the same defendant, who has a demand against the plaintiff, he may protect himself by setting up his counterclaim in one of them, and moving to consolidate the actions or to stay the others, until the action in which he has set up the counterclaim is disposed of. Tuckerman v. Corbin, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 404.

Where the same counterclaim is interposed in two different actions, its satisfaction by settlement in one action amounts to its withdrawal in the other. Matthews v. Davis, 39 Ohio St. 54.

That a verdict has been rendered, or that the plaintiff has paid the money into court in the former action, does not deprive the defendant of his right to use the cause of action as a set-off, or by way of recoupment. Naylor v. Schenck, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 135.

A party who prosecutes a demand, and is afterwards sued by his adversary, and pleads his original cause of action by way of counterclaim, is not prosecuting two actions, one of which abates the other. Naylor v. Schenck, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 137; Tuckerman v. Corbin, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 404. And see Lindsay v. Stewart, 72 Cal. 540.

As a general proposition, the right of a plaintiff to discontinue his suit at his pleasure, and of course, is undoubted;¹ but the right is not absolute. It must depend upon equitable considerations addressed to the discretion of the court,² and where the defendant has interposed a counterclaim, he has a right to proceed with the action for the purpose of trying the issue joined upon it, independently of the question whether the plaintiff chooses to maintain his cause of action or not.³

up new matter in an answer, brought a cross-action against the plaintiff founded on the same matter as that set forth in his answer, and the plaintiff moved in the first action that the defendant should be required to elect either to abandon his answer or his cross-action, it was held that the motion should have been made in the cross-action. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Hunt, 1 Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y.) 1.

In Tuckerman v. Corbin, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 404, it was held that a party who has brought an action is not precluded from setting up the same matter as a counterclaim in a cross-action; but will be compelled to elect between his own suit and the recoupment claimed; and if he elects the latter, his suit will be stayed.

Where a plaintiff has entered upon the trial of an action and occupied the time of the court, he will not be permitted to discontinue the action by the entry of an ex parte order, without the leave of the court, and an order thus rendered will be set aside on motion. Wilder v. Boynton, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 547.

Withdrawal by Defendant.—Where a defendant has set up a counterclaim based on transactions directly involved in an accounting, for which the action is brought, the court may refuse to allow him to withdraw it, at the close of the testimony. Whitman v. Horton, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 531.

Car. 363.

Where a defendant interposes a counterclaim in an action and asks for affirmative relief, and issue is joined upon his claim, he becomes an actor in the case and may proceed in it as if he were in fact a plaintiff. Livermore v. Bainbridge, 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 372; Venable v. Dutch, 37 Kan. 515; Bennett v. McCorklin, 3 Mete. (Ky.) 322.

The right of a plaintiff to discontinue after an answer containing a counterclaim is a qualified one. The court has then the right to control its own orders, and may exercise its discretion in respect to the terms upon which parties shall be permitted to discontinue. Wilder v. Boynton, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 547. And the plaintiff cannot discontinue except by leave of the court granted on show-

But the court will not refuse leave to a plaintiff to discontinue his action, even though a counterclaim has been interposed by the defendant, unless it appears that the counterclaim will be jeopardized by the discontinuance,¹ or that the defendant has secured some right in reference to the subject-matter of the action, or the counterclaim by the proceedings of which he would be deprived by the discontinuance.²

b. FAILURE TO PLEAD.—A defendant is not bound to counterclaim an independent cause of action in his favor against the plaintiff,³ and is not concluded by judgment in a former action, ing special grounds therefor. Geenia v. Keah, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 245.

When, after dismissal by the plaintiff, the defendant elects to go to trial upon his counterclaim, he stands in the relation of plaintiff to that cause of action, both as respects his pleading and his proof, and a substantial omission in either is as fatal to recovery as though he were prosecuting an original and independent action. Sale v. Bugher, 24 Kan. 432.

The representatives of a deceased defendant, who had interposed a counterclaim, may revive the action, notwithstanding the opposition of the plaintiff. Livermore v. Bainbridge, 49 N. Y. 125.

The plaintiff may discontinue as against persons improperly made defendants even though they have filed counterclaims demanding affirmative relief. Lee v. Eure, 93 N. Car. 5.

That the Statute of Limitations would be a bar to an action upon a counterclaim, is a sufficient reason for a denial of a motion for a discontinuance made by the plaintiff. Van Alen v. Schermerhorn, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 287; Rees v. Van Patten, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 258; Merchants' Bank v. Schulenberg, 54 Mich. 49.

In North Carolina where defendant's counterclaim does not arise out of the same transaction as plaintiff's cause of action, plaintiff may submit to a nonsuit; otherwise, where the counterclaim arises out of the same transaction. Whedbee v. Leggett, 92 N. Car. 469.

2. Pacific Mail Steamship Co. v. Leuling, 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 37.

After an order has been made requiring a husband who is a plaintiff in a divorce case to pay temporary alimony to his wife, he cannot, without complying with the order, discontinue the action on payment of costs by entering an ex parte order. Leslie v. Leslie, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 64.

When, after the dismissal by the plaintiff of his cause of action, the defendant insists upon a trial of his set-off or counterclaim, the plaintiff may make any legal defense to such set-off or counterclaim, and to that end may, in the discretion of the court, be allowed to file proper pleadings presenting such defense. Sale v. Bugher, 24 Kan. 432.

In Seaboard, etc., R. Co. v. Ward, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 595, it was held that a plaintiff may, before the time for replying has arrived, enter an ex parte order dismissing the action on payment of costs, notwithstanding the defendant has put in an answer setting up a counterclaim against the plaintiff, and demanding affirmative relief, but that if the plaintiff has failed to reply to such answer within the time prescribed by law the rule would be otherwise. See also Oaksmith v. Sutherland, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 265; Rees v. Van Patten, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 258; Tubbs v. Hall, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 237.

Procedure After Dismissal.—Where the plaintiff dismisses the action, and the trial of the issues formed upon the counterclaim is proceeded with, the counterclaim should be docketed under its proper title, the claimant as plaintiff, and the adverse party as defendant. Rawalt v. Brewer, 16 Neb. 444.

in which he did not set it up.¹ He has a right of election to set it up as a counterclaim in defense of the action against him, or to bring a cross-action upon his demand.²

While a counterclaim or set-off need not be asserted by answer to a complaint, however, it cannot be the subject of an independent action, where it results from an alleged transaction, the existence of which in many of its material parts is directly negatived by a judgment unreversed and unappealed from, given in an action between the same parties;³ and some of the statutes are construed to require a defendant to interpose any valid counterclaim he may have, in an action against him, under the penalty

A party having a claim against another, is not bound to wait the tedious motion of such debtor, if he sees fit to commence a suit and then delay its progress, so as to prevent the real creditor from obtaining what is due him. That the plaintiff allowed the amount and sued for the balance only is immaterial where it appears that the amount allowed by the plaintiff was not accepted or allowed by the court in the action. Brown v. Gallaudet, 80 N. Y. 413.

In New York in actions commenced in justices' courts, a defendant must avail himself of any counterclaim he may have, or be thereafter precluded from maintaining an action upon it. Douglass v. The only penalty for failure to plead a counterclaim rests in the matter of costs. Swensen v. Cresop, 28 Ohio St. 668.

The rule that a defense legal or equitable not set up is deemed waived, does not apply to a counterclaim. In an action to recover possession of realty, a defendant relying solely on his legal title and failing, may afterwards maintain an action to correct mistakes in the deeds. Witte v. Lockwood, 39 Ohio St. 141.

3. Nemetty v. Naylor, 63 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 387; Bellinger v. Craigie, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 534.

These cases go upon the ground that the plaintiff's cause of action could be made out only by overcoming the defendant's claim; that if the latter was well founded it would defeat the former, and a recovery by either would be a conclusive answer to any demand made by the other, because the litigation invoked by either necessarily involved the matter upon which both must rely. Schwinger v. Raymond, 83 N. Y. 192; 38 Am. Rep. 415.

It will be assumed that the defendant suffered no injury through the action of a court in sustaining an exception to a counterclaim, which was founded on the converse of the same cause of action as that set forth in the complaint, when the verdict and judgof being prohibited from thereafter maintaining an action against the plaintiff thereon.¹

IV. SET-OFF OF ONE JUDGMENT AGAINST ANOTHER.—Where reciprocal claims between different parties have passed into judgment, it is the established practice of the courts to set off one judgment against another, and enter satisfaction of both to the amount of the smaller demand;² and judgment for one party may be withheld until the other, by using due diligence, may obtain his judgment, so that the one may be set off against the other, or that the one execution may balance the other.³

A debt remains mutual after verdict, as well as before, the verdict amounting to conclusive evidence of the debt only, and leaving the right of set-off as it was before.⁴ And though the claims between the parties were not mutual, so that they could not be set off against each other before judgment, when both have ment are rendered in favor of the plaintiff. Pacific Express Co. v. Malin, 132 U. S. 531.

1. Lowry v. Hurd, 7 Minn. 356; Ricker v. Pratt, 48 Ind. 73.

Even though it is considered as obligatory upon a defendant to set up by answer any equitable defense or counterclaim or right to affirmative relief which he may have under the penalty of losing it, that consequence should follow only where he has the absolute right to set it up, and not where it is in the discretion of the court to grant or deny him the privilege of doing so. Giles v. Austin, 62 N. Y. 486.

In an equitable point of view where there are counter demands subsisting between the parties liable to be set off against each other, one only is the debtor—namely, he against whom a balance would remain. Greene v. Hatch, 12 Mass. 195.

In Arkansas, judgments held by adverse parties against each other do not extinguish each other to the extent of the smaller, and one may be claimed as a personal property exemption, and cannot then be reached by set-off. Atkinson v. Plttman, 47 Ark. 464.

In Winslow v. Hathaway, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 211, one action was brought forward on the docket, and the other was continued for judgment, in order that the two judgments might be set off against each other.

In New Hampshire the right to have a cause continued or executions stayed until the claimant obtains judgment, in order to effect a set-off seems to be confined to cases where the parties claiming the benefit of the set-off could not avail themselves of the right in the trial of the action. Hovey v. Morrill, 61 N. H. 9; 60 Am. Rep. 315.

To authorize a set off of judgments, it is not necessary that either of the suits should be pending. Wright v. Cobleigh, 23 N. H. 32.

In Thorpe v. Wegefarrh, 56 Pa. St. 82, it is said that one judgment may be set off against another through the equitable power of the court, but to a judgment ripe for execution, there can be but one answer; to wit, payment pure and simple.

passed into judgment, one will be set off against the other, if equity requires it,¹ the general rule being that judgments may be set off against each other whenever executions issued upon them could be legally set off, one against the other, by the officer having them in his hands for service.²

1. Power to Set Off Judgments.—The power to set off one judgment against another, does not rest upon any statute, but upon the general jurisdiction of courts over their suitors, and their general superintendence of proceedings before them.³ It is a power incident to courts of equity,⁴ and it had been, for a long

In Duff v. Wells, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 17, it was held that the right to set off judgments against each other pertains only to those founded on matters ex contractu; otherwise a party might circumvent the exemption laws by seizing and detaining his debtor's property, letting judgment therefor go by default, and getting such judgment credited upon his own.

2. New Haven Copper Co. v. Brown, 46 Me. 418; Makepeace v. Coates, 8 Mass. 451.

A judgment on which the party recovering is entitled to execution for the amount due, is so far a liquidated demand, that it may be set off against another judgment. Gridley v. Garrison, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 647.

An application to a court of law for a set-off is addressed to the discretion of the court,³ and the propriety of the exercise of the power cannot be questioned on appeal.⁴ The power of a court of equity to set off one judgment against another, on motion, is the same as that of a common-law court.⁵ But where such relief is sought in a bill of equity, it is not a matter of discretion, but the court is bound to determine the rights of the parties, according to established principles of equity.⁶ Where a Surrogates' Courts.—The power to enforce the set-off of mutual demands which is exercised upon equitable principles, and where the right often depends upon complicated facts and equities, is one not allowed in the surrogates' courts. Stilwell v. Carpenter, 59 N. Y. 414.

Thornburgh*, 3 Watts (Pa.) 78.

The equity powers of the common-law courts extend only to cases which arise incidentally in suits at law, but these equitable powers having been found indispensable to the convenient administration of justice, are now within the established and acknowledged jurisdiction of the courts of law. *Simson v. The power of common-law courts to compel a set-off of judgments by motion is based upon their supervisory power over their own judgments and suitors, and is governed by no fixed rules; but in actions in equity, it is said that suitors may ask the interference of the court ex debito justitiæ. Zogbaum v. Parker, 55 N. Y. 120.

In Hurst v. Sheets, 21 Iowa 506, it was held that the right to set off one set-off is not authorized by statute, and it would deprive a party of any of his legal rights, he can have a remedy by appeal.¹

Where it appears as matter of law, however, that the court is not bound to allow a set-off, its refusal to do so cannot be revised;² and generally the power will not be exercised in cases in which it would be inequitable to do so,³ the discretionary power confided to the court being a judicial discretion, regulated by the principles of equity and justice, and not a wanton, capricious, or arbitrary determination of the will.⁴

2. To Whom Relief May be Granted.—A party must be the absolute and beneficial owner of a judgment in order to be entitled to set it off against a judgment existing against him.⁵ A party to an action will not be permitted to set off a judgment therein of which another is the equitable owner.⁶ Set-off is made be-judgment against another, where the judgments are between the same parties, is not simply an equitable right but a matter of absolute legal right. See also Struman v. Robb, 37 Iowa 313; Balinger v. Tarbell, 16 Iowa 491; 85 Am. Dec. 527.

A court of equity will not permit a defendant to off-set against the complainant in a suit in that court, a demand against him as a mere surety for the debt of a third person, for which the defendant has security upon the fund belonging to the principal debtor, sufficient to satisfy the debt. Holden v. Gilbert, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 208.

The criterion by which every application for a set-off is to be determined, is whether it is equitable. Baker v. Hoag, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 201; Chase v. Woodward, 61 N. H. 79.

The equitable question is one of fact. Chase v. Woodward, 61 N. H. 79.

An assignment of a judgment upon condition of its being reassigned, in case it cannot be set off, does not transfer the ownership with sufficient absoluteness to enable the assignee to use it as a set-off. Butler v. Niles, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 61.

6. Meador v. Rhyne, 11 Rich. (S. Car.) 631; Bowe v. Langley, 48 N. H. 391.

In Meador v. Rhyne, 11 Rich. (S. Car.) 631, stress was laid upon the fact that the equitable ownership was known to the party making the motion when the cause of action was given.

In Williams v. Taylor, 69 Ind. 48, it was held that although an equitable title to a judgment has been acquired by a stranger, prior to a proceeding by the judgment defendant to have it set tween the real and equitable owners of the judgments, and not between the nominal parties,¹ though a mere equitable interest in the judgment is not sufficient.²

3. Requisites of the Judgments.—The right of set-off attaches when, and only when, the subject-matter has passed the ordeal of a judicial determination, and the judgments sought to be set off have been actually recovered,³ in cases in which the respective courts had duly and properly acquired jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter of the action.⁴ The subject-matter of the set-off must be clear, indisputable, and conclusive upon the parties.⁵

off, the legal title will control the equity and authorize the set-off to be made.

Under the Maine statutes, where a promissory note has been indorsed when overdue, and judgment has been obtained thereon against the maker in the name of the indorsee, and a judgment in favor of the maker of that note has been rendered on a note given to him, before the indorsement by the payee of the other, the latter judgment may be set off against the former. Burnham v. Tucker, 18 Me. 179.

In Brooks v. Harris, 41 Ind. 390, it is held that in making a set-off the legal title is preferred to the equitable one.

Where mutual claims between the parties to the record are not in their nature assignable at law, the fact that a third person has acquired an interest in the plaintiff's claim, will not preclude a set-off of any claim of the defendant against the plaintiff existing at the time of the assignment. *Goodwin v. A note or other obligation not judicially settled and determined cannot be set off against a judgment. Bag v. Jefferson, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 615; Smith v. Briggs, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 252.

If two cross-actions are referred to an auditor, who finds in each a balance for the plaintiff, the court will not set off enough of the balance found for one party to extinguish that which has been established in favor of the other nor require the auditor to do so. Hasselton v. Pray, 18 N. H. 554.

In Connecticut, however, it is provided by statute that debts may be set off against judgments in all actions of trespass, other than such as are brought for damages for the taking of property exempt from execution. See Talbot v. Ellis, 33 Conn. 234.

What Judgments May be Set Off.—A judgment at law against the complainant in favor of the defendant, may be offset on motion in equity, against a decree in equity, in favor of the complainant against such defendant for the payment of money due. Holden v. Gilbert, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 208.

In a proceeding to compel restitution of money collected on a judgment, which is afterwards reversed, the party who collected the money may defeat a recovery by showing that he has a demand against the complainant, equal in amount to the sum which was collected under the judgment. *Carson v. 5. Smith v. Briggs, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 252; Harris v. Palmer, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 105; Duncan v. Lyon, 3 Johns. Ch.

The judgment must be a subsisting unsatisfied claim,¹ capable of being enforced,² and the rights of the parties thereunder must not be doubtful, complicated, or intricate.³ A dormant judgment, not barred by the Statute of Limitations, may be revived against an insolvent defendant, however, and set off against a judgment in active force, in favor of the insolvent.⁴

A judgment obtained by attachment in a justice's court, without the defendant appearing, being but prima facie evidence of a debt, and impeachable in an action upon it, cannot be set off on motion against a judgment. People v. Delaware Co., 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 598.

The manner in which a judgment is obtained is immaterial provided it is conclusive. See Scott v. Rivers, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 19; 21 Am. Dec. 646; Davidson v. Geoghagan, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 433; Tolbert v. Harrison, 1 Bailey (S. Car.) 599.

A judgment, which appears by the record to be satisfied, will not be ordered, on motion, to be set off against another judgment, although the canceled judgment has not in fact been satisfied. Smith v. Briggs, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 252.

Plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant for seizing under execution some exempt property. Defendant afterwards procured an assignment of the judgment upon which the execution issued, and thereupon moved to set off the latter judgment against the former. Held, that this relief could not be granted, because as between the parties, the judgment for the value of the property stood in the place of the property itself. Beckman v. Manlove, 18 Cal. 388. But see Prince v. Fuller, 34 Me. 122.

It is not necessary to expressly aver that the judgment remains unsatisfied, when this is the legitimate inference from the facts alleged. Simpson v. Huston, 14 Tex. 476.

2. See Best v. Lawson, 1 Miles (Pa.) 11; Harris v. Palmer, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 105; Gridley v. Garrison, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 647; Simpson v. Huston, 14 Tex. 476.

It is not necessary that a demand sought to be used as a set-off should be in the form of a personal judgment. Hobbs v. Duff, 23 Cal. 596.

In Meloy v. Howk, 32 Ind. 94, it was held that where a motion is made to set off against each other mutual judgments obtained before the same justice, it is not sufficient answer that the execution on the judgment against the party has been stayed, and that the time for such stay has not expired.

Exemption Laws.—The right to set off judgments against each other cannot be so exercised as to circumvent the exemption laws. Duff v. Wells, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 17.

A judgment recovered for the value of personal property exempt from execution, converted by the judgment debtor by a levy upon it and a sale of it, is not itself exempt, and may be set off against a judgment held by the judgment debtor against the judgment creditor. Temple v. Scott, 3 Minn. 419.

Pendency of Appeal.—The owner of a judgment is not in a position to set off his judgment against the judgment of another, when an appeal from the judgment is pending and undetermined. Prouty v. Swift, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 233; De Figanieri v. Young, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 670; Weathered v. Mays, 1 Tex. 472. But see Sowles v. Witters, 40 Fed. Rep. 413; Groff v. Ressler, 27 Pa. St. 71.

That there is an appeal pending from one of the judgments, is cause for retaining a motion to set off until a decision of the appeal, but not for denying it. Irvine v. Myers, 6 Minn. 562; Winslow v. Hathaway, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 211; Coxe v. State Bank, 8 N. J. L. 172; 14 Am. Dec. 417; Terry v. Roberts, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 65.

4. Simpson v. Huston, 14 Tex. 476.

It is held, that in equity, where the element of insolvency comes in, it is not necessary that the demand of the party applying for the set-off should have been reduced to judgment,¹ nor that the demand sought to be set off should have matured,² nor that it should be undisputed or liquidated,³ the line being drawn at uncertain damages, such as rest in the sound discretion of the jury.⁴

a. MUTUALITY OF PARTIES.—The rule is generally stated to be that such judgments can be set off against each other only as are mutual debts existing respectively in favor of and against the same party;⁵ but the practice of setting off one judgment against Execution on the active judgment will be enjoined in the meantime. Simpson v. Huston, 14 Tex. 476.

A dormant judgment cannot be set off on motion, against a judgment which is not dormant, unless there are peculiar equities between the parties which require it, or unless manifest injustice will be done to the owner of the dormant judgment by the refusal of the court to allow the set-off. Camp v. Pace, 40 Ga. 45.

But see Ruddell v. Sparks, 79 Tex. 308. See also supra, this title, Set-off; Counterclaim.

The same rule applies to Nonresidence; see Mendenhall v. Hall, 134 U. S. 559; Livingston v. Marshall, 82 Ga. 281.

Equity will allow one judgment to be set off against another where there are no means of collecting it of the judgment creditor. Buckmaster v. Grundy, 8 Ill. 626.

A judgment obtained for a valid subsisting demand, may be set off in equity against a judgment procured after the insolvency of the party obtaining it. Goldsmith v. Stetson, 39 Ala. 183.

A court of chancery will not, on motion, however, allow a debt which is not ascertained by judgment or decree to be offset against a decree for costs to the prejudice of the solicitor's lien, although the validity of the debt is admitted by the client. Dunkin v. Vanderbergh, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 622.

In New Hampshire it is held that the demands must be liquidated or determinate by computation. Hovey v. Morrill, 61 N. H. 13; 60 Am. Rep. 315.

In Russell v. Conway, 11 Cal. 93, it was held that the insolvency of the party against whom the set-off is claimed, is a sufficient ground for the assumption of jurisdiction by a court of equity, to set off a personal judgment against a judgment in rem against property belonging to the applicant.

A case of uncertain, unliquidated damages, even if the doubtful right is established, is not a proper subject of set-off in equity any more than at law. Livingston v. Livingston, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 292; 8 Am. Dec. 562.

5. See De Figanieri v. Young, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 670; Hepburn v. Hoag, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 613; Atkins v. Churchill, 19 Conn. 394; Pitkin v. Pitkin, 8 Conn. 326; *Francis v. another is not confined to judgments founded on mutual debts.¹ Where the demands of the parties have passed into judgment, and each is entitled to execution in his own right against the other, the judgments are mutual debts, without regard to the ground of action on which the judgments were founded.²

So, the requirement is generally stated to be that both judgments must be in the same right.³ It is sufficient, however, if the judgment prayed to be set off may be enforced at law against the party recovering the judgment to be diminished or satisfied by the set-off.⁴ A judgment against several persons, founded upon a joint and several liability, is a debt due from each, and

But courts either of law or equity, at common law, have the power, and where equitable will exercise it, to order the set off of judgments, where the claims on which the judgments are founded are not mutual. Brown v. Warren, 43 N. H. 430; Baker v. Hoag, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 201.

Under the Indiana statutes a judgment for deceit in a contract for the exchange of lands is a judgment for breach of contract, and may be set off in equity against a judgment obtained for breach of a contract of warranty in the same transaction. Quick v. Durham (Ind.), 16 N. E. Rep. 601.

In Allnut v. Winn, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 304, it is held that the chancellor cannot set off one judgment against another, unless there is a connection between the transactions on which the judgments were rendered, or unless the judgment prayed to be set off cannot be enforced by legal means.

Representative Capacity.—A judgment against an administrator, to be levied out of the estate of the intestate, may be set off against a judgment held by such administrator in his official capacity. Prior v. Richards, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 356. And see Dickenson v. Chism, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 1; Jones v. Carpenter, 9 Met. (Mass.) 509; Iredell v. Langston, 1 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 392; Wikel v. Garrison (Iowa 1891), 48 N. W. Rep. 803; Hazlehurst v. Bayard, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 152.

Such right of equitable set-off cannot be affected by the fact that there are no assets other than the judgment, and that the estate is indebted to the administrator for costs to an equal amount. Wikel v. Garrison (Iowa 1891), 48 N. W. Rep. 803.

A judgment recovered by a woman, while sole, against A, may be set off, as to the principal and interest, against a judgment recovered by A against her and her husband personally, for a devastavit committed by her as administratrix. Rutherford v. Crabb, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 112.

A proceeding by the debtor of a decedent to set off a judgment against decedent, against one obtained by the administrator on a debt due the estate, is not affected by the insolvency of the estate—such judgment where judgments exist against and in favor of any of the parties severally, the demands may be set off against each other.¹

A creditor may set off a judgment against several joint debtors against a judgment against him, in favor of one of such joint debtors, when such a set-off would not be inequitable;² and justice may require a several judgment to be set off against a joint judgment recovered by the debtor against the creditor together with others.³ The rule has been adopted to some extent, however, that a judgment against several jointly, and one due to one of them individually, cannot be set off against each other, except upon some equitable ground, such as the insolvency or non-residence of one of the parties.⁴

Judgments in favor of or against a person in a representative capacity cannot be set off against judgments in favor of or against him in his individual capacity;⁵ though where a trustee is

In Prince v. Fuller, 34 Me. 122, it was held that where judgments are recovered at the same term, one in favor of A against B and sureties, and the other in favor of B against A, the court will, on motion of B, set off the one against the other.

In Warren v. Wells, 1 Met. (Mass.) 80, it was held that a set-off of judgments should be allowed where the plaintiff can show no several counter-demand, but that it will not be allowed where it would defeat the just rights of the plaintiff against either of the several defendants.

But although a plaintiff may receive the money due on a judgment in favor of himself and several other co-plaintiffs, he cannot, without authority from them, set off a judgment due them jointly against another judgment held by the defendant in such joint judgment against himself alone. Corwin v. Ward, 35 Cal. 195; 95 Am. Dec. 93.

Where A obtains a judgment against B and C, and at the same term B recovers a judgment for a large sum against A, if B will acknowledge satisfaction of the amount of A's judgment against C and himself in part of his judgment against A, the court will stay A's execution and give B and C their execution for the balance. Goodenow v. Buttrick, 7 Mass. 140.

b. JUDGMENTS FOR COSTS.—A judgment for costs in favor of a defendant may be set off against a judgment for damages or costs recovered by the plaintiff in the same action.⁴ In separate and distinct actions, one judgment for costs may be set off against

Where an assignee for the benefit of creditors recovers judgment on a suit brought by his assignor, defendant can set off against it judgments for costs recovered by him after the assignment in suits brought previously against him by the assignor. Stillings v. Smith, 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 488.

A judgment in favor of a judge of probate, in a suit on a probate bond brought in his name, for the benefit of a legatee, against an executor and his sureties, may be set off against a judgment recovered by the executor, in his individual capacity, against the legatee. Barrett v. Barrett, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 342.

In *Moody v. In Hill v. Brinkley, 10 Ind. 102, however, it was held that where one of the judgments which had been set off against each other had been assigned, the court will not except the amount of a lien thereon of which the assignee had no notice at the time of taking the assignment.

Some of the cases hold that the at-

of the insolvency of the defendant, however, may be set off against a judgment in his favor.¹

c. JUDGMENTS IN DIFFERENT COURTS.—Formerly judgments recovered in different courts could be set off against each other in equity only;² but it is now settled that mutual judgments may be set off against each other either at law or in equity, whether obtained in the same or different courts.³ Thus, judgments in different districts of the same court may be set off against each other,⁴ and a judgment of an inferior court may be set off against one of a superior court,⁵ and a judgment in the courts of one of the States, and one of a Federal court, or of a court of a sister State, may likewise be set off against each other.⁶ But it would appear that foreign judgments and those of our own courts cannot be set off against each other, foreign judgments not being in all respects conclusive upon the parties.⁷

d. ASSIGNED JUDGMENTS.—(See also JUDGMENTS, vol. 12, p. 58).—The right of an assignee of a judgment to set it off against a judgment held by the judgment debtor against him is recognized torney trusts to the responsibility of his client, and his right must be subordinate to the equities of the parties. De Figanieri v. Young, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 670, citing Cragin v. Travis, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 157; Noxon v. Gregory, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 339.

Arkansas statutes, § 5173, provide, that judgments for the recovery of money may be set off against each other by an order, upon motion, when both judgments are in the same court, or in action by equitable proceedings in the court in which the judgment sought to be annulled by the set-off was rendered, when the judgments are in different courts.

In Palmateer v. Meredith, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 74, the rule adopted seems to be that when the judgments were recovered in the same court, they may be set off against each other at law as well as in equity, but that when recovered in different courts, equity only has jurisdiction.

An assignment of a judgment conveys merely the rights which the assignor then possesses, but does not necessarily draw after it all equities of an independent nature. Davis v. Milburn, 3 Iowa 163.

The only object of notice to a debtor that a claim against him has been assigned, is to put him on his guard against dealing with the assignor, or perhaps obtaining other demands against him on the belief that he still continues an equitable owner. Graves v. Woodbury, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 559; 40 Am. Dec. 296; Terney v. Wilson, 45 N. J. L. 282.

Where there are judgments in the cum onere with the right still clinging to it, having been extensively adopted; ¹ though the doctrine that the rights of a bona fide assignee, without notice, will be protected and that a set-off will be permitted only when it will infringe on no other right of equal grade and that it is not to affect an equitable assignee for value, prevails in many courts. ² Generally where a judgment has been assigned to the attorney who recovered it in good faith in payment for his services in the action, a judgment held by the judgment debtor against the judgment creditor, of which the attorney had same action against and in favor of each party, the assignee of one of the judgments is charged with notice of the judgment against his assignor. Irvine v. Myers, 6 Minn. 562.

Some of the cases seem to hold that whether or not a judgment against an assignor may be set off against another judgment in the hands of an assignee depends upon whether or not the assignee took the judgment with the notice of the facts constituting the right of set-off. See Irvine v. Myers, 6 Minn. 562; Hurst v. Sheets, 14 Iowa 322; Hovey v. Morrill, 61 N. H. 9; 60 Am. Rep. 315; Rowe v. Langley, 49 N. H. 395.

An assignee of a judgment is deemed to have notice of all matters disclosed by the record, and proceedings in the action in which the judgment was rendered, and where that judgment or the proceedings therein disclose the equitable right of set-off, existing in favor of the defendants against the plaintiff, the assignee cannot claim to be a bona fide purchaser. Hobbs v. Duff, 23 Cal. 596.

Notice of the assignment to one of the defendants is notice to his co-defendant, they being liable as joint contractors. Smith v. Brown, 151 Mass. 338.

In Henderson v. McVay, 32 Ala. 471, it was held that the equity of the assignee of a judgment is inferior to that of the judgment debtor, who holds a judgment against the assignor, to have the judgment set off against each other, unless the assignor was insolvent at the time of the assignment.

In Connier v. Constantine, 5 N. Y. Supp. 177, it was held that the holder of a judgment might set it off against a judgment against him held by the judgment debtor by assignment, even though the assignment was taken merely for the purpose of collection, if he had reason to suppose and did suppose that the assignment was absolute.

This doctrine is usually placed upon the ground that by the assignment the requisite mutuality is destroyed. See cases above cited.

Under this rule it is a good replication to a plea in set-off of a judgment recovered, that the whole judgment had been assigned to third persons, of which notice had been given to the judgment debtor. Day v. Abbott, 15 Vt. 632.

In Catron v. Cross, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 584, it was held that a debt due from the assignor of a judgment to the defendant in the judgment, cannot be set off by bill in equity against a bona fide

no notice, will not be set off against it;¹ though a defendant will be allowed to set off a judgment in his favor against a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, which had been assigned to his attorney, where the plaintiff is shown to be insolvent.² Mutual judgments will be set off against each other, even though one of them may have been fraudulently assigned for the purpose of preventing such set-off.³ An assignment of a demand, previous to the entry of judgment upon it, transferring a legal or even an equitable title to it, gives the assignee a superior equity to that of a party claiming a right to set off a judgment previously recovered against the assignor, and prevents the right of set-off from accruing,⁴ and there

Though the lien of an attorney for his costs, on the judgment recovered, is subject to the right of set-off, in a proper action against the client for that purpose, when the client assigns the judgment, or the costs accrued and to accrue in the action, to his attorney, as security for his costs, the opposite party loses his right of set-off, as the assignment becomes operative before the right of set-off attaches. Firmenich v. Bovee, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 532. But see Sanders v. Gillett, 8 Daly (N. Y.) 183.

Some of the cases confine this rule to assignments made to the attorney before the right of set-off had attached. See Simmons v. Reid, 31 S. Car. 389; Levy v. Steinbach, 43 Md. 212; Roberts v. Carter, 38 N. Y. 107; Robinson v. Weeks, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 161; Ely v. Cooke, 28 N. Y. 365; Zogbaum v. Parker, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 341; affirmed, 55 N. Y. 120; Countryman v. Boyer, 3 How. An agreement between an attorney and his client that the attorney shall have a lien upon a certain judgment to be recovered for a specified sum, as compensation for his services, constitutes a valid, equitable assignment of the judgment pro tanto which attaches to the judgment as soon as entered. Terney v. Wilson, 45 N. J. L. 282.

An assignment of a judgment upon condition of a rescission of the transfer, in case of the inability of the assignee to avoid a set-off, is not such a transfer of ownership as will prevent the set-off. Butler v. Niles, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 61.

An attorney who has not given notice of his lien for costs, cannot object that an assignment of a judgment against his client, taken for the purpose of making a set-off, is in fraud of his lien. People v. New York, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 649; 28 Am. Dec. 495.

can be no right of set-off of the judgments until both exist. Where a judgment is assigned therefor before the judgment against the assignor is rendered, a set-off will be denied.¹

c. JUDGMENTS UPON WHICH EXECUTIONS HAVE ISSUED.—That an execution has been issued upon one or both of the judgments sought to be set off against each other, is no ground for a denial of relief.² But when the judgment debtor is arrested under execution against the person, though the judgment is not thereby absolutely extinguished, the imprisonment bars the creditor from all other remedies for the collection of the debt while the debtor is in custody.³

If the judgment debtor is discharged by consent of the complainant, his judgment is extinguished and can no longer be considered as a liquidated demand and the subject of a set-off.⁴

In Lammers v. Goodeman, 69 Ind. 76, however, it was held that where a cause of action is assigned during the pendency of the action but before judgment, and judgment is afterwards obtained thereon, a judgment in favor of the judgment debtor, and against the judgment creditor, may be set off against it, when the assignment of the demand was taken by the assignee with notice of the equity of set-off.

The burden of proof rests upon the assignee of a demand to establish that the assignment was made before any right of set-off attached. New Haven Copper Co. v. Brown, 46 Me. 418.

Fraudulent Assignments.—A set-off of one judgment against another is not prevented by the assignment of the demand upon which the latter judgment was rendered, before its rendition fraudulently made. Nothing can be claimed in a court of equity by reason of such an assignment. Russell v. Conway, 11 Cal. 93.

That the party against whom the off-set is sought is insolvent, is immaterial unless he was insolvent at the time of the assignment. Henderson v. McVay, 32 Ala. 471.

The court will not order a judgment against the plaintiff, which has been assigned to the defendant, to be set off against a judgment obtained by the plaintiff against the defendant, where the plaintiff, prior to the assignment, has conveyed his property for the benefit of creditors. *Dunkin v. but if a defendant in execution escapes, the plaintiff is remitted to his former rights; the imprisonment is no longer a satisfaction and the judgment may be again used as a set-off.¹

Where two parties have mutual executions against each other, either party is entitled, under the statutes of some of the States, to have one execution set off by the sheriff against the other.² The foundation of the judgments upon which the executions were issued is immaterial.³ The only limitation which the statute prescribed to a set-off of executions is that they must be between the same parties,⁴ and that they must belong to the parties respectively in the same right.⁵

An assignment of one of the executions is not sufficient to prevent their set-off against each other, or to justify the officer in refusing to make the set-off.⁶ It must appear that one of the executions has been lawfully and in good faith assigned before the execution creditor under the other execution became entitled to the sum due on his execution, in order to prevent it.⁷

The lien of an attorney for his fees and disbursements in obtaining the judgment, however, is paramount to the rights of the

The time of the delivery of an execution to an officer is to be deemed to be the time at which the execution creditor becomes entitled to the money parties to have their mutual executions set off against each other, and will not be discharged or affected by such set-off.¹ The general, though not universal rule, is that it is obligatory upon the officer to make the set-off when he is so requested by either judgment creditor, if the law allows it, and that he will render himself liable by a refusal to do so.² But if there is reasonable apprehension of danger in proceeding to act, the officer may require an indemnity from the consequences attendant upon making such set-off.³

4. Intervening Rights of Third Parties.—(See also ATTORNEY AND CLIENT, vol. 1, p. 942).—When the equitable rights of third parties would be affected by an offset of judgments it is not to be made to the injury of intervening rights honestly acquired.⁴ The rights of bona fide assignees of one of the judgments are sometimes considered as within this rule,⁵ and the lien of the attorney for his costs and disbursements of the suit is paramount to the claim of the adverse party to set off a judgment recovered against the client in another suit.⁶ The courts will sustain the

In Gould v. Parlin, 7 Me. 82, it was held that where a party has once applied to the discretion of the court by motion to set off one judgment against another, which application was refused, after a full hearing on the merits, he cannot afterwards maintain an action against the sheriff to whom both executions have been delivered, for refusing to set off the executions against each other.

lien of the attorney whenever it can be done without infringing upon the Statute of Set-off;¹ but if the case be within the words or the spirit of the act, the courts, upon bill filed, must abide by it.² Where the question arises upon pleadings in a suit, the rules of law must govern, but where the application is to the discretion of the court, it will be decided as shall be just and equitable.³ Where the adverse judgments are rendered in the same cause, however, or where they arise out of the same transaction or with relation to the same subject-matter, the attorney's lien extends only to the clear balance resulting from the equities between the parties, and the set-off may be made without reference to it;⁴ though the attorney's lien for cost recovered will not be suspended or satisfaction of the judgment delayed

In an action to set off judgments by a plaintiff as assignee of the judgment, he cannot, even if entitled to set off his judgment against that of the defendant, make use of it to defeat the incidental claims for costs, growing out of any legal proceedings to collect the defendant's judgment, instituted before the assignment of the plaintiff's judgment to him. *Butler v. Although on motion to set off judgments, courts can protect their officers by refusing to set them off, so as to defeat an attorney's lien for his costs, yet it is fully settled that the statute respecting set-offs overrides the lien of an attorney. De Figanieri v. Young, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 670. And see cases above cited.

An attorney who obtained a judgment and afterwards became the owner of it, cannot interpose his lien for costs and disbursements as an objection to the set-off of another judgment against it. It cannot be held that a party has a lien upon what is his own. Carey v. Chester, 36 N. Y. Super. Ct. 228.

Under the Iowa statute, the lien of an attorney upon moneys in the hands of an adverse party, attaches only from notice to such party, and where the right to set off a judgment recovered in one action against that recovered in another between the same parties arises before such notice, it is superior. Hurst v. Sheets, 21 Iowa 501.

4. Mohawk Bank v. Burrows, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 317; Utica Ins. Co. v. Power, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 365; Porter v. Lane, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 357; Prince v. Fuller, 34 Me. 122; Yorton v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 62 Wis. 367.

This seems to be the rule, even though an assignment of the judgment has been made to the attorney to secure him for his disbursements and until an unliquidated claim of the opposite party can be ascertained, and a balance finally struck between the parties.¹

5. Set-off; How Enforced.—The set-off of mutual judgments may be enforced either by action instituted for that purpose, or by motion made in the proper court;² and the jurisdiction of a court of law to direct a set-off is concurrent in most cases with that of a court of equity.³ Where a complicated, intricate state of facts is presented, however, a motion for a set-off in a court of law will be denied, and the parties will be left to obtain their rights in equity;⁴ and it will not be allowed on motion in a court, either of law or of equity, where one of the demands sought to be set off has not been liquidated by judgment.⁵ Upon a bill in equity, or an action at law to obtain a set-off, the attorney's lien cannot be regarded, but on motion it may;⁶ and a court of law frequently refuses to interfere on motion in cases in which by action the advances. Yorton v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 62 Wis. 367.

The party claiming the set-off has his election to seek relief in chancery subject to appeal, or he is at liberty to apply to the summary discretion of a court of law not subject to a writ of error. Simson v. Hart, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 63.

A proceeding to have one judgment set off against another, based on a motion in writing in the nature of a complaint, is a summary proceeding, and may be commenced and proceeded with as on a motion. No formal pleadings are necessary, but the parties may mutually resort to formal pleadings to present questions of law for decision. Quick v. Durham, 115 Ind. 302; Brooks v. Harris, 41 Ind. 390.

A court of equity may order a set-off of one judgment, rendered in a court of law against another. Buckmaster v. Grundy, 8 Ill. 626.

In ordinary cases, an application to the equity powers of a court of law is a more cheap and expeditious remedy than an action in equity, and in such cases while a court of equity will entertain an action for such relief, application to that court will be discouraged by refusing cost to the complaint. Gridley v. Garrison, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 647.

Such an application will be granted on motion only when no long examination of the facts is necessary. Taylor v. Williams, 14 Wis. 155.

In Hobbs v. Duff, 23 Cal. 596, it was held that where the parties to two judgments are not the same, a court of common-law jurisdiction cannot set off one against the other, but a court of equity will look beyond the nominal to the real parties in interest and adjudicate the rights of the parties accordingly.

In Allnut v. Winn, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 304, it was held that a court of equity cannot set off one judgment against another, unless there be some connection between the transactions on which the judgments were rendered, or unless the set-off cannot be enforced by legal means.

relief sought would be granted as a matter of strict statutory right.¹ A decision of a court of law upon a summary application to its equity powers for a set-off, does not preclude chancery from examining the question, nor is chancery concluded where a new fact is disclosed, which was not presented to the court of law.² That a party has neglected an opportunity to set off a judgment, or the subject-matter thereof upon a trial in which it was available, is no ground for a refusal of a motion to set off the judgment against another.³

a. Assignment Pending Litigation.—A debt absolutely assigned to a stranger pending litigation thereon and before judgment, cannot be set off against another debt on motion; but in an action brought for that purpose such a set-off may be allowed. Pignolet v. Geer, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 264.

Where a creditor, after obtaining judgment, becomes insolvent, equity will compel the allowance of any set-off which the debtor may have against him, although it existed when the suit was brought and judgment rendered, if not litigated therein. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Field, 86 Ill. 270.

In McGraw v. Pettibone, 10 Mich. 530, however, it was held that a bill to have a set-off allowed to a decree in equity, cannot be sustained where the demands sought to be set off would have constituted a defense in the former chancery suit, where it is not alleged that the facts upon which the set-off is claimed were then unknown.

I. DEFINITION.—The term settled case, or case made or stated, is applied to that part of the record on appeal which consists of a statement prepared by the appellant's counsel, setting forth so much of the testimony and proceedings had in the court below as may be material to the questions intended to be reviewed in the appellate court, subject to amendments of the opposing counsel, and to a settlement by the trial judge.²

II. NATURE AND OFFICE.—A settled case or statement on appeal is in the nature of a bill of exceptions, and in some jurisdictions may be used as a substitute for a writ of error to review the judgment of a court rendered after trial of an issue of fact ; or upon the report of a referee,³ or a judgment granting or denying a travel, was held to mean the established boundaries of the United States ; not the region of settlements. Caster v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 22 N. Y. 427. See LIMIT, vol. 13, p. 666, n. 1.

2. Black's L. Dict. 176.

In New York, the term "case" is applied to the aggregation of papers and evidence which is presented to the appellate court at the argument of an appeal. In other States, the words "appeal-book," or "paper-book," are applied to what in New York is known as the case on appeal. See 15 Alb. L. J. 242.

In California, and some other western States, in which the rules of practice are based upon the California Code, as, for example, Oregon and Nevada, the term "statement on appeal," instead of case made or stated, is to designate that part of the record containing the settled statement of counsel. Case made, however, is the term most frequently employed, and, for that reason, it is used generally throughout this article.

3. A case made is as appropriate a method of review as is a writ of error. Wheeler v. Wilkins, 19 Mich. 80. But the office of a case made is no broader than that of a writ of error and bill of exceptions. Earle v. Westchester F. Ins. Co., 29 Mich. 414 ; Grand Rapids v. Whittlesey, 32 Mich. 192.

In Nevada, alleged errors in a charge or instructions can only be brought to the attention of the supreme court in one of three ways : by being embodied in a bill of exceptions ; or in a settled statement ; or endorsed by the judge ; as required by § 426 of the practice act. State v. Darling, 4 Nev. 413.

In North Carolina, a bill of exceptions, or a case stated by the presiding judge, in the nature of a bill of exceptions, was inadmissible upon an appeal from an inferior to a superior court of equity. Graham v. Skinner, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 94.

In Minnesota, the supreme court may, if it is deemed necessary, order a bill of exceptions or a case to be prepared and attached to the judgment roll where an appeal is taken. But a bill of exceptions or a settled case is not necessary to enable the court to review a judgment upon questions presented by the findings of law and fact of the judge, or referee who tried the cause. Morrison v. March, 4 Minn. 422.

The findings of fact in a cause tried by the court cannot be questioned if there motion for a new trial;¹ while in other jurisdictions, especially where the writ of error has been abolished by statute, it may supersede the writ of error altogether, and is required to be employed in certain cases.²

is no case containing a statement of the evidence. Allen v. Hayden, 25 Minn. 267. See Clafin v. Lawler, 1 Minn. 297.

Objections to testimony submitted upon a trial before a referee, cannot be reviewed upon his report; but the testimony must be embodied in a bill of exceptions or in a case made. Bazille v. Ullman, 2 Minn. 134.

The supreme court will not examine the question whether or not the evidence supporting a judgment was properly received and considered, unless there is a case made, or bill of exceptions. Dartwell v. Davidson, 16 Minn. 530. In such a case the court will only inquire whether the judgment is justified by the facts as found by the court below. First Nat. Bank v. Parsons, 19 Minn. 289; St. Paul v. Kuby, 8 Minn. 154.

In Arizona, if the provisions of the statutes have been complied with as to the form, preparation, settling, signing, etc., of a bill of exceptions, any exceptions to the rulings of the lower court in admitting or excluding evidence may be properly preserved by being incorporated in the statement on appeal. Southerland v. Putnam (Arizona 1890), 24 Pac. Rep. 320.

In Washington, an appeal from an equitable action will be dismissed in the absence of a statement of facts settled and certified as required by laws of 1891, p. 347, § 22. McNatt v. Harmon (Wash. 1891), 28 Pac. Rep. 748; Enos v. Wilcox (Wash. 1891), 28 Pac. Rep. 364; Caldwell v. Bank of Washington (Wash.), 28 Pac. Rep. 365. And this statement must contain the whole evidence. Singer v. Roeder (Wash. 1892), 28 Pac. Rep. 748. So where an action was begun as an action at law, but which was tried and decided as a suit in equity. Harker v. Crosby (Wash. 1891), 28 Pac. Rep. 745.

In Michigan, the sole object of the statute is to do away with the necessity of a bill of exceptions and writ of error, by permitting the parties to bring before the court, in a case to be made after trial, all the questions arising thereon that could properly be embodied in a bill of exceptions. Beeson v. Hollister, 11 Mich. 193.

Where a party who has taken exceptions on a trial in an inferior court, may elect to remove the cause to the superior court upon a bill of exceptions, or on a case made, the settling and filing of a bill of exceptions will be deemed an election of that method, and he cannot thereafter make and settle the case. Richardson v. Yawkey, 9 Mich. 139; Near v. Mitchell, 23 Mich. 382. A writ of error sued out after the case is settled is a waiver of the case. Hatch v. White, 18 Mich. 194.

When the court has permitted a plaintiff to take an inquest when he had no right to do so, a proper affidavit of merits having been filed and served, the error may be reviewed on case made. Wells v. Booth, 35 Mich. 424.

But proceedings in taking judgment by default, and an assessment of damages by the clerk, cannot be reviewed by the supreme court on a case made. Beeson v. Hollister, 11 Mich. 193.

The supreme court has no jurisdiction of cases made for review upon the facts, even though the record leads irresistibly to the inference that the case below turned upon certain questions of law. The party complaining of the judgment must have excepted to the rulings on points of law, or to the rendition of judgment upon the finding of facts. Wertin v. Crocker, 47 Mich. 642; Chatterton v. Parrot, 46 Mich. 432; Hedges v. Hibbard, 46 Mich. 551.

The supreme court cannot, in reviewing a case made, weigh evidence determining facts, or review the findings of the court below, upon questions of fact. Heimbach v. Weinberg, 18 Mich. 48; Schmidt v. Miller, 22 Mich. 278; Walrath v. Campbell, 28 Mich. 123; Peabody v. McAvoy, 23 Mich. 526. And it is only where there is a total want of evidence, or where the finding is contrary to the undisputed evidence, that the supreme court can overthrow the facts found by the court below. Cragin v. Gardner, 64 Mich. 399; Tuxbury v. French, 39 Mich. 199.

only mode of review after trial by the court, was upon a case containing the proper exceptions, if questions of law were to be examined on the appeal. Hunt v. Bloomer, 13 N. Y. 342; Otis v. Spencer, 16 N. Y. 610; Magic v. Baker, 14 N. Y. 435; Pope v. Dinsmore, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 367; Conolly v. Conolly, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 225. And the decisions of referees could be reviewed only in the same manner. Johnson v. Whitlock, 13 N. Y. 346. In this case Comstock, J., said: "It has been more or less understood that an appeal may be taken on a record containing the report, and without any case being made where it is intended to review questions of law only. But the code does not admit of this interpretation, as a case must always be made after a trial by the court, and as the decision of a referee can only be reviewed in the same manner, it follows that the same proceeding must be taken." Westcott v. Thompson, 16 N. Y. 613; Manly v. Insurance Co. of N. A., 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 20. This was so, even though the facts necessary to present the legal question intended to be raised, appear upon the face of the referee's report. Turner v. Haight, 16 N. Y. 465. These cases are opposed to and overrule Brewer v. Isish, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 481. But after the amendment of § 272 of the code (Sessions Laws, 1860, pp. 783, 786) it was said in Ferguson v. Hamilton, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 427, that it was supposed that the practice was made to correspond with the decision in that case, and that a review might be had of a judgment entered on the report of a referee on exceptions without the formality of a case which before was indispensable.

After various amendments, the New York Code Civ. Proc., § 997, now provides as follows: "Where a party intends to appeal from a judgment rendered after the trial of an issue of fact, or to move for a new trial of such issue, he must, except as otherwise prescribed by law, make a case and procure the same to be settled and signed by the judge or referee by or before whom the action was tried as prescribed by the general rules of practice." See Voisin v. Commercial Mutual Ins. Co., 123 N. Y. 120.

Under this section it has been held in Schwarz v. Weber, 103 N. Y. 658, following Ferguson v. Hamilton, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 427, that the conclusions of law of a judge or referee, duly excepted to, may be reviewed on appeal by filing exceptions to the findings of the trial court from questions of law, according to § 994, Code Civ. Proc., and having the appeal heard upon these exceptions, without preparing and settling the case. The exceptions referred to are exceptions filed after the trial of an issue of fact to the conclusions of law reached by the referee or court. Goldschmidt v. Goldschmidt, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 184.

But there is no provision of the code dispensing with a case when the appellant intends to review a final judgment only, entered upon the verdict of the jury, and if a case is not made, the appeal brings nothing before the court that can be reviewed. Delano v. Harp, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 275; Clason v. Baldwin, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 622.

Where there is no case made or settled, showing that any question was raised or any exception taken, and no report of a referee of findings of the court with exceptions, the court of appeals has no jurisdiction, and no appeal lies. Smith v. Starr, 70 N. Y. 155. See Doty v. Carolus, 31 N. Y. 547; Weed v. New York, etc., R. Co., 29 N. Y. 616.

It seems that a party aggrieved by an interlocutory judgment may also, after entry of the judgment, move for a new trial on one or more exceptions contained in a case made; and from the order granting or refusing the motion an appeal may be taken to the court of appeals. Raynor v. Raynor, 94 N. Y. 248.

Where the referee did not find any facts which could sustain a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, and was not requested to find any facts which he declined to find, the exception to the report of the referee cannot be sustained, and the court will not assume to find such additional facts from the evidence as will make the exception available; but the party appealing must make his case and have it settled with such a statement of facts as will necessarily show that the law is in his favor. Smith v. Newland, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 553; Grant v. Morse, 22 N. Y. 323.

New York Code of Civil Procedure, § 1539, provides that "where an appeal to the court of appeals from a judgment rendered at the general term of the court below upon a verdict, subject to the opinion of the court, has been perfected, a case containing a concise statement of the facts, of the questions of law arising thereon, and of the determination of those questions by the general term, must be prepared and settled, by or under the directions of the court below, and annexed to the judgment-roll." See Cowenhoven v. Ball, 118 N. Y. 231; Reinmiller v. Skidmore, 59 N. Y. 661; Essex Co. Bank v. Russell, 29 N. Y. 673; People v. Featherly (N. Y. 1892), 30 N. E. Rep. 48.

Section 2576, of the same code, provides that "an appeal may be taken from the erroneous decision of the surrogate upon questions of law, or upon facts, or upon both. If taken from a decree rendered by the surrogate of an issue of fact, it must be heard upon a case made and settled by him." In re Potter, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 599. See French v. Powers, 80 N. Y. 146. But if the appeal from the surrogate's decree be not upon an issue of fact, no case is required, and the procedure is according to § 998 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In re Jackson, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 200.

A motion to dismiss an appeal on the ground that no case or case containing exceptions has been heard or filed, will be denied if the appellant is otherwise entitled to be heard. Goldschmidt v. Goldschmidt, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 184.

Where an appeal is taken under § 2381, New York Code of Civil Procedure, from an order confirming an award and a judgment thereon, it is improper to depose and serve the case; but the appeal is to be heard on such papers as were before the court when the judgment or order was made. Poole v. Johnston, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 215.

A party cannot review the adverse opinions of a judge unless he makes a bill of exceptions, or a case for the purpose, and moves upon it for a new trial. Dickerson v. Cook, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 324.

In 2 Rumsey's Practice, 386, it is said: "There is no difference in practice between a case, a case and exceptions, or a case containing exceptions, in regard to the preparation and service. The real distinction between them is as to the purpose for which they can be used, and what should be inserted in them. Where a party desires to review the facts after a trial by the court or a referee, or upon motion for a new trial after a verdict, he must prepare a case which shall contain all the material evidence upon the trial; but where he desires to review exceptions taken during the trial, he must prepare a case and exceptions, or a case containing exceptions."

In Kansas, there are two methods of bringing up a civil case for review: upon a case made; and upon a transcript. In no other way can the appellate jurisdiction of the court to review such cases be invoked or exercised. The case may be briefer than a transcript; in fact it was mainly devised for the purpose of abridging the record and lessening the expense of review. Neiswender v. James, 41 Kan. 463. See Kingman, etc., R. Co. v. Quinn, 45 Kan. 477.

The office of a statement on appeal, as provided by statute in California, is to bring into the record those orders and rulings, together with the facts necessary to explain them, which are made in other stages of the proceedings in the case, not during the progress of the trial, and not contained in the judgment roll. Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 107; De Johnson v. Sepulveda, 5 Cal. 149. Compare Richey v. Ford, 2 Oregon 201.

Where a party desires to have interlocutory orders reviewed on appeal, such orders should be embodied in the statement on appeal. Abbott v. Douglass, 28 Cal. 295.

In California, non-appealable orders can only be reviewed by means of the statement on appeal from the final judgment. Gates v. Walker, 35 Cal. 289; Stone v. Stone, 17 Cal. 513.

Where questions of law alone are sought to be reviewed on appeal, and a statement of facts is necessary to their explanation, a statement on appeal, rather than a motion for a new trial and statement thereon, is the appropriate mode of procedure. Treadwell v. Davis, 34 Cal. 601; 94 Am. Dec. 770.

A party who does not wish to raise any question as to the sufficiency of evidence, on an appeal from an order granting or refusing a new trial, but only desires to have the rulings on questions of law arising in the progress of the trial reviewed, may introduce such rulings, with sufficient evidence to point them, into his statement on appeal; or may make a bill of exceptions as he proceeds, and thus have them reviewed on appeal from the judgment. Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 107.

But when an appeal is had directly from an appealable order, made on affidavits, the statement on appeal is not necessary. Stone v. Stone, 17 Cal. 513.

III. BY WHOM AND WHEN MADE AND SERVED.—A case is made or prepared in the first instance by the party intending to appeal,¹ and this must be done and the case served upon the opposite party within the time prescribed by statute, or by a rule or order of the court in which the cause was tried.² Generally, the

A stipulation that a statement "may be used on the motion for a new trial in this cause and also on appeal," allows it to be used on appeal from the judgment, as well as on an appeal from the decision on the motion. Hastings v. Halleck, 13 Cal. 203.

Where there is no controversy as to any material fact, and the action of the court below is sought to be reviewed on questions of law alone, a statement on appeal is not only a proper method, but is often the most convenient, expeditious and economical mode of bringing the alleged errors before the appellate court. Treadwell v. Davis, 34 Cal. 601; 94 Am. Dec. 770. See Hutton v. Reed, 25 Cal. 478; Estate of Boyd, 25 Cal. 511; Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 107. But this decision was afterwards overruled in Reed v. Bernal, 40 Cal. 628.

In Montana R. Co. v. Warren, 137 U. S. 348, it was held that as the statement on appeal was authorized by the Montana statutes as a method of presenting questions to the supreme court, such statement was sufficient to enable the Supreme Court of the United States, on error to the territorial court, to review the rulings of the trial court.

2. Buckley v. Althorf, 86 Cal. 643; McIntyre v. Willis, 20 Cal. 177; Hege-man v. Cantrell, 50 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 188. See also Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Koons, 26 Kan. 215, where it was held that if not made within such time, and if no extension has been granted, the court is powerless to act.

If no proceedings are taken for settlement, but the appellant, without notice to the other party, files with the appeal papers a certified copy of the judge's minutes of the evidence taken on the trial, such copy cannot be treated as a case made under the statute. Wright v. Dudley, 8 Mich. 74.

In Weeks v. Medler, 18 Kan. 425, it was held that where there was no notice to or suggestion of amendments, or appearance by the opposite party before the settling and signing by the trial judge, the case made is improperly settled and presents no questions for review to the supreme court.

A statute allowing three months after trial, for the making of a case, will be construed to allow three months from the time when the decree is made. Wright v. Dudley, 8 Mich. 74.

The provision of the Minnesota statute, for the preparation of a case within five days after trial by the court or referee, contemplates that the case shall be continued or considered pending until the filing of the decision. Irvine v. Myers, 6 Minn. 558.

In Farlin v. Sook, 26 Kan. 397, the following facts appeared: The court allowed plaintiff sixty days in which to make and serve a case upon the defendant, ordering at the same time that the defendant should be allowed twenty days after service to make amendments. The attorney for the plaintiff made a case and on the fifty-ninth day served it upon defendant, taking from him a written acknowledgment of the service, and agreeing to hand the case to his attorney within ten days. Four days afterwards he served the case upon the attorney for the defendant, taking from him also an acknowledgment of the service. The service upon the attorney being made after the expiration of the time prescribed, he, not having been informed that the case had before been served upon his client, believed it to be a nullity, and therefore suggested no amendments, and allowed it to be settled and signed by the judge without objection. Upon the case being brought to the supreme court, the defendant's attorney moved to dismiss it on the ground that it had not been properly made; whereupon the plaintiff's attorney introduced in evidence the separate paper containing the acknowledgment of the defendant himself that the service had been made within the prescribed time; and it was held that while the conduct of the plaintiff's attorney was not commendable in obtaining the advantage of having the case settled, etc., without any suggestions from the defendant's attorney, yet the case was valid and the motion to dismiss was overruled.

judge, in his discretion, may extend the time for making and serving a case, if the application for such extension is made before the expiration of the time originally fixed.¹

findings and not from the entry of judgment. And the amendment of the judgment as to costs does not waive the right to appeal from the errors of the judgment, or give additional time to file a case. Hood v. Hood, 1 Monthly L. Bul. 85.

In case of trial by jury, the ten days begin to run from the entry of judgment, not from the verdict. And if a judgment is amended, from the date of such amendment. Rafferty v. Byrnes, 2 Monthly L. Bul. 56.

Under the New York Code Proc., § 268, the service of a copy of the referee's report, and notice of filing, did not limit the time to serve a case. The ten days allowed for that purpose did not begin to run until the entry of the judgment and the notice thereof. And this practice was not changed by § 994 Code Civ. Proc. French v. Powers, 80 N. Y. 146.

So where the defendant served copies of an order dismissing a complaint, and of the judgment, but failed to serve a copy of the decision of the court, and the plaintiff appealed within thirty days, it was held error to dismiss the appeal because of failure to make and serve a case, since exceptions could be taken and the case made at any time within ten days after service of a copy of the decision, and written notice of the entry of judgment thereon, and such copy not having been served, the time for making the case had not expired. Schwarz v. Wever, 103 N. Y. 658.

If a party fails to make and serve a proposed case, within the time limited by the court on granting an extension of time, such failure is cured by subsequently allowing and settling the case. Volmer v. Stagerman, 25 Minn. 234.

The adverse party may waive an objection that the proposed case was served upon his attorneys too late, by receiving and admitting "due service" through such attorneys. State v. Baxter, 38 Minn. 137.

1. In Kansas, the district judge has no power to extend the time for making a case, after the time fixed by the statute and by the order of the court and judge has once elapsed. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Koons, 26 Kan. 215; Cohen v. Trowbridge, 6 Kan. 388;

Hodgden v. Comrs., 10 Kan. 637; Couse v. Phelps, 11 Kan. 455; R. Co. v. Fort Scott, 15 Kan. 478; R. Co. v. Wingfield, 16 Kan. 217; Weeks v. Medler, 18 Kan. 425; Shumaker v. O'Brien, 19 Kan. 476; Hunt v. Spencer, 20 Kan. 128; Ingersoll v. Yates, 21 Kan. 91; Dodd v. Abram, 27 Kan. 69; Dyal v. Topeka, 35 Kan. 63; Security Investment Co. v. Love, 43 Kan. 157. But as the statute does not prescribe the time within which the judge shall settle and sign the same, he has the power, after a case made and the amendments are properly served within the time fixed by the order of the court, to delay the settling and signing of the same, upon notice to the parties interested, for reasonable time to incorporate in the case made, omitted testimony in order that the case made, when finally signed, may in all matters speak the truth. Hammerslough v. Hackett, 30 Kan. 57; Sloan v. Beebe, 24 Kan. 347; Building Assoc. v. Beebe, 24 Kan. 363; Meixell v. Kirkpatrick, 25 Kan. 13; Pierce v. Myers, 28 Kan. 364; Douglass v. Parker, 32 Kan. 593; Gerlach v. Skinner, 34 Kan. 89.

The attorneys cannot, by agreement, extend the time for making a case, without an order from the court trying the cause. Limerick v. Haun, 44 Kan. 696.

A judge cannot make judicial orders while absent from his district. Therefore an order by which the time for serving and settling a case made is extended, is a nullity, and the case not having been settled during the time originally prescribed, the petition in error was dismissed. Dunn v. Travis, 45 Kan. 541.

The court may grant further time to prepare a case on appeal where it appears that, through mistake, a copy of the counter-case has been sent to the counsel of one defendant, supposing him also to be counsel for the other defendant. Russell v. Koonce, 104 N. Car. 237.

The rule that the time for making and serving a case cannot be extended after the time originally prescribed has elapsed, does not seem to apply in New York. "Where the time to make and serve a case has expired, the court,

IV. CONTENTS.—A case or statement on appeal, from a judgment rendered after trial of an issue of fact, or upon the report of a referee, must contain the facts found and the conclusions of law arrived at,¹ and the exceptions taken by the party upon good cause shown, may, in its discretion, and upon such terms as justice requires, permit the party to serve a case nunc pro tunc." Bailey's New Trial and Appeal, citing New York Code Civ. Proc., § 783; Strong v. Hardenburgh, 25 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 438. See Sheldon v. Wood, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 18. Compare Toll v. Thomas, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 324; Haase v. New York Cent. R. Co., 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 430.

The same practice seems to prevail in Minnesota. See Volmer v. Stagerman, 25 Minn. 234, where it was held that if, after the expiration of the time limited by statute, where no judgment has been entered, leave to make a case is granted by the court, such leave operates as an extension.

Where only eight days were left in which to prepare and present a case for settlement, after receiving the stenographer's transcript, and the attorney's filed affidavits as to the impossibility of making a case within that time, and moved the court to allow an extension, which was denied, it was held, upon petition for mandamus to the judge, that it was the duty of the respondent to settle the case and to grant an extension of time for that purpose; that while it would have been the better practice to have applied to the court for an extension before the time fixed for settling the case had expired, still such expiration would not justify a refusal under the circumstances of the case. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Chambers (Mich. 1891), 50 N. W. Rep. 741. See Cameron v. Calkins, 43 Mich. 191; Gram v. Wasey, 45 Mich. 223; Tilden v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 44 Mich. 515.

By the New York General Rule of Practice, 32, it is provided that whenever it shall be necessary to make a case, it shall be made and served within ten days after the trial; or within ten days after notice of the decision of a motion for a new trial, if such motion be made and be not decided at the time of trial, if the trial were before a jury. Under this rule it is held that leave to make a case more than a year after trial cannot be granted as a matter of right. Martin v. Platt, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 42.

If the time within which an appellant may serve notice of an appeal has expired, the time for making and serving a case cannot be extended. Estate of Cluff, 11 Civ. Proc. Rep. (N. Y.) 338.

In De Lamater v. Havens, 5 Dem. (N. Y.) 53, it is held that the surrogate court has no power to disregard, relax or extend the operation of any of the general rules of practice prescribed by the supreme court for the surrogate's government. And, therefore, further time to serve a case on appeal cannot be granted after the period within which such service may be made has fully elapsed.

An agreement that "plaintiff shall have thirty days in which to file his case and defendant thirty days thereafter," allows the defendant thirty days from the time when the case is served by the appellant. Mitchell v. Haggard, 105 N. Car. 173.

Under California Code Civ. Proc., § 1054, which authorizes the court to extend the time for not more than thirty days without the consent of the other party, it is held that where the latter agrees to one extension beyond the thirty days, such consent does not empower a judge to grant another extension without again obtaining permission from the adverse party.

If the case of the appellant only is sent up to the supreme court, but it appears that such case was served on the appellee within the time prescribed and that he offered no amendments, it will be considered a case on appeal. Booth v. Ratcliffe, 107 N. Car. 106. See State v. Carlton, 107 N. Car. 956. But if the case does not show that it has been served on the appellee or his counsel, the supreme court will not consider it. Peebles v. Brasswell, 107 N. Car. 68.

The case must state every question raised by the appellant. Rodman v. Harvey, 102 N. Car. 1; Probasco v. Cook, 39 Mich. 714.

When there is but one question sought to be presented to the supreme court for review by a case made, the case itself or the certificate of the judge must show what that question is. Morgan v. Chapple, 10 Kan. 216; Shumaker v. O'Brien, 19 Kan. 478.

The case is not in a condition for review, where the special findings are only partial and incomplete without any general finding of facts; all the material facts established should appear in the finding. Adams v. Champion, 31 Mich. 233; Zeller v. Harris, 23 Mich. 286.

A mere recital showing the facts of a case at law, the nature of the judgment, and the fact that a party excepted to it, presents no question for the supreme court, if there are no findings and the judgment is good in form. Chatterton v. Parrott, 46 Mich. 432; Hedges v. Hibbard, 46 Mich. 551.

The decision of a judge, or the report of a referee, for the purpose of authorizing a judgment or forming a part of the record, need only state in general terms what the judgment is to be; but for the purpose of reviewing the judgment, the facts found and the conclusions of law must be stated separately, and must be contained in a case. The court of appeals cannot look for them elsewhere, and will dismiss the appeal on motion; or, if the cause is brought on for argument, will affirm the judgment, whatever may appear in the decision of the court or the report of the referee. Otis v. Spencer, 16 N. Y. 610.

If the findings contained in the case, as settled by the referee, differ from those contained in his report, the former will be deemed correct, as it is upon the case that exceptions stand. Schwinger v. Raymond, 83 N. Y. 192; 38 Am. Rep. 415. See Tompkins v. Lee, 59 N. Y. 662.

Where there appeared at the end of a settled case a supplemental statement of suggested assignments of error, which, though brought to the notice of the court, were not made a part of the case, the appellate court could not consider it. Rodman v. Harvey, 102 N. Car. 1.

The court of appeals cannot give effect to a stipulation of counsel by which it is to be understood that an exception follows every objection made; and cannot review on appeal rulings to which no exceptions appear in the case. Briggs v. Waldron, 83 N. Y. 582. See Carey v. Carey, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 270.

An exception taken during the trial, by a party who finally succeeded, is improperly incorporated in the case unless its insertion can be justified by the existence of a special reason therefor. Dabney v. Stevens, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 39. See Clark v. House, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 624; Beach v. Cooke, 28 N. Y. 568; 86 Am. Dec. 260.

In Rodman v. Harvey, 102 N. Car. 1, it is said: "Only the facts necessary to an intelligent understanding of the questions of law intended to be presented, should be stated in the proper connection. Of course 'the written instructions, signed by the judge, and written requests for instructions, signed by the counsel, and the written exceptions, shall be deemed conclusive as to what such instructions, requests and exceptions were,' because the statute so declares; and these, when they exist, should be made a part of the case settled. They constitute certain evidence of what they embrace. The statement of the case settled should state fairly every question made by the appellant at the proper time."

The report of a referee, and the exceptions, are necessarily separate instruments originally; but the case is to be single and is to be made up as though the findings and exceptions were had on the trial of the cause, the exceptions in their proper order following the findings. Rogers v. Beard, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 282.

If the record in ejectment shows no findings of facts, nor exceptions to the rulings of the judge; but merely recites that the parties proved certain things, and that the judge decided for the plaintiff, and rendered judgment in his favor that he recover of defendant the proceedings had upon the trial below as is material to the questions raised by the exceptions.¹

See also Missouri, etc., Transp. Co. v. Palmer, 19 Kan. 471, where it was said that a case made must be complete and perfect when settled and signed by the judge. To be available, on review in error in the supreme court, the original case made must be attached to, and filed with, the petition in error; and it must contain a statement of so much of the proceedings and evidence or other matters of the lower court as may be necessary to present the errors complained of.

Evidence.—In Muscott v. Hanna, 26 Kan. 770, the case made contained a statement, to the effect that certain witnesses were sworn as witnesses in behalf of the plaintiff, relative to the value of the services of plaintiff in certain specified actions; and gave testimony tending to prove that such services were worth from twenty to thirty-five dollars; then followed another statement that "the defendant here rested his defense, and the evidence on both sides was here closed, and the foregoing is all the evidence given by both parties on the trial of this action in the district court." It was held that such a case showed that it sufficiently contained the evidence introduced on the trial. In delivering the opinion, Horton, C. J., said: "After a case made is settled and signed by the judge, it is no longer the mere writing or language of counsel, but is the record made by the judge. The statute permits it to contain so much of the proceedings and evidence as may be necessary to present the errors complained of, and where several witnesses testified as to the value of services, and there is no contradictory evidence, it would seem unnecessary to set forth in detail all their testimony, but a general statement as to its purport will be sufficient when there is no error alleged concerning its admission. This course, it seems, was adopted in this case, and as the substance of such testimony was set forth, we do not think it contradicts the statement in the record that all the testimony is embraced therein."
